THAT the Southeast and Southwest, which were the first sections of the country to feel the present financial storm, and which have been harder hit perhaps than any other locality by falling prices, offer striking encouragement to the motion picture exhibitors and producers who feel panic stricken about conditions in the industry, is the view of T. F. Flanagan of the sales department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation who has just returned from a two months' trip through eleven Southern states. The actual facts are that in the larger cities admissions have not suffered in the slightest, he declares, while in the smaller towns which are largely dependent on the cotton crop or other agricultural activities, or on the payroll of a single industry, such as lumber mills, gross receipts have fallen off, even to the extent in some places of 33 1-3 per cent.

But this condition is far from the panic that a few misguided extremists are preaching, Mr. Flanagan states. Even under the worst conditions, the business that exhibitors are doing again illustrates the well-demonstrated fact that amusements are the last to suffer. The black side of the picture shows many of these small town exhibitors who are playing fewer nights each week, and in isolated instances theatres that have entirely closed down, it is stated.

But the bright side of it shows many exhibitors who closed down on the first impulse and who have now reopened and who are doing good business. It shows the vast majority of exhibitors finding a way to make their theatres pay in spite of business depression.

Release Date Is Advanced

"Buried Treasure" to Be Released Shortly, Following B'way Premiere

SO numerous have been the inquiries from exhibitors regarding the next Marion Davies Paramount picture, since the success in New York and throughout the country of "The Restless Sex," that the release date of "Buried Treasure," Miss Davies' newest Cosmopolitan production has been advanced, announces a statement from Famous Players-Lasky headquarters. The public in New York, therefore, will soon view "Buried Treasure" at a Broadway premiere and shortly thereafter it will be given general release throughout the country.

"Buried Treasure" is a story of the psychic; based upon re-incarnation. Of it Hereward Carrington, the psychic authority, writes: "In the beautiful picture, 'Buried Treasure,' so graphically and charmingly played by Miss Marion Davies, we see exemplified before our eyes the power of the sub-conscious mind in storing up every impression consciously or unconsciously noted."

Letters of comment from exhibitors and from fans in all parts of the country have been coming to the Cosmopolitan studio, declares the Paramount statement, commenting on the success in every part of the country of "The Restless Sex" which broke all previous records at the Criterion theatre and which is already playing repeat bookings in many of the larger Eastern and Western cities.

"Buried Treasure" was begun in New York last spring and completed in California during the summer at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars, it is said. Periods of time from the Stone Age to the present are comprehensively revealed largely by the costumes of Marion Davies imported for the occasion. George D. Baker directed "Buried Treasure"

Extends the "Edgar" Series

Goldwyn Arranges With Tarkington for Additional "Edgar" Pictures

THE many exhibitors throughout the country who have been booking Booth Tarkington's series of two-reel comedies of boy life, under the collective title of "The Emotions and Adventures of Edgar Pomeroy," will be interested in Goldwyn's announcement that the series, originally limited to twelve pictures, has been extended. The success of these pictures has been so great with the public and the demand for them from exhibitors so insistent that Goldwyn induced Mr. Tarkington to increase the number of scenarios, declares a statement from the Goldwyn headquarters.

The twelfth "Edgar" has been completed at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City, Cal., and the ninth, called "Edgar's Little Saw," is now in all twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges where exhibitors can see it screened.

"Edgar's Little Saw" is said to be one of the cleverest and funniest of the series of "Edgars." Mr. and Mrs. Pomeroy give Edgar a tool chest for Christmas and strange depredations are made upon the household furniture, the cat, hats, dolls and other articles. Edgar, of course, gets the blame for all this mischief until Iris, the cook, discovers his younger brother is the culprit.

The new "Edgar" Comedies, the scenarios for part of which have already been written by Mr. Tarkington and are now at the Goldwyn studios, will be interpreted by the same cast of child actors assembled for the first dozen. Johnny Jones, who recently observed his twelfth birthday, continues as leading man and little Lucille Ricksen as leading lady. They are without question the most widely known child actors in the world, declares Goldwyn, and the cleverness of their acting in the "Edgars" deserves all the popularity they have won. Buddy Messenger, Marshall Ricksen, the Trebaol children, and most of the grown-ups seen in the comedies already made will continue to appear in the new ones.

Has Proved a Big Winner

"While New York Sleeps" Reported by Wm. Fox to Be in Great Demand

"THE glowing reports that continue to pour into the Fox offices indicate that the special melodramatic screen production of night life in the metropolis, 'While New York Sleeps,' is destined to take its place in the motion picture hall of fame as one of the truly great film of a decade," announces a statement from the home office of the William Fox Film Corporation.

"Since its auspicious opening at the Lyric theatre in New York last August—at which time it created a genuine sensation—this remarkable picture has continued to prove a big winner wherever shown, in many cases breaking all previous box office records, and with extended engagements frequently in evidence," continues the statement.

The tremendous exploitation possibilities in both the title and the theme of the picture have appealed at once to exhibitors. They have found it an easy matter to couple the title with straight advertising stories of live interest, which have been readily accepted by newspaper editors. They have also been very successful in tieing up with local merchants through their daily advertisements in the papers. In fact, "While New York Sleeps" provides the keen showman with any amount of material that can be used to put over his showing.

The Fox offices announce that the laboratories have just completed new sets of prints to be shipped to the exchanges to handle the enormous demand for this master melodrama. This was done to avoid any change of dates in bookings on account of the fact that many theatres, after the first showing, have sought extended engagements—and in order to accommodate them some other house would have to be set back in the absence of additional prints.

In certain quarters there appears to have been an impression that "While New York Sleeps" is a serial, instead of an eight-reel super-special melodrama told in three stories, portraying life among the upper, middle and lower classes of New York. Each story is complete in itself.

Douglas Doty has been added to the scenario staff of Supervising Director Elmer Harris at the Realart Studio in Los Angeles. Mr. Doty was editor of the Book Department of the Century Publishing Company for ten years. He was also editor of the Century Magazine for five years and editor of the Cosmopolitan Magazine for two years. He was also connected with the House of Harper before entering films.

"Velvet Fingers"

(Seitz-Pathe Serial - 15 Episodes)

WELL! George B. Seitz is at it again. The champion long distance and short dash serial writer, director, and actor has gotten off to an excellent start with "Velvet Fingers." The versatile impresario has only taken care of the direction and interpretation here leaving the story to Bertram Millhauser. It is the crook type of serial which means that the protagonist is skilful with the mask or dark lantern or jimmy or dynamite or velvet fingers. The picture is offered to the public as an Arsene Lupin serial with a Sherlock Holmes twist. And this looks like a first-rate definition. The plot is woven around a smooth second-story man, a gentlemanly Raffles, whose object is to collect jewels and valuables at the expense of the owners and engage in a battle of wits with a criminologist.

The first three episodes are very effective in planting Velvet as a very resourceful figure —a man who makes a complete goat out of his opponent. There is considerable suspense, as there should be with a serial. The picture gives evidence of packing quite a healthy wallop in the shape of snappy action. Mr Seitz has directed himself with caution. He uses good repression and makes quite a dandy in his Raffles garb. The goddess in the machine is played by Marguerite Courtot, while others in the cast are Harry Semels, Lucille Lawson and Jean Cuny. The picture is well staged and photographed and should prove to be a humdinger.

Posters: 1, 3, 6 sheet on each episode; 24 sheet for entire serial; banner; window card; herald for entire serial.

"DICE OF DESTINY"

(Hampton-Pathe)

H. B. Warner Puts "Punch" Into Strong Dramatic Story

H. B. WARNER has come through with another good picture in "Dice of Destiny." This production follows along the lines of the play which made Warner so popular a few years back, "Alias Jimmie Valentine," and is just as full of incident, suspense and human interest as the well known play.

The story which is from the pen of John Moroso opens with a bang, and develops to a strong climax, a very clear continuity connecting the two important links. There are spots, however, when the story "takes a drop," but these "spots" are so few and far between that they could be entirely eliminated without effecting the value of the picture.

The story's chief asset lies in the fact that many of its sequences are novel and hold strong sustaining interest. For instance, in the opening sequence one of the first scenes shows the star's legs as he approaches a working man who is eating his lunch. This man turns out to be a detective, being "planted" to watch Warner, who is just released from prison, that he may "get a line" on his future plans.

Warner "picks" him, however, and when opportunity presents itself, hands him a doped cigarette which the latter smokes, becomes sleepy and in this condition affords the crook a chance to relieve him of his badge. Proceeding to the home of a friend he finds that the latter has been killed and detectives in the act of arresting his daughter and another crook. The badge is flashed and in a most interesting series of events, Warner succeeds in extricating his friends. A rather novel introduction.

But it is Warner's splendid characterization of the crook which upholds the play and glues the spectator's eyes to the screen when he appears. In the dramatic moments he reaches his climaxes in a very effective manner and in the lighter scenes he is a real Romeo when the situations call for "a little love making."

Good judgment is used in the selection of the cast, every one of which is a type.—Length, 5 reels.—Frank Leonard.

"Dice of Destiny"

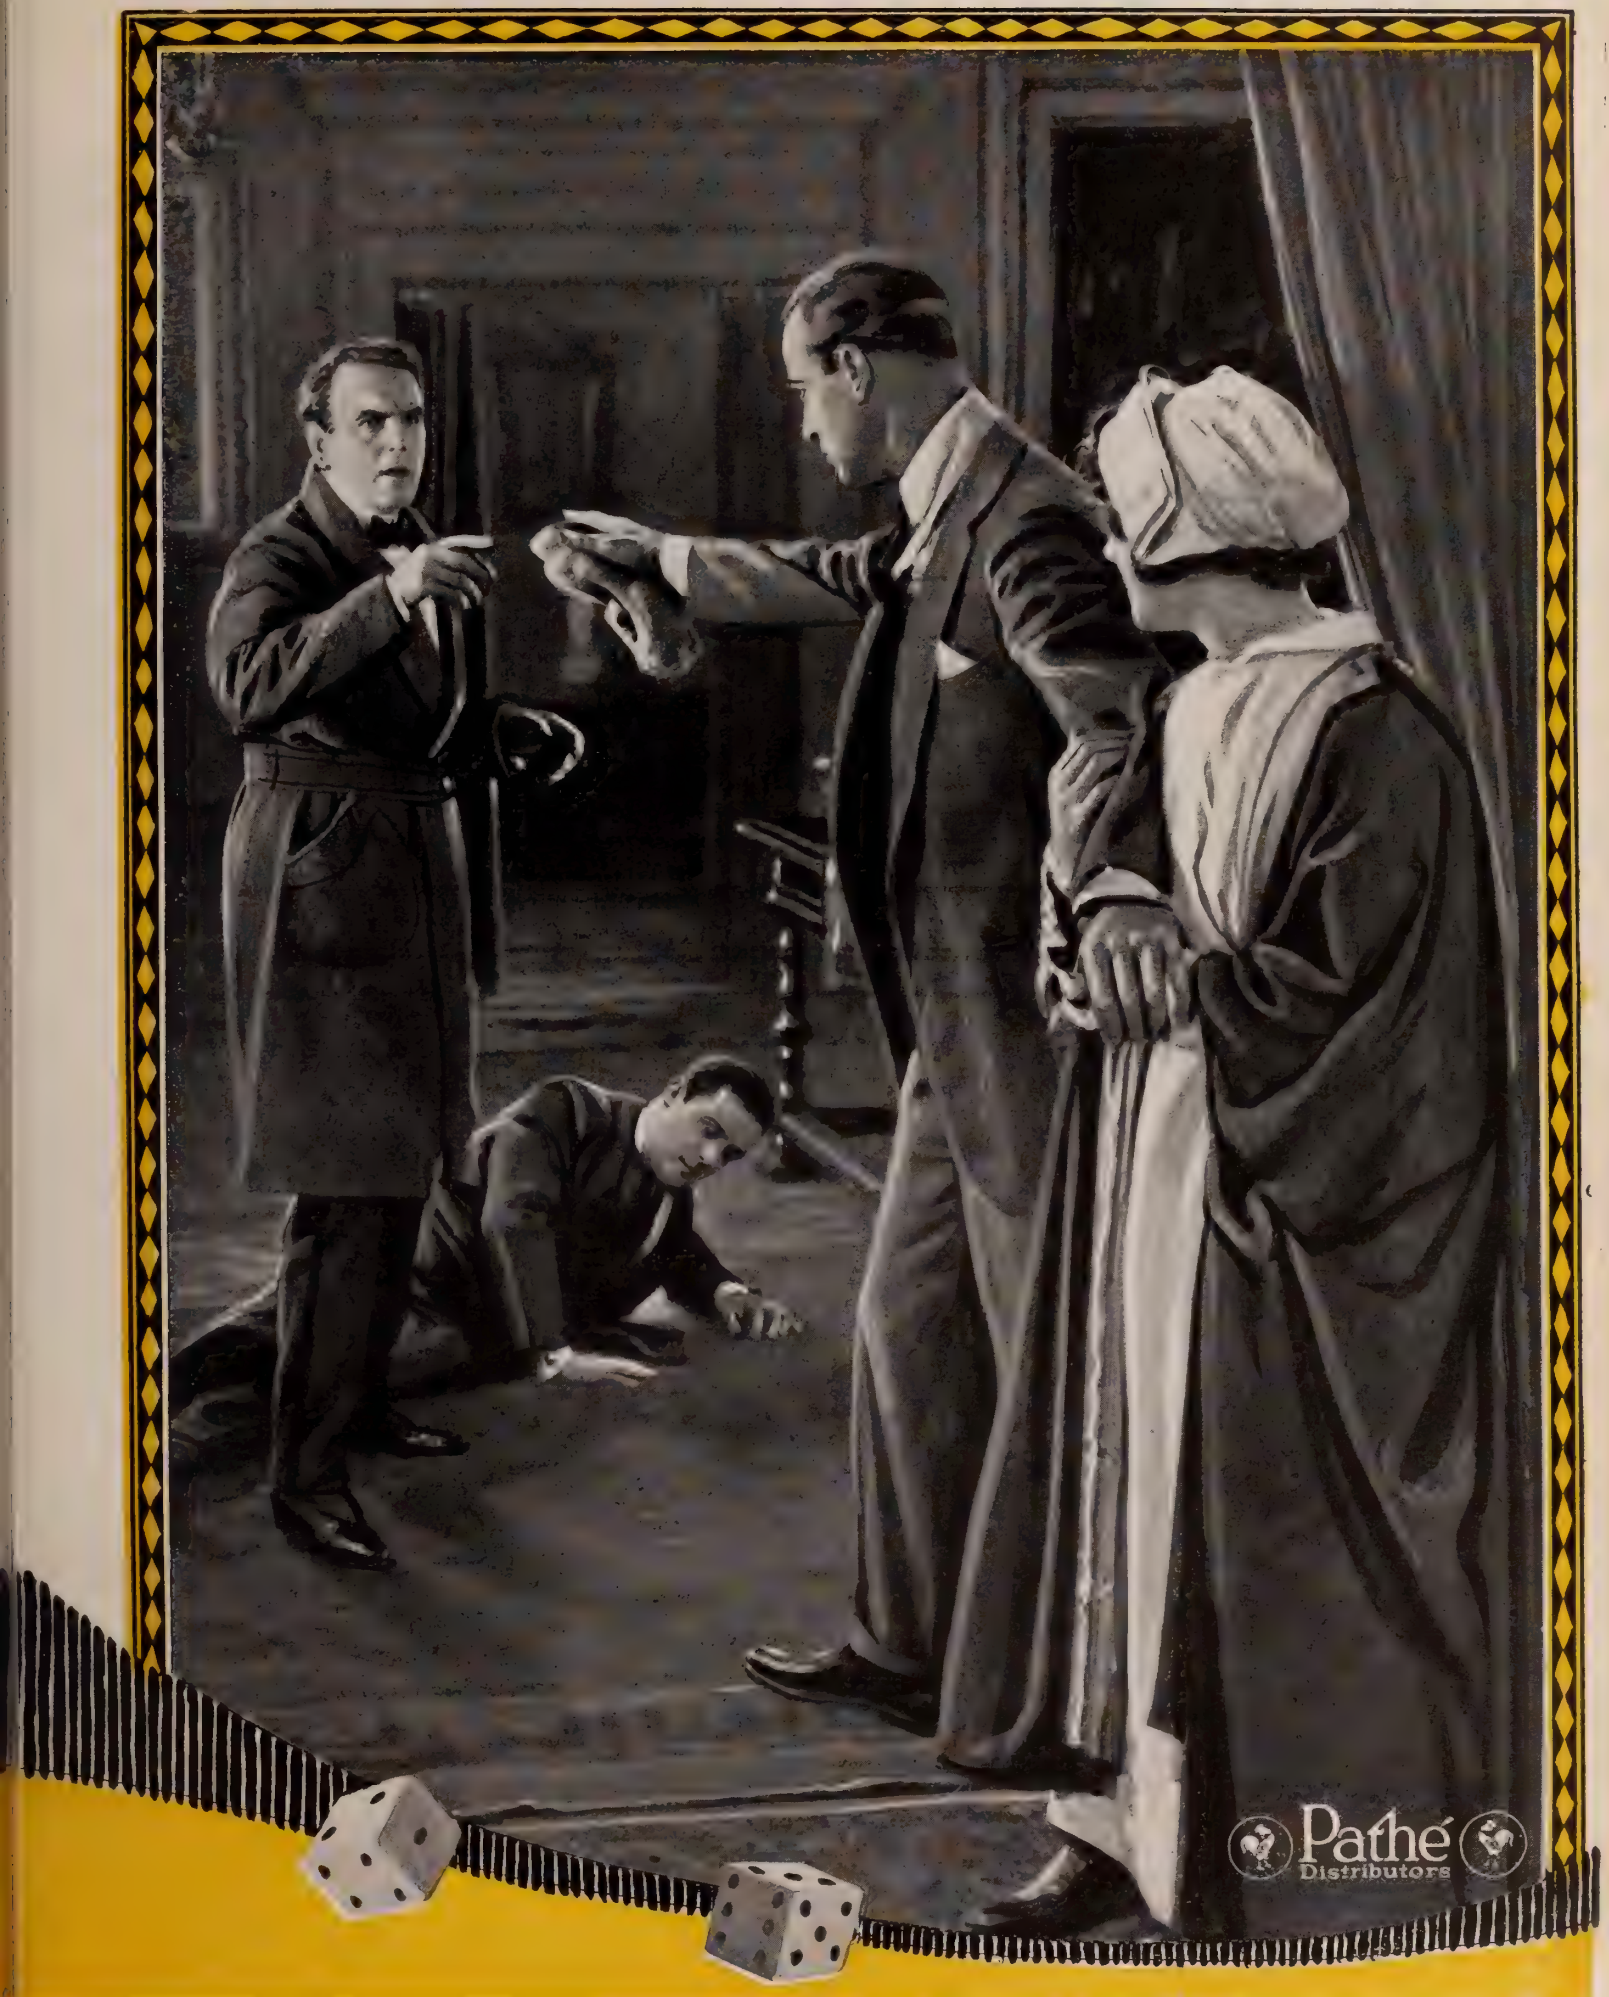
Reviewed by Robert C McElravy



One of the actors of the screen who seldom fails to impart a romantic glamor to the roles he plays is H. B Warner He screens exceptionally well and his lithe, active movements convey a certain intensity of feeling that might be missed with another actor in the same parts. In "Dice of Destiny," a Jesse D Hampton production, released by Pathe, Mr Warner plays the role of Jimmy Doyle, a gentleman crook of the "Raffles" type. The characterization is well drawn and kept true to form by quick, nervous gestures, suspicious glances and a constant apprehension of trouble from "fly cops."

The story deals almost exclusively with a gang of crooks, one of whom is a young girl, portrayed by Lillian Rich This girl, Nancy Preston, is the daughter of the gang leader, and a love affair between her and Jimmy is one of the strong features of the subject. The situations are tensely set forth and the interest carries from beginning to end There is no great emotional strength to the feature, but considering the general artificiality of this type of stories, it is decidedly more human than most of its kind The supporting cast numbers many excellent types

Who doesn't remember "Alias Jimmy Valentine," the play in which H. B. Warner scored his memorable success, and that played to such enormous business? "Dice of Destiny" is just such a play, full of human interest, punch and vigor.

"The Devil to Pay"

Engrossing Mystery Story Developed in Six-Part Brunton Subject, Released by Pathe

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy

One of the best mystery stories shown in some time has been developed in "The Devil to Pay," a Robert Brunton production, adapted from a novel by Frances Nimmo Greene. It loses not a moment in swinging into action, riveting the attention by a suggested hanging, with the wife waiting outside the prison for the body of her husband when the law has taken its course. Slowly the mystery surrounding the hanging, and the possible connection of one of the town's big bankers with the original crime, is brought into play. It is one of those stories which begin in the midst of tense situation and skilfully weaves backward and forward from the starting point until the mystery is finally solved. It has been expertly put together and reflects credit on all concerned.

The cast is finely balanced, with Roy Stewart as the calm, self-reliant prosecuting attorney; Robert McKim as the suspected banker, and Fritzi Brunette in one of the best roles she has had. The supporting cast is made up of experienced players, and the result is like the smooth, even performance of a competent stock company.

The scenes are laid in and about a prison, in a fine private home, in a restaurant and in a court room. The trial scenes have been carefully staged. The production is a fascinating one of its kind.

Mystery Drama With Well Sustained Suspense and Good Production

"THE DEVIL TO PAY"
Robert Brunton Prod.—Pathe

DIRECTOR	Ernest C. Warde
AUTHOR	Frances Nimmo Greene
SCENARIO BY	Jack Cunningham
CAMERAMAN	Arthur L. Todd
AS A WHOLE	A real "fan" type of picture with good mystery element and suspense well sustained
STORY	Some of its "intrikut" business not plausible but this doesn't matter; it plays its part just the same
DIRECTION	Develops his material toward good climax; brings things to rather hurried conclusion
PHOTOGRAPHY	All right
LIGHTINGS	Good
CAMERA WORK	Satisfactory
PLAYERS	Robert McKim, Roy Stewart and Frtzi Brunnette handle most important roles well; others all very good
EXTERIORS	Very few
INTERIORS	Adequate
DETAIL	All right
CHARACTER OF STORY	Mystery drama in which girl's fiance is proven crook while the girl believes him innocent
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION	About 5,800 feet

After watching Roy Stewart hounding Robert McKim until he proves him a crook in both "The Money Changers" and "The Devil to Pay" folks will begin to know just what kind of a story to expect when they see the two names announced in connection with a picture. There is a similarity in these two productions but where "The Money Changers" had it in action, "The Devil to Pay" has it in mystery.

The director has developed the plot coherently, yet the suspense is well sustained and the interest maintained until the end at which time things are brought to perhaps an abrupt conclusion and not altogether comprehensive solution. Nevertheless it suffices to bring the mystery to a solution even if they use the rather old-fashioned method of having the villain shoot himself.

The cast is a good one, each player being well suited to his respective part. Besides those mentioned Evelyn Selbie, George Fisher and others handles smaller roles adequately. The opening scenes are effective from a photographic standpoint. The scene is that of a gallows on which a hanging is taking place. The actual gallows is not seen, however. Merely the shadow is shown. This is rather a gruesome opening for a picture but it was probably intended for purposes of emphasis which certainly register.

Brent Warren, leading banker and politicion, commits a felony for which he sends George Roan to death. In some way, never explained to the spectator, Roan is brought back to life and from time to time Warren is haunted by the voice of Roan, usually over the telephone.

Cullen Grant, district attorney and former suitor of Dare Keeling, a wealthy girl now in love with Warren, secures evidence against Warren and orders his arrest. Dare maintains her confidence in Warren but Grant's further suspicion against Warren is aroused when Dare begs Warren to give her some of her money for which he is her trustee. Grant suspects that the money is for Warren.

Dare's brother Larry is against Warren but at the same time wants to preserve his sister's happiness. Larry becomes secretary to Warren and discovers papers which prove Warren's guilt. At the trial Warren is confident of a favorable verdict until Grant announces another witness. It is Roan, the supposedly dead man, who proves that Warren forced him to kill the man. Warren cheats the law by shooting himself as he attempts to get away.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Devil to Pay" is a typical "movie fan" type of story And as such should prove a good box office bet. It has well maintained suspense and should be played up from the mystery standpoint. Announce it as a story of a man who was hanged but later came back to testify against the man who sent him to the gallows.

The title has drawing power and can be used effectively with catchlines. Mention the names of Roy Stewart and Robert McKim and recall their joint work in "The Money Changers" if you happen to have played it and say that "The Devil to Pay" contains as much mystery as "The Money Changers" contained action. Use the line: "You can't get away with it if you have 'The Devil to Pay.' He'll get you sooner or later.'"

SYNOPSIS.

Brent Warren, a power in the financial and political circles of Hampton, sends Roan, his employe and accomplice in crime, to the gallows. A surgeon brings Roan back to life. Meanwhile Cullen Grant, the district attorney and ex-fiance of Warren's promised wife, gains criminal evidence against the banker and brings him to trial. The girl asks Grant, her trustee, for her money to help Warren, but the D. A. refuses. He uses Roan as his star witness convicts Warren, and wins the girl.

A mystery melodrama with a unique twist in the plot which not only lifts the picture out of the usual run of crook stories but will baffle the audience to the end. The letters and the mysterious telephone voice are extellent touches in keeping up the suspense and have been skilfully handled. "The Devil to Pay" is a splendid title suggestive enough to attract a wide variety of people, and the popular type of this picture will entertain any audience.

Cast—All star. The work of Roy Stewart, Fritzi Brunette and Robert McKim is very true to life. Joseph J. Dowling and Evelyn Selbie do wonderful bits of characterization and George Fisher is a very boyish and earnest brother.

Points of Appeal—Has interest, suspense, mystery mingled with romance and the novel idea of resuscitating the dead man and using him in the climax.

Photography and Lighting—Of the best throughout. The scenes of the mysterious stranger especially well done.

"THE DEVIL TO PAY"
(Brunton-Pathe)

Strong Mystery Story Carries Interest

"THE DEVIL TO PAY" is one of the best mystery dramas produced upon the screen in a long time. It has about everything necessary to excite, thrill and keep an audience pitched in a high key throughout, for the reason that its plot is unique and abounds in action from the time the opening scenes are thrown upon the screen to the last foot of film projected.

Although credit must be given to Frances Nimmo Greene, the author, for the clever way she has written the story, withholding the suspense to a remarkable degree until the finish, the director and cast should not be overlooked.

This happy combination has grasped situation after situation and painted them in most natural colors. In fact, at times it looked as though the actors had been playing their roles for some time before the scenes were taken.

The production is well mounted, Ernest C. Warde, the director, taking particular care in the selection of his exteriors.

The theme is based on the unique idea as to whether a man can be resuscitated after being officially hung and pronounced dead by state authorities.

As the story unfolds it discloses the life of a leading banker and political dictator of a small town who commits a crime and causes another to be sent to the gallows to cover up his guilt.

After his execution the man is resuscitated and like a ghost haunts his betrayer until the latter shoots himself. The climax is reached in a court-room scene which is highly dramatic.

Paramount Stars Lead in Competition

Wallace Reid, of the Paramount forces, is the most popular star with Chicago film fans. Thomas Meighan is a close second, and Gloria Swanson is second winner for popularity honors in the feminine division. The Chicago Tribune has just finished a popular star contest, and the above results have been made public.

Reid received more votes than any other star, male or female. He led the contest from the start. Thomas Meighan was running fast when Mae Tines, motion picture editor of the Tribune, suddenly decided to terminate the contest. Gloria Swanson, in the feminine division, ran only 69 votes behind Mary Pickford.

The Chicago Herald-Examiner is also conducting a popularity contest in connection with its star identity contest. At this writing, the Herald-Examiner is carrying an eight-column head announcing that Thomas Meighan has taken the lead from Wallace Reid.

Allan Dwan Announces Cast for New Film

Following his policy of choosing an evenly balanced cast rather than flaunting a "star," Allan Dwan has selected the players who will appear in "The Perfect Crime," his second Associated Producers' picture.

Monte Blue has been chosen to play the leading role, having been borrowed from Famous Players for the production. Jacqueline Logan, a former Follies girl, is entrusted with the leading feminine part; Stanton Heck is the villainous Thaine of the story and Hardee Kirkland will have a character role. The story requires very few important players and is one of those simple human tales which Mr. Dwan best enjoys making. Lyman Broening is photographing the production assisted by Gordon Pollock.

Adam's Circuit Books Hodkinson Releases

The Adams Theatre Circuit which controls a string of theatres in Iowa has booked practically all of the Hodkinson released production to play over their circuit. According to Joe Bloom, Hodkinson supervisor, the Adams people declared that Hodkinson's is the most consistent program on the market today and that they are always assured of a nice patronage whenever one of the Hodkinson subjects is shown in one of their houses.

Pioneer to Syndicate Story of Serial

Pioneer Film Corporation announces that in connection with its release of "The Mystery Mind," the serial starring J. Robert Pauline and written by Arthur B. Reeve, arrangements are in progress for the publication by one of the large newspaper syndicates of the story of the serial. Shortly after the publication of the story in the newspapers, the novel will be published by Grosset & Dunlap with illustrations taken from the scenes of the serial photoplay, it is stated.

Two More Educational Offices

Exchanges to Open in Albany and Salt Lake City

AFTER completing its own exchange system with twenty-seven offices in the principal distributing centers in the United States and at the six focal points in Canada, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week announced that it would immediately add two additional branches in order to care for the demand for its product.

One of these will be in Albany and located at 398 Broadway. It will care for the middle portion of the state as far south as Westchester county's northern limits and the territory below that of the Buffalo office. A considerable portion of this territory has not been developed for sales and an intensive campaign will mark its opening.

Although the last branch to open, Manager E. J. Drucker, of the Denver territory, has found the demand for Educationals so strong that he is opening a branch in Salt Lake City early in January. He has already made numerous bookings in Salt Lake, including showing of all of the comedies and most of the other product at the American theatre. A separate office in Salt Lake will afford better shipping facilities and will enable more continuous use of the same prints.

According to the home office every exchange is showing the effects of the year end drive just started, which is evidenced by the demand for additional prints on many subjects. Since each office is charged a certain amount against each print and therefore seeks to conduct their bookings with the least number possible for efficient service, this is said to be a certain indication of increasing business. Service is one of the chief points stressed by Educational to its exchanges and this point is being specially emphasized during the present drive.

A scene from "High and Dry," a Mermaid comedy featuring Jimmie Adams, released through Educational Exchanges

"With barely six months passed since the opening of our first office," says President E. W. Hammons, "it is quite pleasing to find that we now have to go considerably beyond our original schedule. The demand for Education product has exceeded our original estimate so greatly that we have had to establish these new branches. They deserve to be considered service stations. The demand for our pictures has grown so great that we do not consider our offices so much from the standpoint of sales as from that of service to the exhibitor. Yet that very point we are making the foundation of our success, for we are endeavoring to give the local manager a degree of cooperation that has not been known before in this field.

"With the opening of these two new offices we take third rank among all the motion picture organizations of the country in the number of our branches. We will continue to open them with every demand for service. We established this organization as specialists in the short subject field. We promised to give the utmost in exhibitor cooperation, and there is no limit to the extent to which we will go to meet every demand of the theatre managers."

Current Paramount Issues

Bill Hart and Enid Bennett Vehicles Are Released

WILLIAM S. HART'S newest production for Paramount, "The Testing Block," which is now meeting with great favor in many of the largest first-run houses in the country, was released December 26, as was Enid Bennett's vehicle, "Silk Hosiery," a Thomas H. Ince production.

In "The Testing Block," Hart has an opportunity of displaying not only his skill as a rider, fighter and actor, but in portraying a character which is essentially human. As Sierra Bill he is said to "get right under the skin" of his audience, rousing the spectators to a high pitch of enthusiasm, especially when he fights a half dozen of his own gang single-handed; and then brings them to the point of tears when he strives desperately to save the life of his baby, lying at the point of death in his lonely cabin.

A distinctive feature of the film is its revival of the old song, "Darling Nelly Gray," which was written in 1856 and enjoyed great popularity for many years thereafter. first-class villain, and Florence In the story this song is played on a violin by a young girl who is a member of a nomadic company of actors wandering through Californit in the old days, and it is under most unusual circumstances that the bandit, Sierra Bill, meets and falls in love with her. So strong is this incident that the song has been republished and is being used most successfully in the exploitation of the picture.

The story of "The Testing Block" was written by Mr. Hart himself and the picture was directed by Lambert Hillyer. The photography is by Joe August, A. S. C. Mr. Hart surrounded himself with a strong supporting cast, headed by Eva Novak as leading woman. This is Eva's first big part and she acquits herself with much credit. Gordon Russell makes a Carpenter, Ira McFadden and little Richard Headrick have the other important troles.

The Enid Bennett picture, "Silk Hosiery," from the studios of Thomas H. Ince, was written by Frank Dazey and directed by Fred Niblo. Besides containing a story of much interest and real dramatic value, the production has an added claim to popularity in its fashion show. One of the sets represents the "most ultra" of the many ultra-smart shops on Fifth avenue, New York. Here is a model throne, heavily draped in black velvet, on which many beautiful models appear in rapid succession, wearing one fascinating creation after another. It is declared to be one of the best "woman" pictures in many a day.

Stars in Five and Two-Reeler on Same Bill

Along with "The Saphead," the only feature film Buster Keaton ever made, exhibitors also have played a Keaton two-reeler. These exhibitors report phenomenal success with such a program, states Metro.

The owner of the Broadway theatre, Springfield, Mass., was the first to see the advantages in playing the Keaton and the William H. Crane feature along with a Keaton comic two-reeler. The success attained through a tremendous box office showing attracted the attention of other exhibitors, who also have seen fit to play "The Saphead" along with a short Keaton film.

At Loew's Stillman in New York, and again in Cleveland, "The Saphead" and "The Scarecrow" were teamed to furnish the entertainment for the week. In each instance the receipts were tremendous, declares a statement from the Metro headquarters.

"Great Moment" is New Title of Glyn Story

According to information received from the Coast, the title of the story Elinor Glyn is now working on for Gloria Swanson, originally called "The Sheltered Daughter," has been changed to "The Great Moment." Production of this picture for Paramount will be started as soon as Cecil B. DeMille completes his super-star production of "The Affairs of Anatol," which is now well under way at Hollywood. Sam Wood is said to be slated to be the director.

Branch Managers Confer

SIX of the branch representatives the W. W. Hodkinson organization of the Atlantic Division, who were in New York at Christmas time formed the basis of an informal meeting at the Hodkinson office this week. Those who attended were W. H. Dunbar, of Boston; H. E. Thompson, of Albany; Norman H. Moray, of New York; S. A. Galanty, of Washington; John R. Lynch, of Philadelphia, and J. G. Fater, of Charlotte.

Each of these has made a splendid record in his field. Mr. Dunbar and Mr. Thompson have been Hodkinson "stand-bys" for several years. Mr. Moray was formerly manager of the New York Exchange for Select. Mr. Galanty, who was salesman at the Hodkinson Washington branch, was promoted to Representative last summer. Mr. Lynch, who was previously with Pathe in Pennsylvania, took charge of the Hodkinson Philadelphia branch last June. Mr. Fater, formerly a "special" with Benjamin B. Hampton, later represented Hodkinson in Baltimore and was made Branch Representative at Charlotte, N. C., last fall.

The views of Mr. Galanty and Mr. Fater as to conditions in the South are interesting. Both say that business has been affected in spots only; that in the large towns and cities the maximum volume of motion picture attendance continues, and, while ehibitors are watching the signs, they find that apparently their business is a peculiar one which thrives at all times and under all conditions. In some of the small towns, where everything depends on the cotton market, there is some shrinkage. The big towns and cities are "packing them in."

Mr. Thompson and Mr. Dunbar report the same general state of affairs in New York state and in New England. Factory conditions have had no damaging effect.

Tourneur Picture Endorsed

Detroit Police Censor Writes Enthusiastic Letter of Praise

AMONG the remarkable endorsements of "The Last of the Mohicans," Maurice Tourneur's picturization of James Fenimore Cooper's Indian novel, received at the home office of Associated Producers is a letter from Royal A. Baker, Detroit Police Censor, who was so impressed with the production that he wrote the following to Edward A. Crane, Associated Producers' resident manager in Detroit.

"It is not with unexpected surprise that Maurice Tourneur has made the first motion picture classic, for it was merely by a hair's breadth that he failed in reaching this point in 'Treasure Island.'

"'The Last of the Mohicans' is decidedly a cinematographic achievement—not a small achievement, but a far reaching one. The wonderful characters created by Cooper, in probably America's greatest historical novel, have been by Maurice Tourneur so successfully and triumphantly portrayed, that the dreams of fiction have stepped out of the book in living, breathing human beings, with their trials, tribulations and romances.

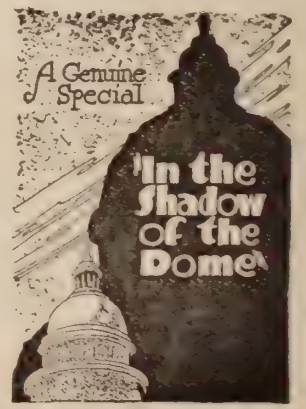
"The hero of the story is a savage, and never for a second are we allowed to forget that fact; because of this, never for a second is our intelligence shocked or insulted by the love that the savage portrays for the heroine of the story."

Bebe Daniels Spends Holidays in Texas

Bebe Daniels, Realartist, is spending the holidays in Dallas, Texas, her birthplace. Upon her return to the Realart studios she will start work on her next Realart picture, an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Nina Wilcox Putnam.

Vidor Predicts Drastic Changes for 1921

King Vidor, director of "The Jack-Knife Man," "The Sky Pilot" and other successful photoplays, believes that some drastic changes are due in the types of photoplays to be produced in 1921; he proffers conclusive reasons for believing that motion picture theatre patronage will be increased fully fifteen per cent, and says in substantiation of his predictions:



"The great number of churches and schools that are beginning to make photoplays a feature of their entertainments, and the serious consideration being given the cinema as a possible ethical force of wide scope, will cause many noted educators and men in public service to take an active interest in cinema production; these men, with their high ideals, will be the means of fostering photoplays which will present contemporaneous life in its cleanest, most useful, and, therefore, highest aspects.

"The World War and ensuing events have tended to make people more unselfish, those statesmen who love their country best by striving to make it best will realize the far-reaching power of the screen; and will advocate the making of film productions which stimulate the love of country, and tend to solidify national ideals."

Goldwyn Addresses Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts

Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has sent the following telegram to Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.:

"The movement to close motion picture theatres on Sunday fostered by your organization is a dangerous encroachment on the liberties of the people and is an effort to take away from them beneficial entertainment. I maintain that motion pictures have a tremendous influence for good on the public. I ask you in all fairness to reflect for a minute on the motion pictures which you have seen. Is it not a fact that right and virtue triumph in every photoplay, the basis of all dramas being that the sympathy of the audience must be aroused? And this can be done only by a sympathetic, that is a good character. A thousand moralists in a thousand lectures could not drive home their lessons with as much force as these film stories."

A David G. Fisher Production

This is a glimpse of what to expect in "Torchy's Double Triumph," the latest Torchy comedy released through Educational Exchanges, Inc.

THE crust of the earth was cracked for a quarter of a mile, buildings toppled and a volcano hurled rocks sky-high in the filming of a photodrama at Universal City, declares a statement from Universal Film's headquarters in New York.

By artificial means the convulsions of nature were reproduced to serve the dramatic needs of a screen story, it is stated.

The notable engineering feat was achieved by Norman Dawn, the Universal director, who wrote and is producing "The Fire Cat" as a starring vehicle for Edith Roberts.

To produce the earthquake Universal civil engineers cut a jagged slice in the earth a quarter of a mile long and ten feet deep. Under ten equally divided sections of one side of the slice were placed sliding platforms. The ten sliding platforms were then attached to ten powerful motor trucks by concealed cables. The ten trucks were lined up evenly, each attached to one sliding platform by just enough cable to be out of camera range. With motors running the trucks waited for the word from Norman Dawn.

As the camera clicked the trucks leaped forward, pulling the crack in the earth apart with an effect exactly like an earthquake fissure. At that moment a mountain top in the background roared and the sky was bombarded with rock which fell on the scene in a genuinely dangerous barrage.

Daredevil Aviator in International News

"Kismet" Takes West by Storm

SENSATIONAL news coming to Robertson-Cole this week regarding the country-wide sweep of "Kismet," the super-special production, starring Otis Skinner, came from the west Coast where the picture has now reached on its drive westward.

The first city in the Far West to show "Kismet" was Seattle, where it was chosen by Clemmer and James to open their new Winter Garden theatre. At the last word which Robertson-Cole received from its Seattle branch, "Kismet" was doing a good business at the new house, and about to be held over for a third week.

There has been a line up every night in front of the Winter Garden theatre, Seattle, according to word which has reached Robertson-Cole. Frequently people have been turned away. The business has continued strong despite the pre-holiday bill. "'Kismet' has been a success from start to finish and working victoriously against some very adverse conditions. Has done all we could ask," writes the Robertson-Cole branch manager at Seattle.

Robertson-Cole has received several wires of congratulation from Clemmer and James, managers of the Winter Garden theatre, in which these gentlemen expressed themselves as believing that "Kismet" has proved the ideal attraction for their opening.

Seattle House Does Big Business on Opening Night

Preparatory to the opening of "Kismet," in San Francisco, it was shown at the San Francisco Press Club by request of members. The invitation which was sent out by the Press Club contained a large head of Otis Skinner in his role of "Hajj, the beggar." It said: "Members: Look at this now. Here's a regular entertainment for you! Otis Skinner on the screen in 'Kismet.' Eastern critics have pronounced 'Kismet, which has not yet been released here, the greatest motion picture ever made. It is in 10 reels."

In Los Angeles, "Kismet" is to be shown at Tally's Broadway Theatre, early in January. Says the Los Angeles Examiner of this engagement: "One of the biggest announcements to be made from an exhibitor comes from T. L. Tally of Tally's Broadway, naming the first days in January as the opening of one of the greatest dramatic spectacles of the year, 'Kismet,' the Robertson-Cole super-feature, starring Otis Skinner. The entire moving picture work has been anticipating this stupendous production and, aside from having Otis Skinner, one of the greatest artists on the American stage, in the role of Hajj, the beggar, the character which he made famous on the speaking stage, it is authoritatively stated that close to $1,000,000 has been spent on the magnificent production."

Swinging back to the East, it is of interest to know the way E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Strand theatre, Buffalo, has been advertising "Kismet" under the head of "The event of the screen year." Mr. Weinberg writes a personally signed advertisement as follows: "After viewing this wonderful picture I did everything in my power to secure it for Strand theatre patrons. No picture I have ever seen is better produced, and certainly no artist has ever surpassed the work of Otis Skinner in the role of Hajj, the beggar. The settings, the cast, the photography, the direction and every detail of the production have been given the most exquisite care and attention. The whole achievement can be summed up in one word 'Perfection.'"

The fifth very large first run theatre in the city of New York to use "Kismet" was the Crotona theatre, which is situated in the Bronx. This house exploited "Kismet" in much the same way as the Audubon and the Academy of Music theatrees, which also are under the William Fox management."

Fashion Show in Fox Special

SELDOM does the eye of the camera catch anything so strikingly beautiful as the scenes in "Blind Wives," which depict the zero hour Lucile's (Lady Duff-Gordon), noted New York fashion shop, declares a statement from the Fox headquarters. The noted modiste's atelier is reproduced in a faithful detail, with a host of ladies and several men occupying the luxurious chairs, while at intervals two ebony-hued youths arrayed in Oriental splendor part the draperies, from which emerge one by one the human birds of paradise who preen themselves in dazzling array on the velvet carpeted steps and parade in stately grace down the aisles among the assembled guests. The gowns worn by the models represent the last work in the couturier's art and were made especially for this production. "The gowns are extreme and sensational, and will cause the eternal feminine who beholds them to gasp with astonishment at the prodigality of the producer who has staged so sumptuously this gorgeous display—which represents but one episode of "Blind Wives," declares William Fox.

Lucile's artisans worked day and night for over two weeks in executing the order for these gowns, as William Fox decided, after the picture was in work that instead of incorporating a mere fashion show, he would show the women who viewed the film not merely the existing styles, but all the advance tendencies, given with most accurate foresight obtainable from all the citadels of woman's fashions. Straightway began a search of the centres of Paris, London and the continent, with the result that all the early future holds in woman's eternal fascination of pretty gowns has been garnered here and shown in all its exquisite loveliness.

"Blind Wives," which was made from Edward Knoblock's celebrated play, "My Lady's Dress." It details the lives and hopes and heartaches of the humble toilers who have each contributed some component part to the costly habiliments with which milady is wont to seek the envy of her sisters and the admiration of men. It is not confined merely to the lives of the toilers at home, but wanders far into the snows of Siberia, where the trappers supplies the costly fur with which her gown of enchantment is trimmed. It shows the silk makers of France fulfilling their humble part in the scheme of milady's adornment. There are scenes in the slums of New York where the artificial flower that helps to beautify the gaudy dress is fashioned by weary, aching fingers and moistened by the tears of a little worker, the possessor but of one humble gown.

A glimpse into the life of the wealthy New York society woman who had a king's ransom tied up in the wealth of beautiful gowns locked away in her extensive wardrobe, yet had "nothing worth wearing" to the annual Horse Show, has been realized to the utmost; and there are a number of scenes of bewildering beauty, sidelights on the lives of the idle rich, that are astonishing and amazing.

The covers are printed in several colors and embody two striking drawings that are masterpieces in themselves. The type matter of the pages, which is condensed into small panels, explains the merits of the production to the exhibitor, and the accompanying pictures, in black and various tints are keyed to hook up with the copy.

"Blind Wives," by reason of its many scenes of luxury, fashion shows, etc., is a subject that lends itself to much in the way of beautiful pictorial advertising. This the artist has realized to the utmost, and the high quality of the offering is apparent in every detail of the publication.

Heralds Available for New Fox Serial

In addition to handsome and purposeful press book on the early episodes of the big serial, "Fantomas," William Fox is turning out a million four-page heralds to help to exhibitor put the new detective serial over with a bang!

"Face at Your Window" a Timely Theme

In the opinion of the Commissioner of Immigration stationed at Ellis Island, every immigrant to our land is entitled to a welcome commensurate with the dignity and ideals upon which this nation was founded; but when, as is so often the case, the immigrant is poor and ignorant, he is at once an easy prey to the insidious teachings of elements not always compatible with national security and safety.

"The Face at Your Window," Fox Film Corporation's melodramatic exposition of this very theme, is so accurate a gauge of our present influx of prospective citizens, and so graphic a portrayal of the dangers of a too rapid filling of our national melting pot, that it seems by its sheer timeliness and accurate foresight to have been made to sound a warning against radical agitators, declare William Fox officials.

That the mission of this moving story, outside of its undoubted entertainment value, is being taken to heart by the masses confronted with this great national problem, is arrested by the singularly strong demand by exhibitors all over the country for this gripping photo-drama.

Exploitation Aids for "Movie Mad" Ready

Predicting that it will break all records for two reel comedy exploitation, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has issued a number of suggestions to exhibitors on "Movie Mad," a two reel Christie Comedy released early in January. It tells the story of a young woman who comes to Los Angeles and falls in love with a comedian, much to the disgust of her sweetheart, who is an unromantic bank clerk.

Imitation contests, special teaser campaigns and a street stunt are included. In addition, Educational is supplying its usual full volume of attractive trade paper and newspaper advertising.

New Stoll Is Announced

"The Tavern Knight" Will Find Place on One-a-Week Schedule

"THE TAVERN KNIGHT," a love story of the Cromwellian period, when Puritan hordes were ravaging under direction of the Lord Protector, is now underlined for early release by the Stoll Film Corporation of America under its one-a-week schedule.

The title role is played by Eille Norwood, a widely known actor, while Cynthia is acted by Madge Stuart, one of the most beautiful women of the English speaking stage. Historical accuracy in the uttermost detail is said to have been secured by Director Maurice Elvey in this production. The huge battlemented castles and vaulted interiors of the Stuarts displayed in this picture are the real scenes in which the fighting and lovemaking depicted actually took place. The photography is by Paul Burger.

The play is a romance of a period when battles were fought with swords and pikes, and the coat of mail was still the most essential part of every gentleman's wardrobe.

The cast includes, aside from Mr. Norwood and Miss Stuart, Conway Booth, who plays Cromwell with intelligence; J. E. Wickens, Cecil Humphreys, Clifford Heatherly, Teddy Arundel, Lawrence Anderson, C. H. Croker-King and Lionel Scott.

Fox Special Moved Again

"Over the Hill" Now at Broadhurst Theatre; Continues to Big Business

THE announcement, "Moving Again," has come to be so much a part of the Broadway stay of "Over the Hill," the great Fox photoplay, that the question of its exact location may prove somewhat confusing—if not to New Yorkers, at least to visitors to New York.

"Over the Hill" has just made its fifth leap and landed this time from the Lyric into the Broadhurst theatre. The necessity for jumping an attraction about so much might be supposed to affect the stanchest spirit, but this is not true of "Over the Hill" or of its producer, William Fox. And the public remains loyal. The people are scrambling just as delightedly to get into the Broadhurst theatre this week to see "Over the Hill," as they did during the first week of the picture's showing in mid-September, declares William Fox.

Nobody can predict how many Broadway theatres will have housed "Over the Hill" before the public is satisfied. Thus far the film has five to its credit—the Astor, the Nora Bayes, the Central, the Lyric and now the Broadhurst. And it is the intention of the producer that so long as New York's supply of theatres holds out the people can have their "Over the Hill."

Three Realart Releases

Alice Brady, Constance Binney and Bebe Daniels for January

"SOMETHING DIFFERENT," featuring Constance Binney; "She Couldn't Help It," with Bebe Daniels and "Out of the Chorus," starring Alice Brady—these form a trio of pictures which Realart offers for January release under its Star Franchise.

The first is adapted from the novel "Calderon's Prisoner," by Alice Duer Miller; "She Couldn't Help It" is based on the successful book "In the Bishop's Carriage," by Miriam Michelson, while "Out of the Chorus" is an adaptation from "Voice of the Blood," a story by Harry Chandlee and William D. Laub.

The story "Something Different," is said to abound in entertaining and romantic situations.

Supporting Miss Binney are Crane Wilbur, one of the most popular actors on the screen; Ward Crane, who made a name for himself in "Soldiers of Fortune," "Luck of the Irish," "The Yellow Typhoon" and other pictures; Adolph Millar, William Riley Hatch, Gertrude Hillman and Lucy Fox. The picture was directed by R. William Neill.

"In the Bishop's Carriage" furnished the story for "She Couldn't Help It." Emory Johnson, who appeared in "The Devil's Bondswoman," "The Right to be Happy," "Tiger Lily," and other pictures, plays opposite Miss Daniels. Others in the strong supporting cast are Wade Boteler, Helen Raymond, Vera Lewis, Gertrude Short and Ruth Renick. The director is Maurice Campbell.

Playing opposite Miss Brady in "Out of the Chorus" is Vernon Steel, who appeared last season on Broadway with Ethel Barrymore in "Declasse" and later in "The Hole in the Wall." Others in the supporting cast are Charles Gerard, a screen actor of established reputation and a large following; Emily Fitzroy, Edith Stockton, Richard Carlyle, Constance Berry and Ben Probst. Herbert Blache directed the picture. The scenario is by Coolidge Streeter.

Boston Exhibitors See Nick Carter Series

Confirming predictions made some ago, the Nick Carter pictures, now being released by the Pioneer Film Corporation, have taken hold and are going "like wildfire," according to a special announcement made at Pioneer headquarters yesterday. At a private showing in one of the leading hotels in Boston a few days ago many exhibitors saw these two-reel features, which were made by the Broadwell Productions.

All the executives of the Pioneer Film Corporation, from President A. E. Lefcourt down, are confident that the series of Nick Carter pictures, fifteen in number, will register a new record for exhibitors, due to the fact that the name, Nick Carter, carries with it a magic attraction which will appeal to old and young.

Educational Doing Well in the Mid-West

Glowing reports of business in the Middle West were brought to the home office of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this week by Joseph Skirboll, who is interested in the Pittsburgh exchange, and Jack Skirboll, who has put the Cincinnati office over to the very top of the list, and by William Skirboll, who is associated with his brother, H. R., in the management of the Cleveland district, which has reached 100 per cent and over in the schedule set by the home office.

All of these reported that the demand for Educational comedies, single reels and specials was increasing and each one volunteered to go a considerable amount over their quotas.

Lytell's Vehicle Nears Finish

FINAL camera work on the elaborate set representing a London street in the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production, "A Message from Mars," starring Bert Lytell, that Metro specially constructed within the Eighth Coast Defense Command armory in the Bronx was completed Tuesday of last week. Directly the camera had clicked on the last scene, the entire force of workmen started striking the giant set that for the past four weeks has occasioned widespread interest and comment.

The scene on which the star and company have worked day and night ever since its completion under the personal direction of Maxwell Karger consisted of a full block of London dwelling houses in the district known as South Kensington. The scene was portrayed after dark with the street and sidewalks covered with snow, and all the life common to a London street scene was present from motor cars, hansom cabs, and push carts, to sandwich men, flower girls and the usual congregation of fashionably dressed folk on their way to and from the theatre.

The construction of the London street set within the armory in the Bronx was quite an innovation in the production of motion pictures in the East, and resulted from the problem presented to Metro by the necessity for a street scene in "A Message from Mars" that would be shown after dark with snow on the ground. Weather conditions and the need for working only at night made the selection of an out of door location impossible, so after duly deliberating the problem, Metro officials, at the suggestion of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, decided to build the set within an armory.

"A Message from Mars," which is now rapidly nearing completion, was adopted by Arthur Zellner and Arthur Maude from Richard Ganthoney's well known stage play in which Sir Charles Hawtrey starred. The cast supporting Bert Lytell, the star, includes Raye Dean, Alphonz Ethier, Maud Milton, Leonard Mudie and Gordon Ashe. Arthur Martinelli is photographing the production.

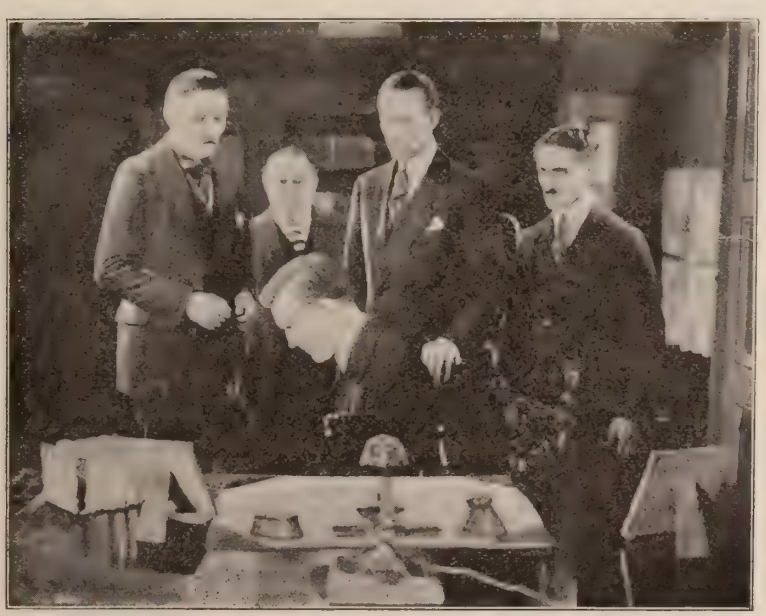
As guests of Metro Pictures Corporation, 200 members of the American Association of Mechanical Engineers visited the Eighth Coast Defense Command armory early in the week, where they inspected the London street scene.

Prior to the journey to the Bronx, the delegation of engineers and their wives visited Metro's New York studios in West Sixty-first street and witnessed the taking of "Temple Dust," the George D. Baker production for S-L Pictures of Calvin Johnston's notable short story recently published in The Saturday Evening Post.

The visit and inspection of the delegation of engineers, resulted from an invitation extended by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to Mr. MacMillian, chairman of the association. The annual meeting of the organization had drawn the members to New York from all parts of the country, and as one of the concluding features of the convention, the association decided upon a visit to one of the large motion picture producing companies, where they could see "movies" in the making. Mr. Rowland's cordial invitation to the association of engineers followed, which resulted in their devoting an entire afternoon to an inspection of Metro's Eastern studios.

George Elwood Jenks, author of the screen versions of many of the big special productions filmed by Jesse D. Hampton, has joined the story producing department at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif.

As his first task under the contract just negotiated by Bayard Veiller, director of production at Hollywood, Mr. Jenks has completed a screen version of John Fleming Wilson's "Uncharted Seas," a story of the frozen North in which Alice Lake is being starred. The story, which offers wide opportunities for remarkable scenic effects, and the surprises that baffle the fan who gets ahead of the plot, has been treated in a most original manner by Mr. Jenks, declare Metro officials.



George Elwood Jenks has been a writer of scenarios and original stories for the screen for seven years. His first work was for Universal. Then he joined the staff of the old Triangle company, preparing some of the biggest Triangle features for the screen during his connection with that organization.

Willard C. Patterson Praises "Dinty"

Willard C. Patterson, one of the most prominent showmen in the country, is the latest manager to laud Marshall Neilan's newest production, "Dinty."

In a letter received at the Marshall Neilan studio, Mr. Patterson says: "Some film men say that I am a hard boiled egg when it comes to seeing pictures. Maybe they are right, but today, after seeing 'Dinty,' we use picture next week.

"I wanted to drop you a few lines and ask you to convey to Mr. Neilan and Wesley Barry my sincere congratulations for having produced a picture that, to me, with my limited knowledge of this business, has every angle that an exhibitor could expect and my personal opinion is that 'Dinty' is the best picture I ever saw."

New Mayo Production Ready for Release

An important production entitled "Tiger True," now is ready for release, it is announced by Universal. The story is by Max Brand and it serves as a starring vehicle for Frank Mayo. Jacques Jaccard, who recently directed Mavo in "Honor Bound," also supervised the production of "Tiger True."

Mr. Jaccard selected a splendid cast to support the star. Fritzi Brunette, starred in many a photoplay, plays the feminine lead; Walter Long, who recently scored in "Go and Get It," has the heavy role; Al Kaufman, star of the squared circle, has the part of a "bouncer" in an underworld resort; Herbert Bethew, well liked in former Jaccard productions, appears in a character role, and others in the cast include Eleanor Hancock, Charles Brinley and Willis Robards. The scenes of the story shift from the palaces of Fifth avenue to the vice haunts of the lower East side.

Alice Lake's Cast Stated

Work to Start Shortly on Coast on "The Woman Who Went Away"

PRODUCTION work upon Alice Lake's latest starring picture, "The Woman Who Went Away," from John Fleming Wilson's story, "The Uncharted Sea," will soon start at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, Calif. In the cast so far selected to support Miss Lake are Carl Gerard, Rudolph Valentino, Fred Turner, Charles Mailes and Rhea Haines.

This romance of the Seas is considered to be the greatest of the stories written by Mr. Wilson and was adapted to the screen by George Elwood Jenks, under the title of "The Woman Who Went Away." Wesley Ruggles who directed Miss Lake in her latest release, "Mother Love," will handle the megaphone in this forthcoming picture while Sol Polito will be the photographer and John Holden the art director.

Carl Gerard will have one of the leading male roles. Mr. Gerard will enact the role of Tom Eastman, one of the leading characters in Mr. Wilson's story of the sea. Rudolph Valentino will appear as a doughty sea captain.

Many novel features will be introduced in this story of the sea, chief among which will be scenes taken in the arctic waters and among the icebergs and snowy land of the far north. Miss Lake and her company expect to spend part of the holiday season in the land of the midnight sun "shooting" scenes for "The Woman Who Went Away." The unexpected happenings during this voyage and the twist that places the heroine in charge of the situation, form the basis of one of the most gripping film productions ever made, states Metro.

Screen Is Elevating Drama

So Declares Hugh Ford, Who Sees in Film an Aid to Literature

THE motion picture of today is having a basic elevating effect on the drama and literature, according to Hugh Ford, the well known Paramount director, who recently returned from England where he produced the first two pictures made at the new London studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

"There has been a lot of talk about the motion picture debasing the drama and literature," said Mr. Ford, "but a close analysis of the situation will show the opposite. The motion picture is having the same effect on the drama that the short story has had on literature. It is raising the public's interest in the drama and making it more critical and more discerning.

"The motion picture is increasing the audience of the drama. It has led the public to the point where the worthwhile things get the attention they deserve. 'The Miracle Man' was a good book and a good play, but how many knew it until the picture was made? 'Humoresque' was a good story, but not until it was visualized to the public in a picture did its potentialities become fully recognized by the greater mass of our population."

With the increased interest taken in the films by such writers as Sir Gilbert Parker, Sir J. M. Barrie, Edward Knoblock and Henry Arthur Jones, Mr. Ford explained that the motion picture had taken rapid strides toward its proper place in the sphere of literature drama and the stage.

"A good picture should make a good novel and a good play," Mr. Ford said. "Some plays made good pictures, but all plays will not make good pictures.

Kane in Missionary Role

Executive Impresses Topeka Business Men with Film's Importance

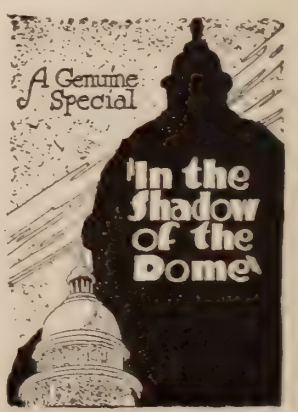
ARTHUR S. KANE's recent trans-continental trip was made with the primary object of confering with business associates and picture stars in whom he is interested, but he found time to do some effective missionary work also. This is indicated in a letter which Mr. Kane has just received from Roy Crawford, of Topeka, Kan., manager of the extensive Crawford theatrical enterprises, and a partner of the present head of Kane Pictures years ago.

When he was visiting in Topeka Mr. Kane was guest of honor at a luncheon given at the Chamber of Commerce and made an address to the large company of business men who attended. An orchestra from Miss Ruth Wright's Cozy theatre furnished the music on that occasion. Mr. Kane also made a speech to the pupils of Topeka High School and, again, on invitation of Miss Wright, from the stage of the Cozy theatre, preceding one of the evening showings of Charles Ray in the First National release, "Peaceful Valley." In the course of his letter Mr. Crawford said:

"Your addresses, reports of which were widely circulated throughout the state, have given a decided stimulation to the picture industry in this section. Not that words were needed to attract our people to the picture theatres, for the photoplay numbers virtually everybody in Kansas among its enthusiastic fans. Where your exposition of conditions was of special value was in the appeal it made to business men.

"It was fortunate that one of your addresses should be made before the Topeka Chamber of Commerce. The facts and figures which you presented impressed upon the minds of the solid business men of the state such a sense of the established importance of the picture industry as they had had no opportunity to gain previously. They realize now that motion pictures, from the financial as well as the artistic point of view, are no longer an experiment; that the industry rests upon a firm foundation, and that in all time to come it must be reckoned with as a factor of ever-increasing strength in the business world."

Sponsors Costume Pictures



Holds That Inferior Production Not Costumes Causes Unpopularity

PREDICTING an open season for period plays consequent upon the success of Associated First National's "Passion," starring Pola Negri, Michael Gore, of Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser, Los Angeles, in discussing costume plays, states his belief that the hitherto generally credited aversion of the exhibitor to the period productions lay not so much in the costume element itself as in the fact of the generally inferior quality of the actual product.

"Being a follower of the motion picture trade journals," says Mr. Gore, "I read from time to time that the public is tired of costume play pictures, and that exhibitors cannot make money with them. I do not know how they get the basis for such judgment. I presume that it is merely a part of the general condition which exists in the industry which demands that we jump into a new cycle every year. Personally, I believe that neither the exhibitor nor the public is tired of costume pictures. What they are tired of is bad costume plays. The incontrovertible success of "Passion" bears me out in this belief, for here is no mere break of circumstance. The hit made by the Pola Negri picture is not confined to a single town. Its remarkable pulling power is told in the box-office story everywhere it has played.

"I have been in this business for a good many years and have played all sorts of pictures in all types of theatres, and I think I am fitted to give some fairly authentic judgment on this matter. I remember that after 'Cabiria,' which to my mind was one of the greatest pictures ever screened, made such a great hit, the market was flooded with costume pictures of more or less questionable quality. And the result was that producers shied from this type of picture for a long time. 'Cabiria' wasn't the only good one. 'Quo Vadis' and 'The Last Days of Pompeii' were also well done; but in between were sandwiched a great horde of bad ones.

"A few months ago a producer here in Los Angeles started out to find the reason for the exhibitor's apparent lack of interest in the costume picture. The result of his research into actual records proved that it wasn't costume pictures that the public disliked—it was bad costume pictures. He also found, by the way, that the picture fans didn't like society dramas either when they didn't smack of realism, and the same rule applies to costume pictures."

A David G. Fischer Production

Three scenes from "Out of the Chorus," Alice Brady's latest picture for Realart. Vernon Steele is in the picture on the extreme right

BELIEVING that the proposal to revive the Puritan Sunday by means of blue laws as stringent as those of ancient Salem is a serious menace to the motion picture industry, William Fox has devoted nearly one-half of the current issue of Fox News, No. 23 in the second volume, to a telling argument against the "killjoys."

All the significance of a Blue Law Sunday is realistically depicted in a series of scenes directed and acted by professionals. Each irritating feature of the Sabbath gloom is shown. There will be no ballgames in the afternoon, even for those who spent the morning in church; it will be a crime to take the wife and children on an automobile ride; there will be no public conveyances or traffic lines in operation; you cannot visit friends unless they are within walking distance—and even then you may have to explain what you are doing on the street on Sunday, as they do in Zion City, Ill.; no candy, no ice cream sodas, no entertainment—not even motion pictures. People will learn to hate and dread the Sabbath instead of loving it, and longing for it as a day of recreation.

Prizma Process Used in "Gilded Lily"

For the first time in the history of Paramount picture-making in the East scenes made by the Prizma process in natural colors have been incorporated into a Paramount feature picture. This was for "The Gilded Lily," the first production made for Paramount by the combination of Mae Murray, star, and her husband, Director Robert Z. Leonard, which has just been completed at the new Long Island City studio.

"The Gilded Lily" is an original story by Clara Beranger, and was written especially for Miss Murray. The cast surrounding Miss Murray is composed of Lowell Sherman, Jason Robards, Charles Gerard, Leonora Ottinger, and Mrs. Pauline Dempsey. Ernest Haller was the cameraman.

Realart Press Matter Praised

Exhibitor Finds Suggestions on "The Furnace" Useful

PRESS material and exploitation suggestions that put a picture over are always appreciated by progressive exhibitors, and often they show their appreciation of these aids. That is what Charles H. Williams did. Mr. Williams is manager of the Strand theatre, Providence, R. I. When he selects a picture he does his best to see that it is properly exploited.

Recently, Mr. Williams booked Realart's William D. Taylor special, "The Furnace." He made use of the ideas and suggestions contained in the press material accompanying the picture—and the production played to exceptional business.

Commenting on this he paid tribute to Realart by writing:

"Your department is to be congratulated on the press material and the timely issuance of same for first run houses. For it certainly helped us in putting over the Realart production, Taylor special, 'The Furnace.' We did a phenomenal business with this and hope that your company will release many more of its equal."

One of the advertising aids offered for "The Furnace" was a rather unusual one-sheet. Hundreds of newspaper clippings formed a background for the display matter of the poster. Each of these clippings carried a story of domestic unhappiness—all of them forerunners of the divorce court and all painfully prevalent.

Superimposed on this background were some effective display lines in color, while two characters from the story in bold black and white broke through and glared belligerently at each other across the page. These fighting antagonists present one of the strongest scenes in the picture. The husband, nursing his grudge and blind to his own best interests, threatens his best friend, who, he thinks has betrayed his trust. This striking one-sheet is particularly effective as a lobby display.

The press book for "The Furnace" has been strongly commended by exhibitors. It suggests for exploitation a play on the title of the picture. An inexpensive lobby display in which the box office is made to resemble, with the aid of some painted muslin, a furnace, is easy to arrange. A number of butterflies, made from cardboard could be suspended inside and outside the lobby—as though attracted by the flames of the furnace.

A real wedding to be held on the theatre stage is also suggested as an exceptional advertising stunt.

The street ballyhoo consisting of an automobile decorated in bride and groom style with announcements of "The Furnace" is another exploitation aid suggested.

The usual tie-ups with local merchants by advertising wedding gifts, cards, gowns, flowers, and hardware, including furnaces, are also among the exploitation ideas presented.

Other exhibitor aids include program readers, lobby photos and displays, slides, advance stories for use in local newspapers, advertisements and production matts and cuts.

Pioneer Opens Serial Drive

Predicts "Son of Tarzan" Will Break Serial Booking Records

PIONEER FILM CORPORATION, in a statement issued this week, tells of the remarkable success being achieved with the "Son of Tarzan," the jungle serial, produced by David P. Howells. The prediction is made, by Pioneer officials, that this serial will break every previous record, not only in the history of Pioneer, but also that of any other concern that has ever distributed a serial to exhibitors in New York City, State, Northern New Jersey, or any other territory.

What is decribed to be one of the most elaborate exploitation campaigns conducted in connection with the distribution of a serial has been inaugurated by the Pioneer Film Corporation in connection with the "Son of Tarzan." Realizing the attractive value of the serial from the box-office viewpoint, the executives of Pioneer have spared neither money, effort nor time in perfecting the necessary machinery for putting the serial over in a most unusual manner, it is declared.

In the first place, every exhibitor in this section of the country has been told the outstanding features of the "Son of Tarzan" and what it means to a motion picture theatre. Furthermore, the public generally has been acquainted with the fact that the "Son of Tarzan" will soon be shown in every section of the city and state, and that never before has so much money been spent on the production of a serial equal to that which has been spent by Mr. Howells in the making of this jungle attraction.

The first public showing of the "Son of Tarzan" will take place on Christmas Day and from that time on episode after episode will be seen all over the city.

Pioneer Film Corporation takes particular pride, according to its announcement, in pointing out that moving picture theatre owners, who have never before booked serials, have realized the unusual features of the "Son of Tarzan" and have booked it for fifteen weeks on the strength of its drawing power.

CHESTER A. CLEGG, who is to be business manager for J. Stuart Blackton in London, sailed Thursday of last week on the Imperator for England to open the Blackton offices and start this new international film producing organization on its way.

Commodore Blackton's English organization will be known as the Blackton Productions, Inc., and elaborate offices are being equipped in Bush House, Aldwych, Strand, in which an entire floor has been taken.

The entire outfit of electrical and other equipment of the Blackton studios in Brooklyn are being shipped to London and will be installed in the English studios.

Company Executives Size up New Year's Prospects

Universal

THERE is too much calamity howling among motion picture men, it is the opinion of Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who recently returned to New York after a careful survey of the California production centers and of the conditions in the various film exchanges from coast to coast.

The Universal chief predicts there will be much less production during the coming months. This state of affairs he welcomes as a much needed correction for the great over production of the past months. It is his opinion that both the producer and the exhibitor will be brought successfully through the coming year, by lessened production and concentration on big pictures with high exploitation value.

Discussing the relation of the present conditions to the film industry, Mr. Laemmle, in a recent interview said:

"This cry of business depression is all wrong."

"I won't deny that there is a certain amount of business unrest in commercial lines, but there never was a period in which the motion picture business was in a more flourishing condition than it is today, and there has never been a time when exhibitors were more prosperous.

"Naturally there is a slump in some lines, but any thinking person knows that this slump had to come sooner or later, and the surprising fact is that it did not come sooner.

"During the war everybody made a lot of money. Some saved a little, but the big majority did not. While the people were making the highest wages they ever earned in all their lives, they did not stop to consider the price of anything, regardless of whether it was a suit of clothes, or a can of beans, and the profiteers, maddened by profits, thought they would continue to gouge the public.

"'We'll keep it up as long as we can, and when we can't we'll can the idea, and get back to earth,' is the way they reasoned. Then the people began to awaken to the fact that they could get along without certain things which were costing them twice or three times as much as they were worth, and suddenly they quit buying. That left the market filled with goods which had been ordered at the very highest prices, and in order to dispose of their stocks the merchants and manufacturers had to get prices down to something like normal.

"I'm not trying to argue an economic question. I simply want to show you how business uncertainty, or whatever you choose to call it, hasn't a thing to do with the motion picture business.

"Like other commodities the price of producing motion pictures doubled and trebled during the past three years, but unlike other lines the tremendous increase in the cost of production was not carried on to the ultimate consumer, as was done in other lines of business. Rentals are higher now than they were three years ago, but the increase is nothing like the increase which was made in commercial lines. Building materials, for example advanced 200 and 300 per cent. The production of motion pictures was naturally affected by this advance, yet the exhibitor was not asked to pay 200 or 300 per cent higher rentals as a consequence.

"Exhibitors may have made slight increases in admission prices but they did not go wild and put the price up so high that they now have to make radical reductions. People may refrain from buying suits of clothes for $75 or $100 that are worth $25 or $40, but they are not giving up attendance at picture theatres, the admission prices of which are 15 cents, 25 cents or 50 cents.

"As a matter of fact, even if business were bad as it is painted in some quarters, it would have very little effect on the amusement business generally, or the motion picture business in particular. Nothing short of a panic can stop the public from seeking amusement, and as moving pictures are the most popular of all forms of amusement, the people are going to continue to enjoy their favorite entertainment regardless."

Metro

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION, in the year now drawing to a close, has made gratifying forward strides and stands poised and ready for even greater accomplishments during the new year, according to a Christmas statement issued by Richard A. Rowland, president of the corporation, reviewing the activities of the company for the past twelve months.

"Viewing the past year in retrospect," says the statement by the Metro president, "we feel that we have every reason to be grateful for the good things that have come our way. The results we have accomplished have been carefully outlined in advance, but we have striven for them with unremitting zeal. And if in the twelve months of 1920 we have further strengthened our position in the industry and inspired exhibitors and the public alike with a firmer confidence in the quality of Metro pictures, we have no mind to begrudge the effort we have put into our work.

"Doubtless it came as a surprise to many in the industry when it was announced last January that Marcus Loew, president of Loew's, Inc., had decided to join in a sort of protective union his vast theatre interests with the producing organization of Metro. Purchase of Metro stock by Loew's, Inc., was merely the working out of a situation that everybody could see was inevitable.

"Mr. Loew was proprietor of a chain of more than 125 theatres throughout the United States and in Canada. As he explained at the time, he affiliated with Metro as a matter of self-protection. He desired to be assured of a continuously dependable source of supply of the best motion pictures for his houses. It was likewise to the advantage of Metro to insure a continuously dependable market for its pictures; a market that meant there would be an instant demand for Metro releases as soon as they were scheduled.

"It was early in the year—in March, to be exact—that Metro concentrated upon its intensive campaign to acquire for its productions the foremost literary men of the nation," adds Mr. Rowland's statement. "We obtained the services of America's 'big three' dramatists—Bayard Veiller, Winchell Smith and Eugene Walter—in addition to signing up other exceedingly prominent writers, among them Irvin S. Cobb, Hulbert Footner, George Kibbe Turner, Donn Byrne, Arthur Somers Roche, Henry C. Royland and Arthur Stringer, to whom we have recently added Montague Glass, John Russell and Eugene Buck."

In April Metro celebrated the fifth anniversary of its organization. The company rounded out five years of existence with personnel intact, being one of the very few, if indeed not the only large producing company to be able to boast of such a record.

In the latter part of May Metro held its annual convention of district managers and branch managers, at the Hotel Astor. This gathering disclosed that Metro's sales forces were getting splendid results with the company's special productions and reflected a feeling of unbounded optimism among the exchange men.

Mr. Rowland's trip to Europe, his second in a year in the interests of Metro, was undertaken early in July and he returned late in August. The most important achievement of the Metro president abroad was the completion of arrangements whereby Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., became exclusive distributors of the Metro product throughout Great Britain.

In conclusion Mr. Rowland's statement says:

"Another of the achievements of this year that Metro regards as of the highest importance is the conversion to the screen of 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse,' the immortal masterpiece by the great Spanish author, Vicente Blasco Ibanez.

"Under the direction of Rex Ingram, 'The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse' has finally been filmed, after more than six months of constant activity. A cast of fifty principals and an ensemble of more than 12,000 persons appear in this tremendous screen production, which Metro will release early in 1921 as an extra special de luxe."

Vitagraph

THE Vitagraph Company is sounding a strongly optimistic note in forecasting activities in the film field during the coming year. The facts and figures given out in an announcement this week by John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., show that the 1920 business of that concern was 112 per cent greater than during the year 1918, and 32 per cent greater than it was in 1919. That this figure may approximate 35 per cent seems likely, as the figures were completed on December 27, with five full week-days to be heard from, and in the very midst of the period when additional bookings on "Dead Men Tell No Tales" and "Trumpet Island" were reaching the executive offices daily.

An interesting sidelight on the figures completed by Vitagraph last Monday shows that during 1920, all but 3 per cent of all motion pictures throughout the United States and Canada used some Vitagraph pictures during the year now entering its final stage. The harvest of Larry Semon bookings co-incident with the meteoric rise of that particular comedy king, the interest in the wake of William Duncan's new form of chapter-play and the success of such productions as "Dead Men Tell No Tales," were said to be a big factor in the achievement.

The statement of Mr. Quinn, who has been at the helm of Vitagraph's distributing organizations since 1918, attributes the extraordinary growth in the volume of business done by Vitagraph in the past two years and its constantly increasing favor with the exhibitors and picture-lovers, to the decided increase in the quality of the productions offered.

While recognizing the value of proper sales and exploitation methods and the importance of the personnel in charge of these matters, he is firm in his belief that the first cause is in the production end. On the material side, better Vitagraph pictures have been in part the result of greatly increased facilities at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios, in laboratory and stage space, and is a big addition to the acreage of the Vitagraph lot at Hollywood, California. Vitagraph has gone further than the material end, Mr. Quinn explains in his statement, and the experience of one of filmdom's pioneers has been injected into productions by the constant and close personal supervision of Albert E. Smith.

Mr. Smith will continue to divide his time in supervising production in the East and West during 1921. Both Mr. Smith and Mr. Quinn are extremely optimistic over the outlook for 1921, and are positive in their prediction that Vitagraph will have the most successful year in its history. As the figures show, the Vitagraph product cannot be shown in many more houses than have already presented it during 1920, but it is believed that such productions as "Black Beauty," "The Heart of Maryland," George Randolph Chester's "Son of Wallingford" and other big special productions on the 1921 calender will hew the way to still brighter results.

It had been generally regarded in the industry that Vitagraph's recently-welded chain of new and enlarged branch offices was about complete, at least for several months to come. For a period of two years, during Mr. Quinn's tenure as general manager, announcements were made of the enlarged exchanges and in many cases the building of entirely new Vitagraph buildings in cities not previously occupied by Vitagraph. Notwithstanding these provisions for meeting a constantly increasing demand, plans are being made to increase Vitagraph's distributing system still further, and these plans have already reached the goal of fulfillment in Oklahoma City, where an additional Vitagraph building will be opened for business on February 1st. This region was formerly served by the Dallas office, which only recently was enlarged. The first of the 1921 additions built by Vitagraph is located on South Hudson avenue at the corner of West Reno avenues in the Oklahoma metropolis.

Hodkinson

AFTER a two weeks' trip in the field during which time he visited Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and various other cities, W. W. Hodkinson, head of the organization which bears his name, has returned to New York.

"While all the talk we hear lately," said Mr. Hodkinson, "would seem to indicate that conditions bordering almost on panic prevail throughout the United States, nothing that I observed during my trip would serve to substantiate such a fact. The exhibitors, as I have seen it, are prospering greatly.

"It is only where local conditions are bad that the theatres feel the reaction. For example, in Akron some of the theatres are closed, which may be accounted for by the fact that the rubber industry—and that is practically the only industry which Akron knows—is in a state of great unrest, but in the majority of the other towns where the manufacturing interests are diversified, the theatres, as I have said, are in a prosperous state.

"The purposes for which I went out in the field in this trip of mine were manifold: First of all, I wanted to get to know the men who go to make up our organization and, too, I wanted to get in personal touch with the showmen of the United States. I did so, and I am particularly delighted to see with my own eyes that exhibitors everywhere are learning more and more the full significance of the name Hodkinson and all that that name implies. My organization is beginning now to take exactly the place to which the quality of its service and the quality of its product entitle it. It is my contention always that a square deal meets with a square deal in return—and when you back that square deal up with an unequalled line of product achieving the result for which you strive is only a matter of time."

Pioneer

IN a forceful New Year's message to the managers of all exchanges of the Pioneer Film Corporation from Maine to California, General Manager M. H. Hoffman, sounds a clear note of optimism for 1921. Mr. Hoffman's message predicts prosperity for the industry despite the reported depression in other fields.

"Thanks to the loyalty, ability and conscientious efforts on the part of our men throughout the country," says Mr. Hoffman, "the Pioneer Film Corporation has tripled its business through the year of 1920, and all indications point to an era of unprecedented expansion and progress on the part of our company during the coming year.

"Without taking away any credit from the splendid selling ability of our immense organization, you must bear in mind that our success is due to the careful selection of subjects for release. Quality, not quantity, is our paramount thought. Fewer pictures, but better ones is the slogan we have before us, and backing up these ideas by always exercising extraordinary effort to put forth the proper exploitation and presentation of our productions.

"Let optimism reign supreme. Hard work, conscientious effort and common business sense have always spelled success. They will continue to do so and we, at Pioneer headquarters, look forward to 1921 registering the biggest business since the inception of our concern. Stock-jobbing, speculation and promotions have met their doom, whereas firms relying and depending for their success on sound business principles, have prospered and will continue to prosper."

Morosco to Produce a Stage-Screen Play

Oliver Morosco Productions, Inc., of Los Angeles, which is now preparing several new productions for the stage, building a new theatre on the Coast, and plunging into the motion picture industry, announces that it is developing a new idea which will be a combination of both the stage and film.

"For some time," said the theatrical chief, "Miss Anna Nichols, the playwright, and I, have had this under discussion. I believe that it can be done and so does she. I am going to produce a motion picture as a stage play with the dialogue and then all of us will be able to see just what it is that makes the difference between the stage and the screen."

Clyde Cook Going Over Big, Says Wm. Fox

Clyde Cook, the William Fox funny man who contortioned and twisted himself into a throne chair alongside Charles Chaplin when his first special comedy for Fox, "Don't Tickle," went out to the exhibitors, is vindicating the faith of American showmen in him, if the flood of contracts that followed his second feature, "The Huntsman," is any criterion, declare Fox officials.

When "All Wrong," his third work, is released in January, it will enjoy the distinction of being one of the most heavily contracted comedy features ever offered to an exhibitor, according to reports from the Fox offices.

Finishing Five Productions

One Edgar Comedy and Five Goldwyn Feature Productions Near Finish

FIVE productions, one two-reel "Edgar" Comedy and four big feature pictures, are nearing completion at the Goldwyn studios here. Three of the specials are Eminent Authors' Productions. The directors concerned in the five productions are now engaged in shooting the final scenes on these pictures prior to cutting and assembling.

"Don't Neglect Your Wife," the Gertrude Atherton screen story formerly known as "Noblesse Oblige," directed by Director Wallace Worsley, is one of the five and the author who has been on the Goldwyn lot during the photographing of her picture, expresses herself as elated over the treatment it has received.

The last scenes of "A Tale of Two Worlds," the Gouverneur Morris original scenario formerly called "The Water Lily," are being shot by Director Frank Lloyd. Mr. Lloyd was working at the studio the night that the famous Venice pier was destroyed by fire. With a cameraman he speeded to the fire, eight miles away, and took 1,000 feet of film, some of which will be incorporated in the Boxer uprising scenes of "A Tale of Two Worlds."

Director E. Mason Hopper and Author Rupert Hughes have employed some unusual camera effects in "Dangerous Curve Ahead," the third Eminent Authors' Production, which is said to be unique in story as well as in technique.

Director Reginald Barker and the "Snowblind" company made such good progress in photographing the exteriors of that Katherine Newlin Burt story that they reached Culver City in time to observe the Christmas festivities with the other members of the Goldwyn West Coast studios.

Photography on the twelfth story in the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" comedies has been completed by Director Paul Bern. Its script title is "Ole, the Hand," but this will be changed before the comedy is released.

"Two Moons" Filling Houses, Says Fox

That Buck Jones, the William Fox star, was not elevated to stellar honors without reason is evidenced by the release of "Two Moons," his latest picture, which was first presented to the public on December 19. Although so short a time has elapsed since the release, the demand for bookings by exhibitors, according to information from the Fox offices, indicates that the star has put over another money-getter that will enable theatre owners who have booked it to play a little five-fingered exercise on their cash register to the tune of crowded houses.

Airplane Stunt Almost Ends in Tragedy

Details of the aeroplane incident which the Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation enjoined the news weeklies from using, have just been published. The scenario of "Stronger Than Fiction," the production in connection with which the aeroplane was used, called for an ascent from the roof of a building. Frank Clark volunteered to "hop off" from the roof of the ten-story Railway Building at Eleventh street and Broadway, Los Angeles.

The plane rose from the roof before the edge was reached. As soon as Clark had cleared the roof, however, his plane suddenly entered an air-pocket created by the open air channel between the buildings lining both sides of the street. The plane started for the street level, nose first. Before the roadbed was reached, however, Clark succeeded in straightening out his machine and ascended at a sharp angle to a point above the roof tops, where the manoeuvres required by the scenario were carried out.

Nick Carter Series for New England Houses

The Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston, Mass., which is the Pioneer franchise holder of New England, through its president, Herman Rifken, has telegraphed headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation advising that he had booked the entire Nick Carter series for all the Gordon theatres in New England.

Dolores Casinelli, pretty and talented ingenue star, who is expected to sign a contract with a recognized producing organization shortly

Goldwyn Completing Films

Four Important Productions to Be Finished on Coast Within a Week

FOUR important productions at the Goldwyn studios here will be completed within the next week, it is announced. "Don't Neglect Your Wife," "Dangerous Curve Ahead," "A Tale of Two Worlds" and the twelfth in the series of Booth Tarkington's "Edgar" comedies.

The first named, "Don't Neglect Your Wife," is Gertrude Atherton's original screen story which Wallace Worsley is directing, with the advice and assistance of the author. Prominent in the cast are Lewis S. Stone, Mabel Julienne Scott, R. D. MacLean, Arthur Hoyt, Kate Lester, Josephine Crowell and Charles Clary.

"Dangerous Curve Ahead" is Rupert Hughes' story, written directly for the screen in which pretty Helene Chadwick has the leading role. Director E. Mason Hopper announces that the photography on this production will be completed during the week. Mr. Hughes, who has been assisting in the producing of the picture, has devised many intricate lighting effects. In the cast with Miss Chadwick are Richard Dix, M. B. ("Lefty") Flynn, James Neill, Edythe Chapman and Kate Lester.

"A Tale of Two Worlds," Gouverneur Morris' first original scenario, is being directed by Frank Lloyd. The story has its inception in the Boxer uprising in China, but is soon shifted to the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. Leatrice Joy has the principal role while others in the cast are J. Frank Glendon, Wallace Berry and Jack Abee.

The twelfth in the series of Booth Tarkington's two-reel comedies of child life known as "The Emotions and Adventures of Edgar Pomeroy," which bears the working title of "Ole, the Hand," will be completed on Saturday under the direction of Paul Bern, a new member of Goldwyn's directorial staff.

Will Rogers' new stellar vehicle will be a screen version of an O. Henry tale, "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking." Production was started this week under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

New Gladys Walton Film

Work Started on "Rich Girl, Poor Girl"; Harry Harris is Director

PRODUCTION has started at Universal City on "Rich Girl, Poor Girl," a modern screen version of "The Prince and the Pauper," in which Harry Harris will direct Gladys Walton.

The story was originally written by J. G. Hawks, the noted photoplaywright for Mary Pickford, and was intended as Miss Pickford's next production, it is stated, but her European trip altered the plans and Universal purchased the story for Miss Walton.

"Rich Girl, Poor Girl" is considered to be one of Hawk's most brilliant stories. It concerns a rich girl who changes identities with her double, a girl from the slums, and becomes involved in an amazing tangle of crime.

Production was delayed a week while Universal scouts searched the West Coast for a girl who could double for Miss Walton in the scenes where both the rich girl and the gutter waif are required by the script to appear together.

Among the two hundred applicants were elderly ladies with synthetic complexions, girls in short dresses, several stout dowagers and scores of pretty show-girls who felt that they resembled the star.

Narrowing the competition down to fourteen, Director Harry Harris made screen tests of each of the girls, and finally selected Miss Billie McCarthy.

While one leading man at a time is usually sufficient for a photodrama, "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" calls for two masculine leads opposite Miss Walton. For her lover in the slum scenes Antrim Short has been signed, while Harold Austin plays opposite as her moneyed suitor.

Other screen favorites in the supporting cast are Scotty McGregor, who plays the disreputable father of the slum-child; Joe Neary, a gangster; Wadsworth Harris, the millionaire father, and C. W. Herzinger, a brutal groom on the estate of the rich girl.

Fine Views in Pathe News

Statue of Liberty in Close-Ups; Striking Historical Review Also

NOBODY but Bartholdi, the immortal sculptor of America's noblest and most picturesque monument, ever has enjoyed as intimate a view of the Statue of Liberty as is shown in Pathe News No. 99—which is the final issue of the period of the Tenth Anniversary celebration, announces a statement from the Pathe headquarters. In a most spectacular manner "Miss Liberty" becomes the heroine of the "stunt" feature of this issue of Pathe News. By special permission of the United States Army, she submitted to the attention of human pygmies who scrambled about over her classic features and made hazardous journeys among the folds of her draperies, while cameramen took close-ups of the proceedings.

For graphic representations of world events, this number of Pathe News—No. 99—more than sustains the high reputation of Pathe News service. In Mexico the ceremonies of the inauguration of President Alvaro Obregon are pictured. In England, for the benefit of the War Memorial Hospital horses with their riders are seen in daring feats of leaping through high spurting flames. For the first time President Wilson submits his message to Congress through a representative—and it is his final message. His successor, U. S. Senator Harding, is pictured making his farewell address to the Senate.

Now that returns for the year are in, previous indications are merely ratified, says Pathe officials, that one of the outstanding picture feature exhibited during the last twelve months is Jesse D. Hampton's production, "Half a Chance," directed by Robert Thornby, with Mahlon Hamilton and Lillian Rich in the leading roles, and distributed by Pathe.

For weeks past, newspaper reviewers all over the country have been expressing their unqualified approval of "Half a Chance," according to Pathe, several going to the length of pronouncing it "the perfect picture," while exhibitors, not content with letting bookings and return bookings tell the story from the box office viewpoint, have taken the trouble to turn reviewers themselves—in congratulatory letters to the distributor, it is stated.

FOR NEWSPAPER USE—FOR THEATER PROGRAMS

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

HARRY MILLARDE, who directed "Over the Hill," and handled to perfection the juvenile players, is testing his ability to extract talent from "the masses," again, in a production he is now directing, starring William Farnum. There are two little ones. The first, about three, is showing decided talent, while the tiny baby player is actually learning to walk before the camera, and developing a marked histrionic ability under the patient direction of Mr. Millarde. When the picture is shown, there will probably be a great deal said about the "realism"—for teaching baby to walk, is a real job.

Kenneth Laflin Eagon, is putting the last finishing touches upon "The Nation's Dream," which will be released through Independent Films Association, January 1, 1921.

Mr. Eagon gave Pinnacle several "psychological" comedies and one feature for Neal Hart. At present he is working on another "psychological story," this time an elaborate multiple-reel production, exemplifying the ring of swindlers who have the country in their grasp. Mr. Eagon is well known as a writer, director and exploitation expert. He expects to organize a company to place Marjorie Daw in super productions, as star.

Tod Browning himself will film "Fanny Herself," the celebrated story written by Edna Ferber, herself.

This was announced by Carl Laemmle as a reward to the young author-producer for his crook masterpiece, "Outside the Law."

Browning will make "Fanny Herself" with an all-star cast when he returns from Gotham the first of the year. Celebrated screen actors are under consideration for the leading parts.

"Fanny Herself" will be a Tod Browning-Jewel production.

John L. McCutcheon, director of "Detehmination," Capt. F. Stoll's super-feature photoplay, is working the cast and staff at the Grantwood studios literally night and day. Often it is the wee sma' hours before the usual "that's all for today" is announced.

Director McCutcheon is now running ahead of the tentative schedule that he set some time ago. Present indications are that the picture will be ready to cut and title ahead of time, bringing production ready for release by the latter part of February.

The past several nights have been devoted to "dark" exteriors

Tom Terriss, director and Catherine Calvert, leading player in "The Heart of Maryland," a Tom Terriss Vitagraph production, under an old bell in Washington, Mississippi, where the company were on location and McCutcheon promises that some unusually fine fog and night effects will be seen when the picture is released.

Walter Ringham, an actor well-known on the other side of the water, has been added to the cast in the important role of Lord Warburton.

A special train carried John Emerson and Anita Loos, with the entire company, with which they are making "Wife Insurance," their first special production, into Mexico. Frst stop will be San Diego; journey thence to Tia Juana, and the surrounding country for scenes in the Kingdom of Bunkonia, which is the locale in their new satire upon romantic melodrama. Victor Fleming, who made "The Mollycoddle" and "When the Clouds Roll By" for Douglas Fairbanks, and who has just finished the Emerson-Loos adaptation of "Mama's Affair" for Constance Talmadge, will direct the picture.

Agents in Mexico and San Diego have for the last week been rounding up the personnel of two armies. One of these armies is composed of Mexicans, while the other is negro. The party includes Basil Sydney, the noted Irish actor, who came from London to play the leading part; May Collins, ingenue in the stage success, "The Outrageous Mrs. Palmer" last season; Frank Lalor, Roy Atwell, Olive Valerie, M. S. Epstin, business manager for Joseph M. Schenck, and James A. Creelman of the Emerson-Loos organization.

A fine sort of chap, George Irving, now directing "Her Majesty," starring Mollie King for American Cinema Corporation. Devotion to his art threatened to land him in jail recently. The company was on or rather, looking for "location." It was found,—a camera-rich nook by the side of the road, just what Mr. Irving wanted. The afternoon was stepping fast into late day, light meant much, so waiving the usual procedure of looking up an owner and getting permission, the camera was set, Miss King and Creighton Hale were rehearsed, and started, the eternal grind of the camera. A sudden breaking down of falltime bramble, right in midst of some pretty, Hale variety of lovemaking, and a tweed-garbed and irate owner of the property stood investigating. Having his property photographed was one of his pet abominations. He'd land the bunch of 'em in jail, would he! To which friendly threat, up spoke our hero, Irving, with the earnest request that he be landed in jail straightway, "but not until, O my Sire,—please, please, not until scene has been 'shot'." The outcome of the affair was that the irate owner fell victim to the finesse of Mr. Irving combined with the blonde charm of Miss King—and the scene was not only registered, but the town lockup boasted of no handsome director as guest that night! It bears chronicling, however, that Mr. Irving was ready to be jailed for his art!

An egg-taking station is being established on the middle fork of the San Joaquin river, about nine miles from the "bottomless" pool explored recently by William D. Taylor, according to a communication received by the Paramount producer from the executive office of the Fish and Game Commission of California.

The remarkable trout-fishing in "the great hole" of Balloon Dome was reported to the commission by Taylor on his return from an extensive trip through that country. The hatchery department, knowing that portion of the San Joaquin to be inaccessible to fishermen, decided to secure as many eggs as possible for artificial propagation elsewhere. The superintendent of the hatchery department knew of the pool and a few of his men had been down to it.

"Communications such as your letter are always very interesting to us as we have a great many lovers of the sport who call in to discuss these matters," concluded the Commission, in thanking Mr. Taylor.

ABOUT PLAYERS

THERE was cheer and noise aplenty at the International Studio on Christmas Day, when

Norma Talmadge, her director, Albert Parker and Michael Barnes, standing in back, who were among those on location in Jamaica

about 1800 children in the neighborhood of the studio jammed onto the limited floor space and scrambled merrily for seats, the better to enjoy the jolly party Marion Davies had arranged for their pleasure. There was music by Baer's Band, droll antics from the prop. men, dressed up like clowns, singing and dancing, ice cream, cake, candy, a Mack Sennett comedy, "Married Life," and then the awarding of dolls for the girls, skates for the boys, and more candy for all. Amid it all was the hubbub of childish glee, subdued only now and then when a deep, bass voice thundered for quiet. Miss Davies stood on the balcony, quietly enjoying the good times of the youngsters. Mr. Joseph Urban was there, representatives of the press, Miss Frances Marion, and other notables. Miss Marion, by the way, is to direct Miss Davies in her next picture, which is a Fannie Hurst story.

Doris Kenyou, who deserted pictures for the speaking stage last year, has again heard the call of the cinema. She returns to the screen in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," a Cosmopolitan production now being made under the direction of Frank Borzage, maker of "Humoresque."

Here's a star going on a Christmas rampage—which is a big order for such a little person. Bessie Love. Miss Love pounded a nail into her dressing room door and hung up a sign: "Not to be opened 'till Christmas." Says she, with a mighty toss of her little head: "There's only one role I'll play this Christmas week. That's Bessie L. Santa Claus." The kids all along the block in Laurel Canyon are on the invitation list and the Christmas morning party is to be a big affair in their young lives. In the meantime, Miss Love's next production, "Penny of Tophill Trail," must wait. But after all, philosophizes Miss Love, Christmas comes only once a year.

Robert Schable, playing the heavy lead in "Temple-Dusk," a George D. Baker production, has about three pictures released simultaneously. There is "Blind Wives," in which he plays a heavy lead opposite Estelle Taylor in one of the big episodes; "Paying the Piper," George Fitzmaurice's special, and "The Romantic Adventurer," with Dorothy Dalton. In "Temple Dusk," Schable plays a different kind of heavy, that of Bunny Fish, the gambler and man-about-town, who inherits a gambling house and seeks to win the girl while her young husband is overseas. Schable's years of stage and screen experience form an admirable background to draw from, in his many widely different roles.

James Crane and Alice Brady, his wife, are vacationing in Bermuda and will remain there through the holiday season. On their return, Miss Brady will start work on another picture for Realart, and Mr. Crane will go on tour as the star of "Opportunity."

Vera Gordon, of "Humoresque" fame, now engaged in starring on the Keith Vaudeville Circuit, found that she had a week's vacation from the "two a day" so she decided to arrange a program on New Year's day for the Sing Sing inhabitants. It will be presented under the auspices of the Mutual Welfare League. Miss Gordon's entire vaudeville company will betake itself to Sing Sing on this occasion to present the sketch she is now starring in and will continue to star in until the middle of April. To augment the bill, the services of other film and vaudeville notables have been enlisted, including Virginia Valli and Edith Stockton. As an added bit of cheer, Miss Gordon has promised the League that she will give it the first showing on any screen of her forthcoming picture, "The Great Love," a Selznick special produced by Harry Rapf, in which she makes her stellar debut.

Vincent Coleman's voice has broken out. After being suppressed on the screen for months, Vincent has gone in for cadenzas and arias and is warbling some semblance of melody in the musical show, "It's Up to You" now playing in Chicago. Hereafter it will be Vincent Coleman—the Caruso of screendom!

May McAvoy, featured in J. Stuart Blackton's "Forbidden Valley" and in Whitman Bennett's "Truth About Husbands," has completed work in the John S. Robertson Production of Barrie's "Sentimental Tommy." Miss McAvoy, as the lovable and pensive Grizel, found this role one of the most charming she has yet essayed. And according to Mr. Robertson and Miss Josephine Lovett, the continuity writer, the petite May is a Grizel to Mr. Barrie's own liking. Which is "nuff said."

Corinne Griffith is going to prove to the sceptics that she knows all about that "obey clause" in the "marriage contract!" She is going to be directed in her next Vitagraph picture by her husband, Webster Campbell, heretofore known as a leading man. Although this is Mr. Campbell's initial bow as a director, he is a well-known figure in producing circles and considerable interest will center around this new combination of star and director.

Rod La Rocque, who will be seen shortly opposite Dorothy Dickson in George Fitzmaurice's "Paying the Piper," has completed his stage engagement with Alice Brady in "Anna Ascends." Rod is considering several new propositions now, and will announce his plans for the immediate future shortly.

Thirty days for David G. Fischer. He meted out the sentence to himself, which may explain its severity. But he says that in the capacity of Director General of the Fox-Fischer Masterplays, Inc., he ordered himself to spend thirty days in the cutting room preparing "In the Shadow of the Dome" for the screen.

Dorothy Dalton is fast completing work in "The Teaser," under Roy Neill's direction. Mr. Neill expects to begin cutting this Alaskan picture shortly, during which process Miss Dalton will be speeding to the Coast.

May Allison begins work, early in January, in her next picture, "Big Game," under the direction of Dallas Fitzgerald, a director whose name on big Metro productions has come to be recognized as a sign of merit. In this Willard Robertson and Kilbourn Gordon story, adapted for the screen by Edward Lowe, Jr., the blonde and vivacious May will play a real outdoor girl, which is a direct contrast to the society parts she has been enacting in her recent pictures.

Duncan Lauds the Serial

Melodrama is returning to favor with the picture fans throughout the country, is the opinion of William Duncan, Vitagraph serial king. "The chapter-play with its swift moving action and its absence of uninterestng episodes has brought many new followers to the silent drama, and exhibitors everywhere are impressing upon producers the necessity of catering to this clientele in their feature productions," says Duncan.

"The taste of the public moves in cycles and it is the constant aim of the showman to accurately anticipate its trend. The tendency just now is away from the sex drama, which has been popular in the immediate past, toward the theme dealing with men and women struggling with the vital problems of existence.

"The serial chapter-play has been a direct cause for this change, which is evidenced by the overwhelming demand for this type of picture not only in this country but in Europe and South America as well. The pronounced increase in the number of picture-goers who prefer these productions will doubtless influence producers to release melodramas in great numbers from now on.

"The chapter-play itself is affected by this condition, and our present serials are no longer merely a series of stunts and thrills, but contain a plot as definite and well constructed as offerings of feature length."

Directors' Ass'n Will Hold Elections

At the regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association on the evening of December 21, the nominations for officers to be elected for 1921 were announced.

On the regular ticket:

Charles F. Miller, director; Ashley Miller, assistant director; Robert G. Vignola, technical director; Charles M. Seay, scenarist; C. Jay Williams, treasurer; Robert Ellis, inner guard; George A. Lessey, outer guard, and James Vincent, trustee for three years.

Opposition Ticket:

George B. Seitz, director; S. E. V. Taylor, assistant director; George Archainbaud, technical director; William F. Haddock, scenarist; C. Jay Williams, treasurer; Robert Ellis, inner guard; John J. Harvey, outer guard, and George Irving, trustee for three years.

The election is to be held on the evening of January 4th. January 4th is not only election day but also the date of the annual meeting. The reports to be read on that date will show the great progress the organization has made during the past twelve months.

Star Overtakes Liner Aboard Airpiane

Pearl White was among the passengers who arrived in New York December 24 on board the Victoria from Bermuda. That in itself is not significant, but how Miss White caught the steamship eight miles at sea in order to keep a promise to be in New York for her Christmas dinner, is significant.

Miss White had promised to be at her Bayside home with her parents for Christmas dinner. The Victoria, upon which Miss White had booked accommodations, sailed from Bermuda at noon on December 22. Miss White arrived at the dock too late to get aboard. Majors Kitchsner and Heming, of the British Air Service, came to her rescue with an offer to take her to sea in a monoplane and set her aboard the vessel. Following Miss White's acceptance, the trip by plane was started. Eight miles out at sea the Victoria was overtaken. Miss White climbed down the aircraft's rope ladder to a life boat from which she boarded the liner.

Strong Cast Supports Miss MacDonald

An impressive cast has been assembled for the ninth Katherine MacDonald production for distribution by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which has been given the working title of "Stranger than Fiction." The picture is a serio-comedy melodrama a dramatic departure from the tone of Miss MacDonald's previous starring vehicles

Chief in the support of Miss MacDonald will be Wesley Barry David Winter will have the leading role. Jean Mumont, Wade Boteler Tom McGuire, Barry O'Conner and Evelyn Burns are also in the cast

Marion Philosophises

"I have been asked to give my views on the girl I play in my Cosmopolitan production," said Marion Davies recently, "of 'The Restless Sex' from the novel by Robert W. Chambers. I never have thought that large audiences actually prove the worth of pictures; still, it does make me happy to know of the large crowds that thronged the Criterion Theatre, New York City, where it first showed, and of the interest taken in 'The Restless Sex' in other towns and other States. So many thoughtful and brilliant people have written articles in the daily papers telling what effect 'Stephanie' had on them that I hesitate to say what I think. Not that I lack opinions on her. I studied her too long for that. But she is elusive. She gets away from me.

"Why should I wonder that she gets away from me—when she gets away even from herself? She is aimless as are all restless people. Her thoughts, if I may say so, 'shoot all round the place.' For aimlessness is the enemy of clean-cut thinking. Brought up by a doting father, surrounded by every luxury, including the luxury of not having to think for herself, she does not have to fight. The only fight she might and should make—the fight with herself—she does not try to make, because there seems to her at first no need for it. It is only when she finds herself face to face with bitter facts that she confronts her soul and asks herself: What are you doing with your life?

"It seems to me that after this, 'Steve's' chief asset in the struggle she makes in her honesty—honesty with herself and with the world—her world of two men whose lives so closely touch her own. She wins her battle, but one of the men is sacrificed—still, through no fault of hers. This sacrifice is the only grim note in a story of light; but the lesson seems to be there.

"So that is what I think about Stephanie. I think her experience is a warning against restlessness—against nervous, aimless, irreflective action—because she is so wonderfully equipped to be and to make others happy in every way save that."

Meaning of "Apocalypse"

WHAT is the significance of the word "Apocalypse?"

The question has been propounded so often in connection with Metro's production of the world-famous novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, that Webster may be called upon to answer it.

Webster's definition of the word is "a revelation; a disclosure." In the early Greek version of the Bible, the last book of the New Testament was called "The Apocalypse of St. John." In the later versions of the Bible, the book became the "Revelations" familiar to all present-day students of the book.

Pronunciation of the word, which also is shown by numerous correspondents of Metro's as an all but unsurmountable stumbling block, has been solved by Webster by placing the emphasis on the second syllable.

Visualizing the symbolic figures of "The Four Horsemen" which has baffled some of the world's greatest painters, finally has been accomplished for the colossal Metro production in a manner that ought to prove satisfactory to the most exacting. Probably the most interesting visualization of the "Horsemen" was found in Albrecht Durer's original set of wood etchings, done in the year 1511. The drawings, pictured during the age of religious zealots, were borrowed from their present owner who insisted that he personally act as their custodian during the weeks that they were used at Metro's West Coast studios as reference works.

The original wood-cuts, upon which art connoisseurs have refused to set a price, form but a small feature of a collection of art treasures that will be seen in the production. The total value set by insurance appraisers upon the tapestries, paintings and other borrowed art works is $450,000. It is generally agreed, however, that they could not be purchased at this, or any other price.

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," which is being directed by Rex Ingram, is being cut and edited preparatory for its first New York preview. June Mathis, who prepared the screen version of the story, will accompany the first print to New York for this preliminary showing to production officials and reviewers.

In its original book form "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has passed its 159th edition, having been read in every quarter of the civilized world. In its translation by Metro to the screen the epochal story is visualized by a cast of 12,500 persons, of whom there are two dozen principals. These include Alice Terry, Rudolph Valentino, Pomeroy Cannon, Edward Connelly, Mabel Van Buren and John Sainpolis. The production, by the time it is completed, will have cost a million dollars to make.

Tom Terriss—Director

TOM TERRISS, director of "Tom Terriss Productions" for Vitagraph, has consistently since his connection with that company, produced what is termed in motion picture circles as "successes."

Mr. Terriss started his affiliation with the Vitagraph company three years ago, first directing Alice Joyce, Corrinne Griffith and Earle Williams and has since then been awarded his own producing company bearing his name. With Miss Joyce he made such pictures as "The Lion And The Mouse," "The Third Degree," "The Cambric Mask," and "The Vengeance of Durand." With Miss Griffith, "The Climbers," and with Earle Williams, "The Fortune Hunter."

The first picture he made under his own producing company was "Trumpet Island," by Gouverneur Morris. Trade papers, newspapers and fan magazines were all unanimous in the praise of this production. The Vitagraph home office and the various exchange centers have received wires, letters and verbal congratulations on "Trumpet Island," from exhibitors all over the country, proclaiming it one of the real big successes of the year. This enthusiasm on the part of the critics is also true in England, where the trade publications were even more complimentary.

Following this, Mr. Terriss has presented the industry with another undoubted and proclaimed triumph in "Dead Men Tell No Tales." It is only necessary to repeat the above statement on "Trumpet Island," with even a little more emphasis to convey the idea of the splendid acceptance this picture received. The Vitagraph company launched the biggest advertising campaign in the history of the organization on behalf of it.

The criticisms are unusually favorable, one paper going as far as to say, "This production is one of the nearest to reach the goal of perfect pictures."

Mr. Terriss is now working on "The Heart of Maryland," the famous David Belasco play, in which Mrs. Leslie Carter made such a big success nearly twenty-five years ago. The cast for the screen version includes Catherine Calvert playing the title role, made famous by Mrs. Carter.

Mr. Terriss returned from the South recently, with his entire company, where they took scenes on the locations described in the play, where he managed to obtain a house owned by Jefferson Davis, used during the Civil War as the headquarters of the Confederate Army, to accentuate the realism.

Thrilling Stunts Seen in Hutchison Serial

Here are some of the stunts performed by Charles Hutchison in his new Pathe serial, "Double Adventure," as described in a statement from the Pathe organization: A jump across a wide ravine on a motorcycle; a hand-over-hand climb on a rope stretched across a deep cut in the rocks; a jump from a falling tower into a tree; a jump from one automobile to another as both machines travel at high speed; and an ascent, human-fly fashion, up the side of a twelve-story building.

Mr. Hutchison plays a double role in his new serial, the scenario of which was written by Jack Cunningham. W. S. Van Dyke directed the production.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"Ottauquechee Valley"

(Paramount—Post Scenic)

WHAT is considered to be the most picturesque spot in Vermont has been caught by the Post scenic cameramen. It is the valley of the Ottauquechee River which flows for thirty-five miles into the Connecticut River. The rural landscapes, the revelation, so to speak of an Old World atmosphere, compel admiration of the spectator. Winter scenes are revealed which take the onlooker on a journey into a veritable crystallized fairy-land. The narrow road which borders the river, the moonlight on the stream, the fences covered with snow, these form vistas which build fancies.

It is all the world like a wonderful landscape painted by one of the masters. An out of the way spot, and looked upon by the natives of Vermont as a marvelous tapestry of nature. The Green Mountains form sentinels in the background, as if to keep trespassers from robbing it of its charm. The picture is tinted in sepia tones, and is effective as an example of photographic art. Such an offering lends dignity to any program. The manager of the Rialto, New York, thought it fine enough for a place on the Christmas week bill. Length, one reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"His Day of Rest"

(Joe Martin—Universal)

JOE MARTIN is back again. In his latest comedy, the monkey comedian is a very busy fellow.

As the protector of his little pal, he is a very impressive hero of the old school, and when the occasion is ripe rescues her from the clutches of the evil one.

To accomplish this trick, which is the big moment in the reel, Joe is compelled to ride on the back of a "fast moving horse" behind his little leading lady, and when the villain catches up to the pair on his foaming steed, our hero surprises him by jumping from one horse to the other and climbing up the latter's back, subdues him in melodramatic fashion.

This situation is amusing from the fact that the monk's comedy riding is funny, and his struggle with his antagonist on the back of a galloping horse rather thrilling in that the spectator may have a feeling that should this wild chimpanzee or orang-outang forget that he is only acting, well——

Outside of the big scene, "His Day of Rest" is rather tame, as the monkey has little "monkey business" to do.—FRANK LEONARD.

"The Saddle King"

(Hoot Gibson—Universal)

THIS two-reeler is up to standard and should furnish patrons with plenty of excitement.

The story is of the usual Western variety and affords the star plenty of opportunity to display his ability as a hard riding, quick thinking cowpuncher of the West.

Gibson is seen in the role of a broken-down cowboy, who applies for work at one of the Western ranches. The boss agrees to hire the wanderer provided he can ride an unmanageable horse. Gibson consents, rides the horse and gets the job.

In accomplishing this stunt, he arouses the jealousy of the foreman, for the latter learns that the ranchman's daughter has seen the newcomer subdue the wild animal and is beginning to fall in love with him.

To prevent this the villain accuses his rival of many misdeeds, but in the end is a victim of his own folly.

"One Best Pet"

(Chester Comedy—Educational)

THIS Chester comedy exploits a young circus for its idea and manages to send shivers of suspense up tender spines—what with a few man-eating animals, namely, the tiger, and the lion. The educated monk is a member of the cast or troupe and effects a rescue act of baby for a fitting climax. There is a comedian who has a few pranks, attired, mostly au naturel, but he doesn't inspire great concern. That is left for the baby. He or she is carried up to a high building but the monk scales up the wall like a fly and comes down with perfect nonchalance. The lion buffets the players about and seemingly enjoys himself. Most of the humor is generated by the monk. He goes through his capers with the poise of an actor and certainly lives up to the title. "One Best Pet" is up to the Chester standard, which means that it furnishes a satisfying half hour. There is a constant thrill present because of the animals and the dangers in which the baby is placed. It should please any type of audience.—Length, two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Pahs and Papas"

(Chester Outing—Educational)

THIS reel deals with life among the Maoris of New Zealand.

Before entering the village, the cameraman shows us some delightful scenery along one of the large rivers of the island. These scenes are interesting and refreshing, the river being bordered on both sides by beautiful trees and ferns.

The views of the Maori village arouse interest from the fact that these tribes seem to be living the lives of their forefathers.

From their dress, customs and the ancient habit of building a stockade around the town one can easily imagine savage life as it existed in bygone ages.

This is augmented when subsequent scenes show their methods of existence. The totem poles, the architecture of their houses and their crude stone work, furnish interesting material.

Their dances, methods of warfare, feasts, etc., all enter into the day's work and are shown in a concise manner.

"Their First Tintype"

(Universal—Two Reels)

"THEIR FIRST TINTYPE" is one of the best slapstick comedies Universal has produced. It is chuck full of comedy incident, is well directed, and has a good cast, together with a chorus of pretty girls and a good comedy dog.

Although the thread of the story, if it may be called one, is lost in the general mixup, there need be no cause for alarm, as the injected situations contain many novel gags.

The fun begins when various characters pose before the camera in awkward and amusing attitudes. First is the village firemen who ridiculously poke their faces into the lens of the camera, and then the small man with his large well-fed wife, who seemingly cannot get "set," to be followed by other awkward characters.

The windup is a hodge-podge of comedy situations in which village firemen attempt to put out a fire with a hose which will not "act right."

The dog makes his entrance, seizes the hose, and in a series of humorous incidents, drags hose and fireman about the town.

"Their First Tintype" should give good satisfaction wherever played.—FRANK LEONARD.

"Sound Your A"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon Comedy—Fox)

WHETHER Fox has reissued this excellent cartoon subject or whether the Rivoli, New York, revived it for a purpose is not of importance here. What is the fact is that the orchestra at the New York temple of motion pictures has a great deal of fun with it. The piece has been elaborated to permit the trap drummer to engage Mutt and Jeff in discussion or argument or what you will. Mutt still sings "The Curse of an Aching Heart" and sends the house out in rivulets, rivers and oceans of tears until not even the orchestra is left and the theatre is thoroughly wet. He lingers and wants to sing again and asks the Rivoli to use its orchestra. Mutt calmly asks the leader to sit down—that he will conduct. But the trap drummer jazzes up the comedians and finally shoos them off the screen. If the Rivoli could do this stunt—it seems reasonable that any exhibitor could do so by simply substituting his name of his theatre for Rivoli. The cartoon in its new shape is provocative of uproarious laughter—what with the argument, the singing of Mutt and the effects of the trap-drummer.—Length one Reel.—LAURENCE REID.

"His Four Fathers"

(Vanity Christie Comedy—Educational)

ACTION dominates in this comedy and the result a combination of quick moving situations which mean very little to the spectator.

The script is written on the order of the old farce comedy which relied on funny situations, worked up by quick action.

"His Four Fathers" has the action but is minus the "set" situations which were always good for a laugh.

Hence the director in order to fill in has worked his scenes to a high pitch in the hope that the spectator's eye will be attracted by the movements of the actors, but has failed for the reason that there is nothing to back them up.

The reel is well directed, however, and has a good cast among whom are Laura La Plante, Irene Dalton, Neal Burns, Sidney Bracey and Jack Henderson.—FRANK LEONARD.

Jessen's Studio News by Wire

FIRST NATIONAL

David Hartford leaves this week for Northern California to film scenes in the snow country for his coming production of the James Curwood story, "The Golden Snare."

Mildred Harris's last picture under the present Louis B. Mayer contract will be put into production shortly after the first of the year.

Principals for second Sidney Franklin First National Production a picturization of Andrew Soutar's "Courage," have been selected, together with most of the players. Naomi Childers and Sam DeGrasse will have the leading parts and those so far named for the cast are Alec Francis, Adolph Menjou, Lloyd Whitlock, and Lionel Belmore. Continuity is being prepared by Franklin and Sada Cowan, and the production will be filmed at Brunton studios.

Charles Ray has made the last scenes for his fifth release titled "Scrap Iron," from the Charles Van Loan story. Ray also directed the making of this film and had the assistance of his cousin, Al Ray, well known in films.

While Marshall Neilan is in the East he will make a number of scenes for his production of "Penrod," which will star Wesley Barry. For this reason Neilan was accompanied by his business manager, Leeds Baxter, Production Manager Howard Hawkes and Cameraman David Keeson.

Anita Stewart and company have returned to the Louis B. Mayer studio after making the exteriors for "The Tornado" at Truckee, Cal. Those in the party in the North were Rudolph Cameron, manager, Walter McGrail, Herbert Rawlinson, Grace Forse, Robert Kurrle, cameraman, and a number of others.

B. P. Fineman has not given out the title for the next Katherine MacDonald production for which the cast has been selected. David Winter, who played the lead in "Trust Your Wife" with Miss MacDonald, will continue in that capacity in the coming production. Jean Dumond and Wade Botler will take heavy parts. By special arrangement with Marshall Neilan Wesley Barry will play an important kid role. Others in this cast are Tom McGuire, Harry O'Connor and Evelyn Burns.

Finding someone to look like Gladys Walton to play in "Rich Girl, Poor Girl" proved to be a difficult task. Above are the applicants. Miss Billie McCarthy, the sixth girl from the left in the upper row, was finally selected. Miss Walton is seated in the center

Mildred Harris, who returned to Los Angeles last week, will begin work in her last Louis B. Mayer production, "Flaythings of Desire," as soon as Director John M. Stahl arrives from the East. No cast has been named for this subject.

David M. Hartford is making the final necessary arrangements for the filming of the James Oliver Curwood story, "The Golden Snare." Locations which require trips aggregating 3,000 miles have been selected and many of the scenes for this Canadian story will be filmed among the snow-clad Rocky Mountain peaks.

Producer King Vidor and Catherine Curtis are doing the final editing of the Ralph Connor story, "The Sky Pilot."

FOX

William Russell's company has completed the last scenes for "Brute McGuire." They were filmed in the snow country in the high Sierras. The release title is "Bare Fists." J. P. Hogan directed.

Jules Furthman has completed the melodramatic farce, "The Blushing Bride," in which Eileen Percy is the featured player.

Jack Ford is making the last scenes for Buck Jones's current vehicle, "Fighting Back."

Emmett J. Flynn, producer of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," is to make another special entitled "Clung," from Max Brand's story. An all-star cast is now being assembled for this subject.

GOLDWYN

Leroy Scott, of Goldwyn's Eminent Authors' staff, has completed the writing of his first original screen play, "The Night Rose," at the Goldwyn studios. Arthur Statler is the continuity writer. Wallace Worsley has been selected to direct the picture production of this story. Leatrice Joy will play the leading part.

"A Tale of Two Worlds" is the title under which will be released Frank Lloyd's production of Gouverneur Morris' story, "The Water Lily." The picture version of the Morris story has been completed by Mr. Lloyd. His next production will be "The Alibi," from an original screen play written by Charles Kenyon.

Reginald Barker and his company have returned from Banff, Canada, where the company spent three weeks filming exteriors for Barker's current production of "Snowblindness." Owing to the absence of snow at Banff, it was necessary for the company to make a forty-mile trip every day by rail to Lake Louise in order to get the proper atmosphere for the snow scenes taken for the production. The company leaves again at once for the Yosemite Valley where they will spend a week in additional work on exteriors.

Clarence Badger has begun the direction of the new Will Rogers' stellar vehicle, "Whistling Dick," the O. Henry story.

Following the completion of "Mister Barnes from New York," Tom Moore left for New York on Friday of last week. He was followed on Monday of this week by Victor Schertzinger. They will take scenes in New York for Moore's next picture, entitled, "Made in Heaven," written by William H. Hurlburt.

E. Mason Hopper completes this week production work on Rupert Hughes' play, "Dangerous Curves Ahead," in which Helene Chadwick plays the featured role.

Goldwyn has purchased the screen rights to "The Bridle Path," the Thompson Buchanan stageplay. Richard Dix will play the leading part in the production, and Marcia Mannon has been engaged for the "heavy" role.

UNIVERSAL

Universal starts the new year with twelve companies ready to carry on the production work. Four screen plays will be put into production this week. Director Tod Browning is making "Fanny Herself." An all-star cast has been assembled for this picture. Edward Kull has started work on "Renunciation," a story written by Peter B. Kyne. Eileen Sedgwick is the featured player. Robert Thornby begins production work on "Blood Brother of the Pines," with Frank Mayo in the stellar role. William Worthington starts work on "Three at the Table," with Edith Roberts in the principal part. Harry Harris is beginning the filming of "The Bobbed Squab," with Glady Walton in the leading role. E. P. Heath wrote the continuity for "Blood Brother of the Pines."

Jack Perrin is starred in "Under Blazing Skies," Edward Laemmle is the director. Hoot Gibson is starred in "The Kickeroo," under the direction of Al Russell.

Century Comedies in the making are: "What's the Program," with an all-star cast under the direction of Chin Davis, and "The Dog Doctor," featuring a trick dog and an all-star cast under the direction of Fred Fishback.

METRO

Two casts for May Allison's new starring vehicle, "Big Game," has been completed. The line-up includes Forrest Stanley, Edward Cecil, Zeffie Pilbury, William Elmer and Sidney Dealbrook. Dallas Fitzgerald has been assigned as director of this production. The continuity is by Edward T. Lowe, Jr.

Tom Gallery has been engaged to play opposite Viola Dana in "Home Stuff," written by Agnes Johnson, and Frank Dazey. Al Kelly is the director. Robert Chandler has also been assigned to an important part in this picture.

HERE AND THERE

be starred by a new producing company on the Coast. The new organization is to be known as the Snowy Baker Productions and has been capitalized at $300,000. The organizers are Samuel E. Rork and William Selig. The company will distribute four productions made by Baker in Australia and will produce four more subjects, starring Baker during the coming year at the Selig studios. Mr. Rork organized the Katherine MacDonald Productions Company and has had a long career in the theatrical world.

Brunton has completed "The Avenging Arrow," the latest Pathe serial, starring Ruth Roland. W. S. Van Dyke was the director. The cast includes Edward Hern, Otto Lederer, Virginia Ainesworth, S. E Jennings and William Steel.

Hueling Mumpers of the Federal Photoplays has arrived on the Coast from New York.

Howard Hickman is now engaged in the directing of "A Certain Rich Man," from William Allen White's novel of the same title.

Announcement was made in Los Angeles this week of the organization of Truart Photoplays, Inc., which plan to produce a series of one-reel comedies, featuring Harry Mann. The company is capitalized at $40,000 and the organizers are Julius Lathenthal, J. Weinstock and J. Rossen. The company has offices in the American Bank Building, Los Angeles.

The name of the Lone Star Pictures Corporation organized in Texas recently has been changed to Alkire Pictures Corporation. This company maintains offices in the Mason Building, Los Angeles, and will make a series of five-reel subjects to be released through the Forward Film Distributors, Inc. Announcement of their first production is to be made early in January.

Chas. Edw. Russell at the Metro Studios

John Russell, the globe-trotting short story writer who is one of Metro's latest acquisitions to its corps of story producers on the West Coast, is playing host to his father, Charles Edward Russell, famous author and publicist, at Hollywood, California.

The father came direct from New York for the purpose of seeing his son and discussing with him the plans that the younger writer has formulated in connection with stories to be expressly written for the cinema. He was also interested in the film paraphernalia and technique, and made a tour of inspection through the Metro studios.

Hollywood Hokum

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's News

Rainy days are coming.

Irene Castle is coming West.

Herb Rawlinson is back from Truckee.

Dorothy Dalton is expected in January.

Harry Ravier has gone East with the last of Tarzan.

Eddie Cline is given credit by having Buster Keaton be funny by being natural.

Now that the mails are not weighed down with Christmas cards it may be expected that the bills will be coming in. Pity the poor postman.

Mickey Neilan had 57 men in his technical staff in making Bob Hampton of Placer, so he added one in order to have something on Heintz.

Clarke Irvine has left Maurice Tourneur and advises that he "intends to travel in foreign countries," which is going some for a press agent.

A cartoonist came in and drew us a picture of Bill Hart and some day if we can find enough guns we are going out and show the picture to Bill.

A piece of mimeograph copy brings us the information that "Frank Lloyd is the director with a soul." And here we have been thinking him as a Scotchman all these years.

Up to the time of going to press we have no record of any New Year's resolutions by members of the film industry being broken. (Press day was prior to January 1st.)

Jess Robbins is having Jimmy Aubrey frisk about in a picture called "The Blizzard," and Jesse tells us that this has nothing to do with that feature coming on named "The Tornado."

The negro janitor at Vitagraph cannot understand what kind of bones were used by the man who wrote Antonio Moreno's play "Three Sevens," and Chet Bennett promises to make an explanation.

No fan need to send any sympathy to Wally Reid for the part he plays in "Anatol," where he is the center of the affections of such beauties of filmdom as Gloria, Bebe, Wanda—but why name more?

Hokum takes this opportunity of being the first publication West of the Rockies and South of the parallel of the Mason and Dixon Line to welcome S. Barrett McCormick. But what we want to know is what the "S" stands for.

Six stories received in so many days from Bill Keefe advise us that Florence Lawrence is going to work in "The Unfoldment." Incidentally Bill is Manager of Productions of the Producers Picture Corporation.

June Mathis did so well with the Spanish author's story—we mean "The Four Horsemen," that Metro is now having her try her hand at a French autnor s story. Yes, June is doing he continuity for "Camille" — Nazimova's next.

Gertrude Atherton claims that she had a great deal of interest in the recent presidential election, but upon being questioned closer, it was learned she referred to the Goldwyn presidential election, and not the Harding-Cox contest.

The next Emerson - Loos production requires a vamp, and the producers, John and Anita, examined 200 vamps before the right one was selected, that is what the P. A.'s copy says. But for the life of us, we don't know what you mean by saying "examined."

Metro is going after the last wonder of nature that has not been filmed and a statement issued this week is to the effect that Aurora Borealis is to be starred in "Unchartered Seas," while up to this time we thought that Alice Lake was the star.

Hokum seldom makes predictions, but from what we have heard of Harry Myers in connection with "Connecticut Yankee" praise, we want to guess that he is going to be a busy little fellow for the next year, for as a 12 o'clock fellow in a 9 o'clock town—well King Arthur's Court never even had a candle lighted.

John Emerson did not have all the members of the Screen Writer's Guild rush up and kiss him when he suggested they join the American Federation of Labor. Imagine a screen writer cheering for an eight-hour day. John's idea was said to be a good one by some. In this decision, Hokum wishes to sit right on top of the fence.

Just when Regg Barker and his troupe thought they were going to get to spend Christmas in Canada where they have no Eighteenth Amendment but instead, penty of snow, Regg took the last scene and they all started home to be in Los Angeles by the night of the 31st of December, which by some is referred to as New Year's Eve.

Sir Gilbert Parker, a Canadian and for fifteen years a member of the House of Commons, made the statement in public that he thought it was a greater honor to have his name on a successful photoplay than to serve fifteen years in the House of Commons. This should cause a lot of politicians to go to work at writing scenarios.

Universal has gone the limit in realism by putting $12,000 worth of glass in a set. It was all plain plate glass and we always thought that anything transparent would not photograph but would show what was on the other side. Hokum may be a little old fashioned, but we cannot see through this.

Elsie Ferguson, the Globe-trotting Paramount star, has been questioned by reporters of all of our local Dailies, and by each was asked about California. "Do you love California?" said one. Another day the question came, "Don't you Love California?" And then a sob-sister came along and said, "I am sure you LOVE California!" So what could dear Miss Ferguson say, but that "Yes, I do L-O-V-E California."

We just learned of a new graft in our industry and it is so good we can't keep it. If a dirty scene is to be made—one that is made up of mud, water, etc., the actor wears a $20. suit and puts in a bill for a $100.00 sult. Members of the feminine gender have been known to wear last winter's hat and charge the next winter's prices. Just like it had arrived the day before from Paris.

Metro needed a be-whiskered bunch for "Big Game"—May Allison's next, and had to pay the extras while they grew them, which in our minds, (plural) is really a heaven for the extras, and should Russia begin the making of pictures on this basis Bolshevism would disappear, not saying the extras are Bolshevists, of course, but merely pointing out another opportunity of our infant indutry. As a Nation the safety razor has advanced us beyond the Bolshevism point.

There promises to be an epidemic of titling pictures with derivatives of the word "kiss." We have heard of one to be known as "Kisses," another "Five Kisses," and the other evening we laughed at "Kiss Me Quick," all of which reminds us of the epidemic of the use of the word "Hell" which floated through the industry and caused the City Councilor of Portland to pass an ordinance to keep the word off the billboards, but that is going from the sublime to the ridiculous.

The Editor of Hokum was given a most gracious surprise, by mail, this week when one of the big organizations that syndicate the highest class of dope to newspapers throughout the land had Uncle Sam bring us a message which inquired if we, the Editor, would care to permit them to have all of the newspapers that they furnish reprint "Hollywood Hokum" in a conspicuous place in such publications. The proposition has not been accepted, because they did not offer as much money as some other writers we know of get for their contribs. We believe that Hokum is just about the best journalistic effort in the land and consequently it should be paid for at rates in proportion to its quality. Negotiations are not off. We expect to go in conference by mail and feel assured that this gigantic syndicate will come to our terms.

Hokum received a dissertation on the good and evil effects of the vampire by no less a person than Katherine MacDonald, but inasmuch as it does not all agree with our views we won't print it. Nothing like being in a position to throttle the press.

Row Lee (he's not a Chinese just an Ince Director) thought he caught a fish and after tugging for three hours found that it was a deep sea diver's suit dangling in the water at the end of a line from the other side of the boat. Really a true fish story.

As Charlie Ray is now making a pugilistic story we may expect to learn that he has caused the studio to be thoroughly equipped with training paraphernalia—in short turning the place into a "gym." (Anticipating the news in advance makes it possible to give our readers the news before it's news.)

Press Agents have been very busy in the past week writing wreck stories and some surmise that these were the result of a heavy sea being reported by the San Pedro Harbor's Weather Department. The expected storm was side-tracked, but the avalanche of wreck stories come right on.

John McCormick (not the well-known tenor) but the genial publicity purveyor of First National W. C. compliments Hokum on the amount of stuff appearing in its columns about his favorite distributing organization, all of which might lead us to carry another item about John's people.

The gang of P. A.'s and writers for the screen were called together last week for another screamer's dinner. Everyone was confidentially told to bring their own brew, and a good time was reported to have been had by all. C. Irvine promoted the entertainment which was held at the California Country Club.

We don't remember whether Hokum announced the arrival of Peter Gridley Smith, but in the event this important item was overlooked in previous editions. we wish to state now that he is here to make California his permanent home.

"New Theatres"

Pages 571-592

Foyer of New California theatre, Bakersfield, Cal.

A Moving Picture Theatre is a store with just one kind of merchandise to sell the public—good pictures.

Better Pictures Mean Larger Audiences

Screen, projection machine, film and lamp all contribute to the quality of the pictures but the light source is of prime importance.

Arc lamps operate more efficiently on direct current and produce a steadier, whiter light. To secure direct current from an alternating current supply, reduce it to the proper voltage, and eliminate interruptions between reels, the General Electric Company recommends the motor-generator compensarc shown above:

1. A motor generator connected to any supply voltage, either alternating or direct current and delivering direct current to the projection lamps at the proper current and voltage.

2. Motor starting device which starts the motor generator and automatically shuts it off when lamps are extinguished.

3. Control panel with ammeter for reading current and field rheostat by which the current at the arc can be increased or decreased.

4. Two short circuiting switches mounted on the projector pedestals to enable the operator conveniently to shift from one lamp to the other, without interruption between reels.

Emergency equipment: .It is also advisable to use A. C. Compensarcs (5) connected to the lighting circuit for use in case of failure of the power circuit to which the motor generator is connected.

With such equipment an exhibitor is assured of the best possible quality of light for his pictures. Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable.

New Mission Theatre Suggests Architecture of Old Spain

Interior Is Treated in Subdued Tones of Browns and Reds

ON Wednesday night, December 1, 1920, the Mission theatre, Los Angeles, opened its doors in a formal opening to which a brilliant audience was invited. The playhouse was crowded to the doors, and the visitors represented probably a couple of billion dollars and all the journalism in the world of Cinematographic effort.

It was a great occasion. Mayor Snyder was there in vocal eulogy and paid tribute to Los Angeles' climate, Los Angeles' enterprise and Los Angeles' civic pride, not forgetting to commend the builders of the Mission theatre and pronouncing their creation the most beautiful into which his steps had ever ventured.

Douglas Fairbanks was there, too, as was appropriate, since it was his latest picture, "The Mark of Zorro," that gave and took honors of premiere significance on a silver sheet of virgin newness. Mary Pickford was likewise in a loge seat, and the center of such attention as was competent to remain focused on her dear self, with the athletic and energetic Doug at her side to divide the gaze. One reporter could hardly be expected to list the names of the Cinema stars that had gathered, for the attendance was like a roll-call from the Motion Picture Blue Book, with everybody that was anybody answering "present."

There is positive inspiration back of the creation of the Mission theatre; it is not too much to say that its façade will sell tickets at its box-office. The theatre invites attention and beguiles into a purchasing mood the imagination of the passer-by. It radiates a restful, radiant spirit of the days ere the Gringo came to make money and mar dreams. Inside, images are evoked from California's distant past—images that might step in or out of David Belasco's immortal setting of Richard Walton Tully's perennially fresh "Rose of the Rancho."

There is a note in the souvenir programme issued by the Mission theatre that compasses this thought. It says: "The Mission theatre rises a reminder of those days when Drama was Daughter of the Church—a wayward daughter and saucy, perhaps, but beguiling, human and prone to seek the light. As did the Missions of old, so does the Mission theatre of today aspire to be the center of culture and the arbiter of good taste and distinction in artistic ministrations, conserving and preserving so far as it can those influences that still come down the centuries to link us with the past, the while we confidently look into the future made more brilliant in contemplation of this newest of arts that man has created out of beams of light."

To one accustomed to the garish display of the average motion picture theatre where every dollar spent is made to look like two, the artistic restraint, the economy of good taste, the unostentatious display of beauty and the admirable harmony abroad in the structure are qualities that mark a revolution in motion picture theatre construction. Every effort has been made towards achieving a uniformity of impression—that of a banquet hall in some old California castle of a Spanish nobleman. No attempt has been made to suggest Mission Church style of architecture on the interior, and, of course, no attempt has been made to duplicate the garish color effects produced by the pigments Indian made and laid on with more zeal than discretion. The prevailing tones are brown, lit up with gold and raised to a still cheerier key by the presence of reds. Between the wide-parted pilasters and circling the room on its three sides are windows, the casements of which are beveled to suggest the thick walls of adobe, characteristic of the period and the type. Fronting the windows are idealized bars of colored and symmetrical beauty, and from the windows flow beams of light, constantly shifting in hue from the violet of before-dawn mystery to the modified glare of a California noon or a California poppy.

Stretching in front of orchestra pit and screen and stage, and falling just outside the proscenium arch, is a curtain of yellow gold, into the molten folds of which flow beams of color from a distant projecting machine until the curtain seems a thing alive and emanating, instead of absorbing, light. It glows like a frozen, golden sheet of solid metal, or it shimmers with no more of substantial fabric than would

The 32' Bourdon Pipe

THE pipe which contains Ann (left hand photograph) measures 21 inches by 24 inches by 32 feet long. It is made of number one clear pine three inches in thickness and contains approximately 725 board feet of lumber. The little pipe which is seen in its mouth is rather misleading. The thin stem or foot is merely a wind conductor which conveys the wind to the bottom of the pipe. The lower portion of the wood work which shows white in the photograph is also merely a wind conductor, and the vibrating portion commences from the mouth or small hole in the center of this pipe. Both this and the large pipe are members of the Flute family and are seven octaves apart. Contrary to general expectations, the large pipe will yield a soft but very pervading tone. Most people think that such a pipe is apt to blow the roof off, but quite the contrary is the case. It may be used as a very deep bass in conjunction with the softest stops on the organ, but although it is soft enough for this purpose, the tone is so rich that the addition of this one pipe to the full organ will be noticeable.

The column of air in the big pipe vibrates at approximately sixteen vibrations per second and the little pipe in its mouth does its bit at the rate of 2,048 a second. The average bass singer can sing with good volume a low F, which can be depicted in musical notation as the first space beneath the bass clef. When he accomplishes this he is rather proud of it and feels entitled to applause, providing he can sing it loudly. The C below this F is what is known as "8-foot C," which is the pitch of the lowest C on an average organ keyboard, which is based on an 8-foot basis. This note will be the second line below the bass clef. The large pipe yields a tone two octaves lower than this.

A great many people, although having ears well trained to ordinary musical tones, find great difficulty in recognizing the correct pitch of the lower notes on a 32-foot stop. Of course they are aware that there is a decided vibration taking place, but they have no means of knowing the exact pitch of the note. Some cynic has termed a 32-foot as an "expensive draft," and when heard by itself there may be truth in the statement, but then the lower notes on a Bull Fiddle are not exactly thrilling, but we must all admit that they have their place in modern music. Were it not the case, Mr. Rothwell, of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra, would not hire eight of them at about seven dollars per Bull, and if he could get any instrument to play at as low a pitch as our 32-foot pipe, it would undoubtedly be used in the modern Symphony Orchestra. This one pipe takes about 150 cubic feet of air per minute to blow it.

Rye, N. Y., to Have Community Theatre

A THOROUGHLY community motion picture theatre is now in process of construction at Rye, N. Y., which, when it is completed, will be one of the most attractive theatres of its size in New York state. A company known as the Rye Playhouse, Inc., has been formed and has the backing of $150,000. There are 97 stockholders, all residents of the town of Rye.

E. H. B. Watson, one of the directors, in telling a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS of the plans, said: "When the stock was all subscribed, we found we had 97 stockholders. We had the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker and everybody you could think of. We also let the millionaires in, but no one took enormous blocks of stock. Rye didn't have a playhouse and the idea of giving the people of our vicinity the finest playhouse in Westchester County appealed to everybody in the town."

The most prominent corner in the town has been selected for the site and the construction has already started. The building will cost between $80,000 and $90,000. The land is valued at $60,000. The architecture will be Colonial design. Red brick will be used, together with white Colonial pillars. Every latest improvement from the standpoint of ventilation and fire protection will be provided.

An electrical organ costing about $10,000 will also be installed. The seating capacity will be about 700 and there will be boxes provided with wicker chairs for parties. Smoking will be permitted in these boxes. Flanking the entrance will be two attractive stores. The building will be two stories high. It is expected that the house will be ready for showings in February.

suffice to make a spider web or a moonbeam. In its most gorgeous manifestation it avoids the garishness of a vulgar display with complete success, and in its least material expression it eludes description as easily as moonlight playing on a bubble.

At a properly identified instant in the programme the curtain parts and reveals stage, proscenium arch, orchestra pit, with the instrumentalists all ready to begin like the fairy in Gautier's dream of "As You Like It." This fairy-land effect is established by two limpid cascades of water running from an unseen source and reaching a pool that fronts the orchestra pit and stretches clear across the theatre from right to left-hand aisle. The water, with a barely perceptible gurgle, flows softly over a fairy-river bed of jewels set in opal, and the jewels blaze beneath the ripples that are cut by their facets. Rich drapes help frame this picture and complete the effect of mystery and charm out from whence shortly flows majestic organ music or crisp and sonorous expressions from the orchestra.

To direct the orchestra, the Mission theatre has "imported" Dr. Carlos De Mandil, whose presence in the music world of Cinema endeavor is one of the highest compliments that can be paid the art. Dr. DeMandil is a first prize, gold-medal-bearing artist from the Paris Conservatoire, who, after concertizing throughout Europe and directing orchestras in Paris, Vienna and Moscow, was brought to the United States to direct the orchestra that was being organized when the Metropolitan Grand Opera House was considered as a potential picture palace and was to have been opened as such.

If Dr. DeMandil were not too individual to inspire such a title, he might be called "the Paderewski of the Violin," for to a musicianship of acknowledged supremacy he conjoins a genius for showmanship that promises to make him the idol of the masses as well as the admired of the discriminating critic and expert in tone.

Jesse Crawford is the installing organist, and says that the instrument in the Mission theatre is the finest organ he has ever played upon, and this, he asserts, is not a dutiful expression of a perfunctory approval, but the enthusiastic comment of a musician competent by experience to make correct and unbiased appraisal of pipe-organs.

Following the presentation of the Fairbanks picture, Architect Frank Meline, Electrical Engineer Paul Guerin of the Sennett Studios, Martin Syvertsen, decorator, Mrs. Violet Schofield, who fabricated the drapes and the costumes of the nattily dressed usher-girls, were the recipients of a chorus of congratulations for the creation of "something new under the sun."

Chief credit for the completed Mission theatre is, however, withheld for Mr. H. O. Davis, to whom this tribute is paid in the Mission's souvenir program:

"Back of every realized dream there stands a creator as well as a dreamer. In the case of the Mission theatre the two are one; the visualization of this architectural conception is the accomplishment mainly of him who designed and supervised every item that has gone into the unique picture playhouse. From façade to back wall, from ceiling, hidden lights to soft luxurious carpet, everything that has been assembled in the structure is the result of the selection, design and conception of Mr. H. O. Davis, who has co-ordinated the multitudinous elements into an entirety of realized beauty and artistic fitness."

Loring Opens in Minneapolis

The Loring theatre, Minneapolis' latest motion picture house, was opened with a packed house December 4, and met with instant popularity. The Loring, named after C. M. Loring, a pioneer who presented parks and playgrounds to the city, is a "neighborhood theatre," set in the residential section.

"The theatre around the corner" applies to the Loring, but it differs from most outlying theatres by being a film palace of beauty and comfort. It was built by the Twin City Amusement Trust Company, and is being managed by Finkelstein & Ruben, with Charles Toerey a managing director.

Equaling the beauty of the house wa the excellent music provided by the ne house orchestra, under the direction o Fred Heiseke, formerly of the New Lyri theatre. The orchestra, of ample propor tions, supplements a pipe organ, one o the best installed in the Northwest in re cent years. The instrument was built b the Kilgren Organ Company of St. Louis George Haupt serves acceptably as or ganist.

The Loring theatre is a Minneapolis in stitution. It was designed by Minneapoli architects and constructed by Minneapoli contractors. In the interior decoration and arrangements particular attention ha been paid to comfort of patrons. Th stage is set in a niche formed by eigh marble pillars set in pairs, and over th stage is a dome of buff decorated with floral design in blue and red. The light ing effects, which were selected onl after the most careful investigations o theatre construction from coast to coas enhance the decorative effect without be coming garish.

In the seating arrangement the man agement has sacrificed additional capac ity to the comfort of the patrons. Wid aisles lead between the sections and th space between the seats is wider than tha of any other theatre in the city.

The decorative effect of peacock panel which marks the walls of the interior be gins at the lobby and is carried ou throughout the entire structure.

From the lobby on either side lead tw wide stairways in marble to the balcony which has been so constructed that th view is perfect from every seat.

Usual High Standard Maintained in Latest House to Be Opened

Beauty, novelty and safety are terms that can be justly applied to the Newark Rialto theater, situated at 915 Broad street, Newark, New Jersey, another link in the large chain of theaters controlled and directed by Max Spiegel, of the Mitchell-Mark Corporation of New York. The Newark Rialto corporation consists of Max Spiegel, president, and William Rafferty, of Syracuse, N. Y., secretary-treasurer. Mr. Spiegel has great faith in Newark as this is the third house built by him in this city. His first was the Strand, a modern playhouse in every detail, and later the Newark theater, then came the Rialto.

Designed by Thos. R. Lamb, of New York, the Rialto's main entrance is on Broad street opposite the City Hall. To gain access to the auditorium, one passes through a lobby more than 100 feet in length. The walls of this lobby are covered by Sienna marble with numerous columns breaking what would otherwise be a monotonous surface. Opening at right angles from the west end of the corridor in a broad foyer extending under rear of the auditorium as far as the north wall of the house. From this two gently sloping aisles lead to the center of the auditorium, the rear seats which can be reached not only from them, but from two broad and easily mounted stairways, which, besides the utilitarian purpose, help to impart the dignity and beauty to the foyer. Midway in the latter and extending under the rising floor of the auditorium is a lounging room equipped with a fireplace and other furnishings that invite rest.

It is in the auditorium itself that the architect has carried out his ideas of results that give a novel and pleasing aspect to the place. Instead of erecting the usual balcony and gallery, he has used the space that might be occupied by them as a continuation of the main floor. From the orchestra pit the seats rise upward to a broad and central cross aisle, back of which they again rise by easy graduations to the rear wall. By this arrangement the audience is made to appear as a unit and no section of it can feel that it is wearing the roof for a bonnet, or that it lacks breathing space.

The ceiling over the auditorium is constructed on the interlocking arch plan, the sections of the arches narrowing as they rise upward to the central ventilator from which a handsome chandelier is suspended. Mural paintings adorn the half-circle spaces formed by the arches as they spring from the sidewalls, and the flat surfaces below them are covered by velvet embossed satin hangings in panel effect and maroon in color, which contrasts well with the ivory and silver tinting used elsewhere in the decorative scheme.

The stage, half circular in shape, is given a dignified and stately appearance by the groups of columns bordering it and supporting the curved ceiling. In the center of the orchestra pit is the console of the organ built by the Austin Company of Hartford, Conn., and equipped with three manuals, twelve stops and twenty-three mechanical combinations. The pipes have been placed in fireproof chambers back of the walls on both sides of the stage. There is an orchestra of fifteen men with George H. Morgenroth, of Newark, as director.

The projection booth, which overhangs the rear of the auditorium, is one of the most complete in the state. There are three Simplex machines used which throw a picture 20 x 20 on a mirroroid screen. The throw is 130 feet. James Young and Gus

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Importance of Selecting Proper Generating Equipment

To Get Better Pictures Requires Better Current Control

BY A. D. CAMERON

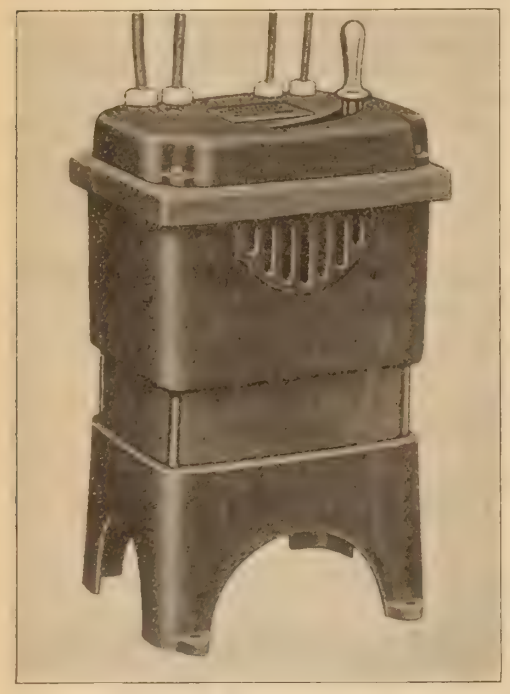
The Smaller Theatres, Too

First class projection need not be confined to the expensively equipped theatres. BETTER PICTURES are within the reach of the smallest exhibitor. The G. E. Compensarc for use with the alternating current arc is a simple inexpensive device with many of the advantages of more costly equipment. It saves current on account of its effective resign; it eliminates flicker by varying the current without a break in the circuit. It will not burn out even though the lamp carbons are left in contact indefinitely. Its design is compact, substantial and simple. In the past, it has been capable of a range from 30 to 60 amperes but plans are now under way for a larger size to handle 80, 100 and 120 amperes. This latter development is particularly interesting for use as emergency equipment in theatres where motor generators are normally operated.



Meeting the Changing Conditions

The demand for brighter pictures at greater throws and with more house lighting, has resulted in the standardization of a G. E. motor generator Compensarc for 100 amperes and for 125 amperes. The varying locations for these sets in the theatre have called for automatic starting and remote control devices by which the machines may be started and stopped from the projection booth or the office. The extreme load required to carry powerful projection arcs has necessitated the use of motor generator sets which require a low starting current and are not objectionable to the power companies. The practice of using films of various densities in rapid succession, such as cartoons, colored features and prints of normal density has made necessary a field rheostat of sufficient range to enable the projectionist to vary his current instantaneously; with an accurate ammeter mounted on the panel to record the current and to indicate the limits of the set. The panel itself has been adapted to modern wiring methods and the door on the side of the cabinet gives access to the connections for inspection and test after installation.

In general, every effort has been made to insure the reliability and uninterrupted operation of the projection equipment during all conditions of service.

Projection Room of New Howard Theatre Is Surpassed by None in the South

Lucas Theatre Supply Co. Had Charge of Equipment for This Well Arranged Room

WHILE column after column have been justly devoted toward describing the elegance and splendor of the Howard theatre, Atlanta's new million dollar motion picture temple which incidentally concedes to eclipse anything previously attempted in theatre construction, the one important but least mentioned feature—the operating booth—must not be overlooked.

The booth in the Howard is exactly 25 x 20 feet and consists of the following equipment:

Three special type "S" motor driven Simplex projectors, one special make Hakilu double dissolving stereopticon, one special make spot lamp, two double hundred ampere Hertner transverters, two special fireproof film cabinets with a capacity of 12 double 14¾-inch reels, one special film inspection and rewind table, complete with rewinders and unique mending machines.

In addition, there is a special panel board directly in front of each machine which contains volt and ampere meters and a special speed indicator which is connected in series with similar indicators in the orchestra, pit, stage and manager's office and a small generator on the machine, driven from the shutter shaft.

By referring to these indicators the projectionist, manager, musical director and stage manager can instantly and simultaneously tell exactly at what speed the picture is being run and how many feet of film is traveling past the aperture per minute.

This is, of course, very essential in large houses with augmented orchestras and enables perfect syncronism of the music with the picture on the screen.

The three Simplex machines, spotlight and dissolver are handsomely enameled in battleship gray with trimmings beautifully nickeled, while the projectors are equipped with pilot lights in the lamp houses, special footage registers, etc. A specially built series of change over switches are also included in the equipment and a very novel as well as safe set of fire door releases have been installed.

The review room, where all film productions are displayed and timed one week in advance, is also equipped with two motor driven Simplex projectors of the Mazda type, as well as a complete set of speed indicators.

A specially made Minusa gold fibre screen, with a picture surface of 17 x 22.6, and an unusual display of artistic lobby display frames, constitute the equipment which was furnished by the Lucas Theatre Supply Company, all of which was engineered and installed by projection experts under the personal supervision of Harry K. Lucas.

In commenting on this unusual installation, Mr. Lucas had this to say: "Of course, we are proud that the opportunity of engineering and equipping the projection booth, as well as the lobby and stage, of the country's finest theatre, fell to us, but at the same time we had absolutely no feeling of doubt regarding the contract, realizing that the builders of this remarkable temple of the motion picture were desirous of obtaining the best, regardless of cost. At the same time we were confident that our reputation for the successful handling of such projects was so well known as to make it a practical certainty that the "House of Lucas" would get the award, especially in view of the fact that the owners of the Howard were familiar with the high type merchandise that we handled, as well as the big list of the South's most representative theatres which my company has had the honor to completely equip during the past few years."

"The day of experimenting with questionable equipment has passed," said Mr. Lucas. "In days gone by exhibitors were inclined to buy a part of their equipment there and another part here, accept the advice of almost anyone, buy from the cheapest store and let the town electrician do the installing. But those were sad and expensive days and such conditions seldom exist during these advanced stages. My experience with the present type showman is that he prefers taking his chance with an old and well established concern which has some real achievements to their credit. Of course, it apparently costs more to have experts take care of the complete job of projection room installation, but in the end it is really cheaper. You get expert service and advice, a guaranteed and finished contract with the absence of all worries or anxieties, usually associated with such work."

Mock Lays Out Pantages Projection

ASCHER BROTHERS' Portage Park Theatre, which opened last December 11th, through the untiring efforts of George Mock, the expert Ascher projectionist, has one of the most completely equipped projection rooms in the Middle West.

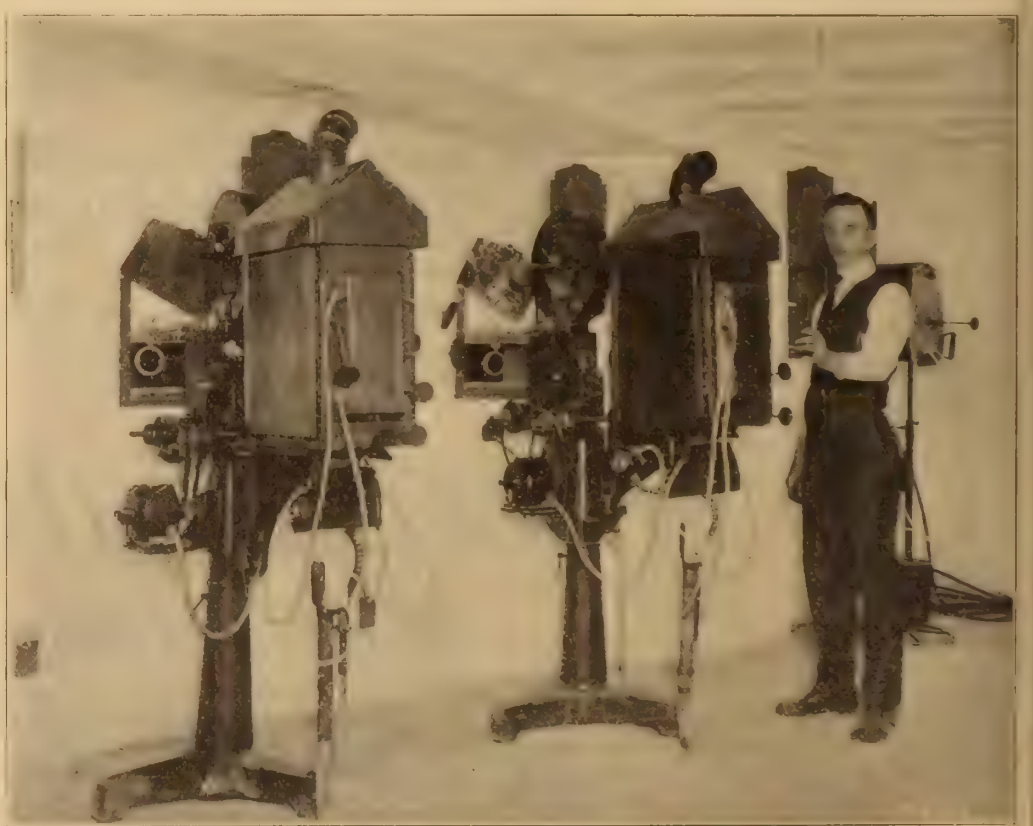
chine Company, through one of its dealers, The Mid-West Theatre Supply Company, equipped the theatre with two Type-S Projectors. These were considered by Mr. Mock, to be the best machine to use to get a good, clear picture in a throw of one hundred and thirty-two feet.

Realizing that the public has been educated up the point of expecting constant and brilliant illumination on the screen, two Peerless Automatic Arc-Controls were installed—one for each machine.

A large room, very well ventilated, houses the projectors; and one of the things that strikes the visitor, upon entering, is the clean, ship-shape appearance of this important unit of the theatre. Everything has been arranged and so located that the operator can give the finest projection with the least difficulty.

The projection room has had special attention in respect to fire risk. It is positively fireproof. The openings are equipped with fireproof drop shutters. No detail as to the temporary storage of films has been neglected.



Mr. Mock is to be congratulated in the fine arrangement of his work room.

Rectified Current Burns Carbons Like Wood

H. G. S., Iowa: I have a rectifier which was equipped with a 30 amp. bulb. This globe was broken and I ordered a new one. They sent me a 50 amp. tube by mistake. This proves very unsatisfactory as it burns the carbons like wood. I can reduce the amperage by removing a wire from one post to another. Is that what should be done?

Reply: Here is another case of altogether insufficient information. We have no means of knowing what make of rectifier you have. If it is a G-E or a Westinghouse the cycle of operations is the same, but the method of solving your trouble would be described differently. Please write back and tell us the make of your rectifier and the location of the terminal which you changed. It is possible that in changing over the terminal you did the correct thing, on the other hand it may be the one thing you should not do. In the meantime why not get some 50 amp. d. c. carbon sets and use them. This would give you, perhaps, more light than you would want, but it would at least prevent the overheating of the carbons.

Expert Says Hook-Up Is Not Possible

F. W., North Bend, Wash., has a variety of troubles. He writes:

I'm writing you to get your opinion of the hook-up diagram which I am sending you. As you can see I have a three-way service line, 220 volts, 60 cycle, single-phase current through it.

At present I have only one compensarc and have to steal my light when changing-over. The local electricians say that I cannot use the hook-up that I speak of. I fail to see any reason why I cannot, and the electricians fail to give any reason why I cannot. Will you please pass your judgment on it? I do not want to hook up another compensarc and have the system go "flooey" on me.

I am working as chief for two houses, both run by the same man, one in North Bend, and the other in Snoqualmie. At North Bend I have a Powers 6A and a Simplex. A rectifier supplies direct current to the arc, but I have to steal at the change-over. At Snoqualmie I have two Powers 6Bs, and am using A. C. I am throwing a thirteen-foot picture at seventy feet onto a Minusa gold fibre screen. A dead black velvet border helps the definition of the picture considerably.

At Snoqualmie the operating room is 12 x 12 x 9. It has a large vent in it, and is nearly as cool as the auditorium. The only bad points are the floor and the observation ports. The floor is made of 2 x 4, laid edgeways. It was put up in a hurry, and no attention paid to leveling it or making it smooth. It is impossible to clean it. The observation ports are put in sideways, and are so high that to see the bottom of the picture, the operator must stand on tip-toes, if he gets as far from the well as the lamphouse. The other ports are so high that I have my two Powers sitting on 2 x 6 nailed to the floor. One of the machines is a little unsteady, and the effect on the screen is slight, but I can notice it standing down near the screen.

Another trouble I have with my projection is outside light on the screen. The town council passed an ordinance that cars must be parked on the railroad lot, off the street. The cars are always parked with the lights toward the show, and if a lobby curtain is pulled aside a little, all this light shines on the screen when the doors are opened. One night a car parked itself right where the light could do most damage, then a handsome young man walked into the show and engaged the head usher in conversation. He managed to open the door and hold it open. When the door was opened, the H. Y. M. in the car turned on his spot-light. The manager wasn't in, and I had to stop the show and go downstairs and wake up the head usher.

Reply: Your local electrician was only half right when he said that your proposed hook-up was not possible. He should have said that it was not practical. It is possible, but for reasons given in the paragraphs that follow it would not be advisable to run in that manner.

The three-wire single-phase circuit is ob-obtained by taking the middle point of the transformer winding (that is, the transformer that feeds your theatre) and calling it the neutral. The voltage between the outside wires will then be 220 volts, and between either outside wire and the neutral, 110 volts. "F. W." has merely taken two compensarcs and connected each one to a leg of his three-wire service. It is unnecessary to reproduce the diagrams here.

Now in a system of this sort it is necessary for one or more reasons that the load on each "leg" be approximately the same. By "leg" we mean the two wires comprising either outside wire and the neutral. In your hook-up this would not be possible unless you operated both arcs continuously, which would certainly be unwise and exceedingly expensive. In practical operation you would burn one arc during a reel, and then strike the other preparatory to change over. Thus one-half of the three-wire system would be carrying the full load for 15 minutes at a time. This would be a 100 per cent unbalanced system, a condition which is not practicable.

It would not be practicable for these reasons: An unbalanced load loads the two sides unevenly, causing greater heating in one-half of the transformer coils than in the other. It also is apt to cause high voltage on the lightly loaded side and low voltage on the other. If there were no other devices on the separate "legs" this in itself would be of little consequence, but if the projection room lighting system happened to be connected to the side with the high voltage, the bulbs would burn out quickly. On the other hand, supposing the fan motor was connected to the same side with the compensarc being used. The voltage being low would mean that the current used would be greater and as heating of conductors carries according to the square of the current this factor would soon make itself felt in burnt out coils. By "square of the current" we mean that if the current increased until it was twice as great the heating would be four times as great.

You state that your lobby lights are on the same service wires. Under the unbalanced condition the lobby would be alternately lighted very brightly and very dimly, according to whether they were connected to the "leg" being used or to the other.

But why bother with this hook-up when you can get a couple 220-volt compensarcs and connect both across the outside wires in multiple With this arrangement you can run two arcs at the same time with no trouble from unbalancing. Then you can distribute your lobby and exits lights and your exhaust fan across the 110-volt legs until they balance.

No one can say that you do not work under difficulties. When you read in the trade papers about other rooms that have battleship linoleum on the floor and extra-sized port holes it must make you envious. There is no excuse for the condition of your room. It just goes to show that the builder had no consideration for his projectionists, and that he was under the impression that the projectors would give a perfect picture under any and all conditions. Can't you get your manager to lay on a layer of ½-inch sheathing over the 2 x 4's? That would fix you up with the best of them.

Write, sketch, or draw directly onto glass as if it were paper. Won't smear, blur or run. Dries at once.

Theatre Equipments on the Pacific Coast

THE success of any theatre, particularly places of amusement wholly or mostly displaying pictures, depends greatly upon the arrangement, operation and reliability of the electrical equipment installed therein. The heart of a theatre displaying motion pictures only is the projection room, and in the past many owners of theatres have found to their regret that sufficient attention had not been given to this part of their equipment. The failure in their projection room—a poorly projected picture or a continual interruption in the continuity of the pictures—has been the difference between a successful house and a failure in many cases.

The illumination of the interior has received more attention of late than heretofore. Many theatres now depend wholly upon the many lighting effects obtainable to make the interior of the house attractive to their regular patrons. These changes are made weekly or bi-weekly and create variable surroundings that attract regular patrons and creates a desire to attend the theatre oftener than if the house is illuminated in the same manner at all times.

In describing the electrical equipment the writer will start from the main switchboard or meter panel and dwell on the various steps as they arise in progressive order.

All theatres should be provided with two independent sources of service wherever it is possible to obtain such supply. The dependability of the entire installation is made positive by the installation of such two independent sources of supply. The California State law now requires that where only one source of supply is obtainable, such as is the case in the interior cities and towns, an independent source must be provided by means of storage batteries to the capacity of the emergency lighting. This emergency lighting must illuminate the entire house to the extent of one-quarter foot candle power. This minimum foot candle power has been determined by experience to be the least amount of illumination whereby the patrons can safely leave the theatre. In several recent progressive theatres wherein only one source of supply is obtainable they have provided an oil engine generator set with auxiliary storage batteries for a breakdown service that will operate the projection machines as well as provide sufficient illumination in the house to continue the show without interruption.

The emergency circuit which in the past has been understood to provide for exit lighting only, is now extended beyond this limit, as stated heretofore, and a general illumination is provided throughout the house for the safety of the patrons. The emergency circuit should also be connected to the box office lighting, as it would be inadvisable to permit the box office to remain in darkness in the event of an interruption in the power company's service, as darkness in the box office would necessarily cause the discontinuance of ticket selling aside from the risk involved.

Theatre Visalia, Visalia, California

The lighting of the auditorium proper requires particular attention to give satisfactory results and to harmonize with the architectural interior. In many of the recent installations, single cove lighting on each side has been provided with success where the auditorium is not of considerable width. In cases where the auditorium is of considerable width, an interior cove has been provided, and in several other cases large ornamental circular fixtures are installed close to the ceiling and have been depended upon more as indirect units than as direct lighting.

The California Theatre, in San Francisco, is having its annual face-washing

Many theatres are now equipped with the varied color lighting scheme to the extent of four different color circuits in the coves and center fixtures. These color circuits may be burned independently or several at a time, and with the proper lamp colors, beautiful effects are obtainable by the combination of colors. As an illustration, by the burning of red and blue lights, the beautiful magenta color is obtainable.

The control of the auditorium lighting should be so arranged that they can be controlled from various points. Generally control buttons are located on the stage, in the projection room, and, at times, near the lobby switchboard. Contractors are installed at the most central location and should be so located that their operation cannot be heard in the auditorium. In several instances this point has been overlooked and each and every time the lights are thrown on the audience can hear the contractors in operation. Preferably the contractors should be located in the blower room under the stage or in the generator room of the projection room. The lobby switchboard generally controls the outside lighting and the various rest rooms in the front of the house.

will take place. M. Winkler will start the discussion, and then the meeting will be open to all.

Is that a full day?

Here's the second. Sharply at ten the delegates will assemble at the Hotel Astor. The speakers are Hugo Riesenfeld, Joseph Weber, Leonard Liebling, A. F. Adams, C. M. Tremaine, Edward Hyman and a noted film director. All of these men are so well known in their respective fields that a description seems to be superfluous.

Dr. Riesenfeld is the busiest managing director in the world. He has in his keeping the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, and rumor says he is about to add another. He is musician, film man, conductor, writer, composer and best all-around figure in the industry, because in him actually the two arts are united. He will describe the ideal motion picture impressario.

A. F. Adams is the king of musical agents. He is the head of the Wolfsohn Musical Bureau, which is the biggest organization engaged in the development of musical artists in the world. It is the Standard Oil of music! The list of the Wolfsohn artists is the blue book of music. Think of it; Josef Hofmann, Jascha Heifetz, Reinald Werrenrath, Albert Spalding—and so on down a list of hundreds. Mr. Adams is the outstanding figure in the concert world. Now that he is planning to enter the film industry is significant that the psychological moment has arrived. Mr. Adams will discuss the "Coming of the Musical Agencies for Picture Theatres," and will tell how artists can now be routed in the theatres, with the least possible trouble.

Joseph Weber is the president of the National Federation of Musicians—the union of all professional musicians. He is the dominant figure in the musical union; a fascinating gentleman and scholar. His address will be the good will offering of the union to the new industry of picture music. His address is entitled, "What the Musical Union Has to Offer to the Picture Industry."

C. M. Tremaine, head of the Bureau for the Advancement of Music, is the man who is in touch with everything that is being done for musical development. He has at his finger tips all the work of newspapers, organizations, musicians, etc.—so that he purposes to show "How Musical Development Can Be Linked With the Picture Theatre."

Edward L. Hyman, the wideawake managing director of the Brooklyn Strand, has made a specialty of musical interpretation, and he will make an important address on that subject. Mr. Hyman has more ideas to the square yard than a dozen of the ordinary managing directors.

"Music from the Producing Director's Point of View" will end the morning session.

In the afternoon, the second big exhibit will be held in the Rialto theatre. The delegates will view the musical show, and then will adjourn to the projection room, where Dr. Riesenfeld will analyze the performance. He will strip the affair naked and expose the reasons for every note and lighting effect.

Following the Rialto exhibit, there will be a round table discussion by producers. All producers are invited to take part, and the others will listen. The subject of music from the point of view of the producer is important to all fields of the screen and music. Among those who will participate and head this discussion are: Arrow Film Corporation, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Associated Producers, Inc., Bray Pictures Corporation, Educational Film Exchanges, Equity Pictures Corporation, World Motion Picture Company, American-Indian Film Company, Denver, Colo.

In the evening, an informal dinner is being tendered to visiting exhibitors by the New York Concert League through its president, Hyman S. Kraft.

Do you think there's any time wasted?

The third day will be devoted to more general discussion. Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer, Mrs. Winifred Stoner, Harry M. Prince, Richard Henry Warren, W. G. Stewart, Fred Stark, and others will make addresses. Mrs. Oberndorfer is the general chairman of the Federation of Women's Clubs in the United States. She will show "What Two Million Club Women Have to Say to the Picture Industry on Music." Mrs. Winifred Stoner is the editor of The Forecast. Harry M. Prince, noted accoustical authority, will speak on "Accoustics for the Average Man." Richard Warren is one of the greatest organists in the world, musician, conductor, etc. He will say, "How the Organist Can Be Most Useful to the Picture Industry." Fred Stark, Superb theatre, Raleigh, N. C., "Music and Pictures in the South." W. C. Stewart, formerly of the Capitol and lately of the California theatre, "How Far a Picture Theatre Should Go in Allying With Other Musical Activities."

In the afternoon, all delegates are invited to sit in on the general round table discussions of exhibitors, of music publishers, of instrument makers and musical devices—in which each industry will discuss music from its point of view. Among others who will participate and head in these discussions are:

American Photoplayer Co.
Brambach Piano Co.
Marr & Colton Co.
Bartola Musical Instrument Co.
Steinway & Sons
Austin Organ Co.
Estey Organ Co.
Estey Piano Co.
Lyon & Healy
Belwin, Inc.
Boston Music Co.
Chas. K. Harris Music Pub. Co.
G. Schirmer
M. Witmark & Sons
Leo Feist, Inc.
J. W. Stern Co.
Waterson, Berlin & Snyder

The evening will bring the last exhibit. At the Brooklyn Strand, the opera, "Aida," of Giuseppe Verdi, will be played by the orchestra under the direction of Alois Reiser, with a Screen Musical Interpretation. This will be followed by a meeting in Mr. Hyman's offices, and Mr. Hyman will discuss the meanings of the idea, and its possibilities for further development.

Of course this program is not complete. Many other features will be added. For instance, the Chicago Opera Association will hold a special dress rehearsal for the visiting delegates, so that they may see close up the stars of grand opera. This special rehearsal is arranged as the tribute of the Chicago Opera Association and its board of directors to the Motion Picture and Musical Conference.

Other features will be announced between now and the assembling of the conference.

The important thing now is to send in your registration if you are coming.

Write THE NEWS and the Hotel Astor for your reservation.

The Music Forum

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

For some time I have been a reader of your columns in MOTION PICTURE NEWS and it has often occurred to me that you might be able to help me out of some of my difficulties. As you know, the musical director in the small town has quite a time selecting the proper music to go with the pictures, even when cue-sheets are furnished, for he is at a disadvantage in not being able to procure the music in time for the picture and often his own initiative must be brought into play because of the demands of his patrons.

Do you know of some theatre music magazine published that would help along these lines? For a town of this size we have two fine theatres, with organs in each. The company is willing to go to any reasonable expense in order to have the best in all lines and music seems to be the stumbling block. It is not often that I get to go to other towns or theatres where I can hear other music, and to buy promiscuously adds no advantage.

It is my desire to build up a good music library here, as we control four theatres in two towns and are going ahead steadily. Hence, I am at a loss oftentimes as the whole thing is in my hands. Being a very wealthy little college town many of our patrons have an extraordinary sense for good music, and they demand it.

If you are able to suggest anything that will help me out, I should be very grateful to have your suggestions in the matter. Enclosed you will find a self-addressed envelope for any reply you care to make. Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience, believe me.—Fred Heil, C. M. Amusement Co., Marietta, Ohio.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

It is the general opinion that there is still great room for improvement in the musical part of the picture. The conference that is being arranged is one that is surely needed for all connected in any way with film production. It will be a great education and inspiration to all.

I firmly believe that it is in the future of the motion picture theatre that music in all its forms can be carried to its greatest heights and all the people able to enjoy it.

Relative to suggestions requested, I must say that (1) Much depends upon the musicianship of the organist and orchestra leader. (2) All music must fit the picture, the employment of the "leit-Motif" is to be considered. (3) Popular melodies (ballads and jazz) should be those known or about to be introduced to the public; too much improvised syncopation is distasteful. (4) Orchestras must give proper separation to their part in the picture just as the actor and producers give the best of their talents. (5) In the small theatres and communities where the only music is that provided by mechanical instruments and whose operators are often lacking in musical knowledge, much help and advice is needed if the musical taste and enjoyment of the people is to be influenced and considered. (6) Good music adds greatly to the enjoyment of the picture in all its scenes.—Florine Wensel, Pres. Sacramento Teacher Association.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

We have been giving the question of the Motion Picture Musical Conference considerable thought. The idea has occurred to us that it might be a good plan if a little time could be allotted in the program to an opportunity for exhibitors to discuss the different phases of the organ as used in motion picture theatres for their musical program. This discussion might be started off with an out-line by some organ builder or organist on the development of the organ as a motion picture instrument.

It would seem to us that the different organ builders ought to treat this discussion not as a sales or advertising proposition but rather as a technical discussion answering the questions of any exhibitors. We feel sure that different exhibitors have different ideas about organ music and must have questions in their minds as to the different phases of it. The method of installation of organs is a spirit of cooperation among the organ builders present and that they would be more than glad to place their general knowledge at the disposal of the exhibitors.

Please understand, Mr. Isaacson, that this is merely a suggestion on our part and that it may or may not have your approval. We will be glad to have you enlarge upon it if you care to do so and hope that something good may come of it.

Our Mr. Marr and the writer plan to be there and you can rest assured that it is our earnest desire to help you in any way possible.

Assuring you again of our deep interest in this conference and our realization of how much it will mean to the motion picture industry, we are.—Marr & Coalton Co.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

Just what I personally can do in the way of the support of the convention I do not know, but in all events, I am sure you know I approve of better music idea in the motion picture theatre, so far as it can be done. I think the great feature of the Strand is the wonderful orchestra and the beautiful music that is presented. That, however, would not be possible in every moving picture theatre. It could be, however, minimized, and no matter if it is brought down to the smallest theatres with the automatic piano, good music could be encouraged there.

Thanking you for your communication and assuring you that you have my support, I am.—Mark P. Campbell, Brambach Piano Company.

Music Editor:

Your MOTION PICTURE NEWS page is always interesting and most times mighty good; you are helping the theatre upward, and in a sane way.

I believe the organist is going to be the musician of the future theatre—but he has to wake up, and he must get a better instrument than is being built for him now.—T. Scott Buhrman, Editor, American Organist.

Experts Combine in New Musical Association

The need for some music service designed and especially arranged for each individual film has been recognized everywhere, particularly since the tremendous success of "The Birth of a Nation" and other famous pictures proved the value of especially prepared musical scores. The collaborated talents and experience of three of filmdom's foremost impresarios are represented in the new Synchronized Scenario Music Service now being furnished to subscribers by a new Chicago company of the same name, 64 East Jackson Boulevard. Mr. Carl Edouarde, music director of the Strand theatre, New York City; Mr. James C. Bradford, formerly music director of the Broadway theatre, New York City, and previously writer of musical synopses for Famous Players, and Mr. C. J. Breil, composer of the musical score for "The Birth of a Nation," are the directors on the professional staff of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company.

This new organization, it is announced, is ready to supply an accurately synchronized music score especially written and prepared for each individual feature film, no matter by whom produced or distributed.

MUSICAL PERSONALITIES

W. G. Stewart—who is one of the greatest experts in the country on opera—has finished his contract with the California Theatre, where he has done such fine work during the past six months putting on "opera performances." Previous to that time, Stewart was the opera man at the Capitol Theatre, New York. He was one of the best operatic baritones in years gone by, founded the Commonwealth Opera Company, was stage manager of many famous light opera companies and was once stage manager of the New York Hippodrome.

He prefers to connect on the Coast.

A. N. Wolff, leader and conductor of large bands and orchestras, 1910-11-12, director of the orchestra, Orpheum Theatre, St. Paul, Minn., big time vaudeville, 1912 to 1920 manager—45 years old, home town Rochester, ready to go any place.

Percy G. Robbins, organist, a graduate of several of Europe's largest conservatories, spent the past six years studying the adaptation of the organ to pictures.—Fort Wayne, Indiana.

Edward J. Robarge, Pittsfield, Mass.—A vaudeville and picture piano leader of 14 years' experience; married, 33 years of age; and would like to locate permanently. Would go almost anywhere. A member of the union, Local 109, in good standing.

ITEMS OF THE EXCHANGES AND THEATRES

DETROIT

Hunter Robins, of the Robinhood theatre, has gone to California for the winter.

All street numbers in Detroit change on Jan. 1. The address of the film building will be 159 East Elizabeth street.

Mary Pickford in "The Love Light," Otis Skinner in "Kismet" and "Midsummer Madness" will all compete for popularity in Detroit the week of Jan. 9.

W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic-Colonial Theatre Co., Jackson, has leased the Onlywon in Jackson.

Michigan exhibitors are getting together to fight the Blue Sunday law which is to be proposed to the state legislature at its sessions next month.

PORTLAND, ORE.

John G. Von Herberg, junior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, accompanied by J. L. Gottstein, partner with the same corporation in ownership of the Coliseum theatre in Seattle, spent several days in Portland recently. They arranged future bookings for the J. & V. H. circuit throughout the Northwest.

Mrs. C. S. Jensen, wife of the senior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, returned to Portland in time for the Christmas holiday. She was called to Long Beach where her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Carlton reside, by the illness of her mother.

The first part of the midnight matinee will be given over to a group of professional acts, some of which have already been engaged. Noteworthy among these acts will be the appearance of the Ladies' Symphony Orchestra of 30 pieces which has been playing at the Multnomah hotel and which gave a concert programme at the city auditorium recently. Exactly at 12 o'clock the special New Year's prologue which will be used only for this one programme, will take place and will auspiciously usher in the year 1921. Amateur acts supplied by some of Portland's best liked musicians, dancers and tricksters will conclude the programme. Serpentines, noise-makers of many varieties and souvenirs will be given away.

Simplicity marked the holiday decorations at this house which has endeavored to portray the holiday festiveness by the artistic distribution of evergreens and poinsettias and other means which for centuries have been symbolic of the yuletide season. Cedar boughs were used as the background for the trimmings and gave a fragrant, "woodsy" aroma to the entire theatre. Five hundred poinsettias, the majority of them beautiful cut flowers, were placed on the green with striking effect.

The decoration will remain through New Year's as the Majestic is one of the two large down town cinemas to give a New Year's eve midnight matinee. "A surprise programme" is being planned for the matinee and no detail as to its nature may be extracted from Frank Macey, manager of the Majestic, in charge of the arrangements.

CANADA

News of more than ordinary importance in Western Canada is that the Lyceum theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has been leased by Mr. K. M. Leath of Calgary, Alberta, who is the owner of the Regent theatre in Calgary, the Strand and Savoy theatres in Moose Jaw and a fourth theatre in Swift Current. The Lyceum has been leased to Mr. Leath for a term of years by the owner, Mr. A. R. McNichol, who has made a number of important alterations in the house during the past months. A new feature has been the installation of a fine new orchestral organ, while other improvements have been the construction of a new ventilating system, the remodelling of the theatre front and entrance and the erection of large electric signs. Mr. Leath plans to add to these changes by the enlargement of the balcony to hold 400 additional seats, the construction of an imposing staircase to the balcony, the re-decoration of the theatre interior and the re-carpeting of all aisles and open spaces. The entire cost of all improvements will run to $75,000, it is announced.

His policy will be to present special attractions and the feature for the re-opening on January 3 is to the Fox special, "When New York Sleeps." This will be followed by "The Prey," starring Alice Joyce, and "Kismet."

Four new Simplex projection machines have been installed in moving picture theatres of Vancouver, B. C., during the past few weeks. Two Simplex models have been placed in the Rex theatre, while the new Allen theatre, one of the very handsome structures of the city, has been provided with two Simplex projectors under the direction of Joseph Lachance, chief electrician of the United theatres, Limited, Vancouver.

The Maple Leaf theatre, Vancouver, B. C., has been undergoing extensive repairs, one of the new features being an entirely new floor. Considerable work has been done in and around the theatre.

A special holiday engagement at Massey Hall, the large Toronto auditorium which seats 4,000 people, was arranged for "The Shepherd of the Hills." The special run opened on Christmas afternoon and extended to New Year's night with two presentations daily. Top price for evening performances was $1 and matinee prices were 25 cents and 50 cents. A large orchestra was organized for the engagement.

Winnipeg, Manitoba, has fallen into line with the leading cities of Canada for the establishment of a large building as the headquarters for local branches of moving picture exchange companies. Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver all have fine big structures which are now used exclusively for the accommodation of film exchanges and the decision has been reached in Winnipeg to have an entirely new office building of a suitable nature for the housing of film exchanges.

The Winnipeg Fire, Water and Light Committee has been notified that steps have been taken by local exchange managers to have their own fire-proof building before next October. Attempts had been made to obtain the Coca Cola building or a structure on Assiniboine avenue which belongs to the Winnipeg Electric Railway Company but it was found that neither of these structures was available for the purpose. The local exchanges are, therefore, proceeding with the construction of a building on Donald street that will meet all requirements. The City Council has been asked to give the first reading to the by-laws covering the erection of the building.

It is planned that each film exchange company using the new building will be required to pay an annual civic fee of $25 and the city is to make regular inspections of the structure.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

The Hotel Iroquois was the scene on Monday, December 20, of an enthusiastic First National franchise boosting gathering. Most of the prominent exhibitors of the city and nearby territory attended. The meeting was opened by Ralph H. Clark, general manager and treasurer of First National exchange, New York, and Hugh Rennie, local manager. Mr. Clark gave a history of the formation of the circuit, its problems, its achievements and its outlook for the coming year.

Mr. Clark was followed by Moe Mark, president of the Strand theatre interests, who dwelt at length on the value of the First National franchise. J. H. Michael, Harold B. Franklin, Harry Marsey, Fred Ullman, Walter Hayes also spoke briefly. Harry Rose of the Flash theatre, Tonowanda, and E. O. Weinberg of the Buffalo Strand, told of the advantages of the franchise. At the close of the meeting almost every exhibifor present became a franchise holder.

Martin E. Wolff of Rochester, since 1902 principal owner and manager of the Lyceum theatre in the Flower city, and for about ten years, associated with Charles Frohman, Inc., and David Belasco in the management of the Empire theatre, Syracuse, died recently in Baltimore.

The Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Ira M. Mosher, president; J. H. Michael, Regent, vice-president; W. W. Bradley, United Theatrical Enterprises, secretary and treasurer. Board of Directors: Harry Marsey, E. O. Weinberg and Bruce Fowler and the above officers. Mr. Fowler succeeds William Graham, former manager of the Garden theatre, and Mr. Weinberg, takes the place of Earl L. Crabb, who resigned as manager of the Strand to assume the general management of the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation with headquarters in New York.

C. A. Taylor, general manager of Gardiner Pictures, Inc., announces the closing of a week run for "The County Fair," at the Morgan theatre in Auburn, N. Y. Contracts have also been closed for Syracuse, Binghamton, Elmira and Cortland. The Gardiner company is planning a big week's run of this Tourneur production in the Broadway auditorium Easter week, putting on a mammoth county fair in connection with the present. Lew Horschel of Barn Dance farm will assist in the arrangements. "Before the White Man Came" will be shown in the Shubert-Teck theatre soon under the auspices of the local Red Men lodges.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president of Nu-Art Pictures, Inc., has closed the entire output of his company at the Oatka theatre, Warsaw, N. Y., where Fred Rice is manager. All the new Clara Kimball Young productions, which Nu-Art is handling in this territory, have been booked at the Young Auditorium, Perry, N. Y. For the week of December 27, Mr. Zimmerman placed "She Played and Paid," at the Empire theatre, where Manager Samuel Carver put on a big exploitation campaign. Mr. Zimmerman looks forward to an unusually successful year during 1920 for all branches of the motion picture industry.

Every employe of the local Realart exchange received a Christmas present from President Kohn of the home office. The present was in the form of "Long Green." Manager Harry E. Lotz has built up a wonderful business for Realart in this end of the state and predicts double the 1920 business the coming year. J. Walker of for Barcli, Schenectady, and B. Vohwinkel of the Orio'e, are among recent signers of the franchise. Jack Farren of the Victoria, Rochester, has booked "The Soul of Youth" for an extended presentation next month.

Ben Fitzer, who has an independent office in the Palace theatre building, has placed his big production, "Madonnas and Men," for two weeks at the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, commencing January 9.

"Hub" Taylor of the Buffalo Theatre Supply Company, is equipping the new Strand theatre in Belfast, N. Y., and the Opera House in Dansville has purchased a new Motiograph projection machine. Mr. Taylor journeyed to Corning last week to confer with J. J. Kelly, who is erecting a new house in that town to seat 1,275. Mr. Kelly now operates the Elk theatre, Corning.

E. O. Weinberg, without expending one cent in extra adertising and exploitation, put on Otis Skinner in "Kismet," at the Buffalo Strand the week of December 27 and broke all house records.

When every other house in the neighborhood was doing poor business the Elmwood had the good fortune to pack them in the first two nights of Christmas week, and Manager Bruce Fowler gives credit for the capacity business to the fact that he presented Olive Thomas in her last picture.

FLORIDA

Some competition the two theatres of Lakeland, Fla., have been having. The Casino has been operated by the Lakeland Amusement Co., which is one of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises. The Auditorium has been under the management of A. R. Nininger.

With the very best pictures, each house has been showing at an admission price of 10 cents, which as any showman knows, leaves no chance for profit, at present rentals, so the two houses have now consolidated, the Lakeland Amusement Co. taking over the Auditorium.

The Casino will be closed and extensive alterations made. In the meantime the Auditorium will be used for the showing of pictures. After the Casino is completed, the picture programs will be transferred to that house and the Auditorium used for road shows exclusively.

To entertain the winter visitors at Tampa, Fla., the city has appropriated a large sum of money. A band concert every day in the Tampa Bay Park; a great tent city in De Soto Park, where the "Tin Can Tourists" may camp out for the winter; and community sings every Sunday in the Tampa Bay Casino, are some of the features.

Mr. Earl Stumpf is in charge of the sings, and with the use of a stereoptican, he is putting over some stunts that are "packing them in." Mr. Stumpf has "dug up" a lot of song slides many of them old-timers that hit the tourists in the place where they live, by bringing back the songs of their childhood, and how they do sing. Oh, Boy! it is a treat to hear them.

OKLAHOMA CITY

C. C. Bailey has leased the Dreamland theatre at Canton, Texas, to Henry Taylor, a local business man.

The Strand theatre at Denton, Texas, has been completed and regular performances are in progress.

J. M. Reynolds has completed the Palace, a new movie theatre at Arlington, Texas.

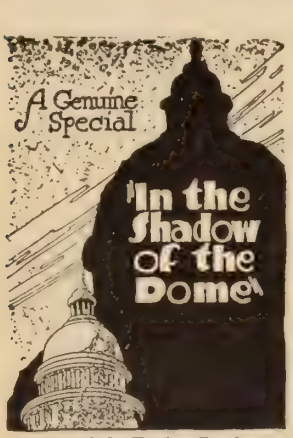
J. Levy has started the erection of a new theatre at Amarillo, Texas. The new theatre will seat 1,700 and will be under the management of C. R. Sullivan.

E. E. Harris, former auditor for Robertson-Cole at Dallas, Texas, has been appointed office manager for Griffiths Bros. at Oklahoma City, and will handle specialty films.

The Dye, Ford & Rogers Enterprises, owning a chain of theatres in Texas, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $300,000. Incorporators are E. H. Hulsey, L. L. Dent and E. Lee Dye. Theatres in Wichita Falls, Amarillo and Plainview will be operated under the charter.

CINCINNATI

Louise Fazenda, on her way to Lafayette, Indiana, her home town, dropped off at Cincinnati today and was entertained at luncheon by film men, exhibitors and movie fans. Later she went to the Gifts theatre, and at the request of McMahon and Jackson, managers, appeared before several audiences clad in the comedy make-up that she used in "Down on the Farm." This is Miss Fazenda's first trip east in six years.



Wilbur Settle, owner of the Colonial theatre, Madisonville, will let contracts for an addition to his theatre, designed to give the house a total of 600 seats. At the same time the original part of the building, now of frame, will be enclosed with brick walls.

MASSACHUSETTS

Frank H. Roberts of Northampton, who recently bought the Majestic theatre at Easthampton, Mass., is making extensive repairs and improvements. The outside is being painted and a wide porch is being built across the sidewalk so that autoists may enter without being exposed to inclement weather. About 200 new electric lights are to be installed in the foyer, the inside walls are being retinted and a new roof is being added.

Negotiations for extensive changes in the management of local motion picture houses at Ware, Mass., are reported practically completed, although the actual transfers may not take place for several weeks because of the contract for films, which will have to be shown or be a complete loss. It is expected that Goldstein Brothers of Springfield, will buy out F. F. Sullivan of the Casino, the veteran motion picture producer here, and shift the production of their shows to the more desirable location. The Bijou in the Kaplan block may continue for a time to show the films contracted for by Mr. Gilmore, under the direction of Bernard Satz, who has been staging programs at the town hall on one or more nights per week.

If Mr. Satz decides to accept the offer made to him, he will direct productions at the Bijou until that is closed and then at the Casino, thus concluding the use of the town hall as a motion picture house, as far as he is concerned. While the deal is not completed, in detail, it is reported to have virtually gone through. Eventually, this would mean that patrons of the movies here would have their choice between the Casino and the Durrell, which is expected to continue for the present under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Shuster.

A David G. Fischer Production

ALBANY

Beginning January 30, the management of the Avon theatre in Watertown, N. Y., will donate 10 per cent. of the gross receipts each Sunday, after the payment of the war tax, to charity. The house was opened about a year ago, and while Sunday pictures are permitted in Watertown, the house ceased to run on Sundays several weeks ago, with the announcement that it did not think that public sentiment in the city was favorable to Sunday shows.

On January 30, however, the theatre will reopen for Sunday evenings, "Kismet" being the first of the attractions. Arthur J. Forbes, manager of the house, proposes a committee be appointed to determine what charities are to receive the 10 per cent. of the receipts. It has been suggested that a different organization be designated for each Sunday, in order that all will have an equal opportunity in sharing in the receipts.

As predicted in a recent issue of this publication, the Colonial theatre, Albany, N. Y., will revert to motion pictures, a change from stock to pictures being scheduled to occur on January 3. The house, which was originally given over entirely to pictures, has been playing stock since last June, with much success. The management figures, however, that Albany was not of sufficient size to sustain a year-round stock company. In all probability, stock will occupy the boards next summer. A grand organ with orchestral attachments has been installed. The house will open under the new policy with a presentation of "Earthbound."

A Masonic watch charm has been presented Uly S. Hill, who retired as manager of Proctor's Harmanus-Bleecker hall in Albany, N. Y., to assume management of the new Mark-Strand theatre in the same city. The gift came from the house staff of the hall. The presentation was made by Albert Crier, the publicity man. A supper followed and later on the orchestra in the theatre played for the dancing.

CANADA

The Famous Players' Canadian Corporation has now established itself in the Strand theatre of Hamilton, Ontario, one of the finest neighborhood theatres in that city. This house was formerly owned by Mr. Fred Guest, who was rated as one of Ontario's most successful independent exhibitors. The theatre has been remodelled, the new features including a ventilating system and rest rooms. The house has a seating capacity of one thousand on the one floor. The new manager of the theatre is Mr. H. E. Wilton, a former newspaper man of Hamilton, who showed considerable cleverness in arranging details for the reopening. One of his specialties was an eight-page souvenir booklet regarding the reconstructed theatre.

It is planned to install a pipe organ at a later date and for the present a piano is being used. The matinee admission price is 15 cents and top price for evening performances is 25 cents. The theatre was re-opened with "The Prince Chap," starring Thomas Meighan.

Toronto and Montreal moving picture exchange officers are now largely centered under the one roof in their respective cities. In Toronto, the development is due to the erection of a large and handsome addition to the Hermant Building which already provided quarters for a number of film distributors. The Montreal film headquarters are now concentrated more or less in a brand new building which was constructed for film exchange purposes. In both cities a number o fthe leading film renting companies have moved into the new premises and many of the leading celebrities of the exchange world are now to be found in handsome new offices.

The new Canadian Educational Films, Limited, which was granted a Canadian charter with a capitalization of $500,000 by the Dominion government a few days ago, has found a home in the Hermant Building, Toronto, while the Toronto offices of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors, have been moved to ground floor of the Hermant structure from the original address on King street West.

The head office of Regal Films, Limited, has occupied the two top floors of the Hermant Building in Toronto, where Vice-President Arthur Cohen and General Sales Manager Harry A. Kaufman are established.

Vitagraph has taken the whole of the third floor of the Hermant structure for its Canadian headquarters and Mr. W. F. Barrett, the Canadian general manager, has laid out the offices to take care of big business. A recent visitor in Toronto was Mr. F. W. Smith of Vitagraph, Inc., New York.

The Fox Film Corporation, Limited, Toronto, continues to have its fine premises in the older portion of the Hermant Building, while the head office of the Canadian Universal Film Corporation, Limited, is only a few steps from the Hermant. The Famous-Lasky Film Service, Limited, is on Victoria street, south of the Hermant Building, but the Select Pictures' Corporation, Limited, is somewhat "distant" by being located at 13-15 Adelaide street West. The Toronto office of the Associated First National Pictures (Eastern Canada), Limited, is also located apart from others at 91-93 Queen street East. The Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, Limited, operated under the auspices of the Exhibitors' Association of Ontario, is found on Richmond street East.

INDIANAPOLIS

The A. J. Obreshk Theatre Company of Whiting, Ind., has been incorporated at the Secretary of State's office. Capital is fixed at $100,000; the purpose, to operate theatres and the directors: A. J. Obreshk, Alta Obreshk and Chris Petrof.

The first Baptist church of Kokomo, Ind., was split into two factions, one of which wanted to see movies shown in the church and the other of which didn't. The pastor decided the two sides should debate the question. The judges decided against the movies, but those favorable to celluloid romances say the fight is not over, for true progress cannot be stemmed.

Manager Ralph Lieber of the Circle entertained 2,000 boy and girl carriers of the Indianapolis News at a Christmas party at which "Dinty" was shown in advance of its public presentaation in this city.

Every downtown photoplay house made comedy the heavy end of its bill for the week ending with Christmas Day. The theory was that business was going to be pretty poor because of the Christmas shopping rush and that most of the folks who would attend would be those seeking relief from their trying problems. The managers heard many expressions of praise for their plans, the newspapers taking the lead in recognizing the universal offering of comedy as a sort of public service.

An apple, orange, potato, sweet potato, loaf of bread or some small article of clothing was the admission charged to two special showings of Arbuckle and Mack Sennett comedies given at the Isis in Indianapolis for the benefit of the Salvation Army's Christmas charities two days before Christmas. The affair was arranged by Oscar A. Kantner, exploitation representative of the Indianapolis exchange of the Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation.

Performances were given at 9 and 10 o'clock on the morning of the benefit.

Clyde Wilson, owner of the Paramount theatre at Rochester, Ind., is to have the new Municipal Auditorium, which will be completed in the early summer.

The Luna Amusement Company, operating theatres at Lafayette and Fort Wayne, Ind., and Kankakee, Ill., has taken over the Nelson in Longansport and opened holiday week with "So Long Letty."

Ground will be broken shortly for a new 1,000-seat house to take the place of the Isis at Peru, according to Dale Loomis, manager. Loomis also operates the Victoria and Colonial in Peru.

The Orpheum at Lafayette has been closed by the Hornbeck Amusement Company as a non-paying proposition.

The People's Amusement Company is about to open its new Capitol theatre at Clinton, Ind. "So Long Letty" will be the opening attraction. The company also plans a new house in Evansville. It already has holdings in Ft. Wayne, Richmond and Terre Haute.

ST. LOUIS

Alert action on the part of the police frustrated an attempt to blow the safe of the Grand-Florrissant theatre containing $4,000, the receipts of Saturday and Sunday performances. This is the third attempt within the last two months to rob theatres belonging to the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation in St. Louis. Several losses through theft have already been suffered.

Miss Louise Fazenda, until recently with the Mack Sennett comedies, was a visitor in St. Louis last week. She was given a luncheon at the Hotel Statler, several local newspapermen attending. Miss Fazenda was accompanied by her mother and is making the first trip east of Californi a "since she can remember."

Virgil Kelly, formerly a feature writer on the St. Louis Times, has been appointed assistant to J. Reeves Espy, publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation with offices in St. Louis. The Missouri concern has planned to spend more than $400,000 on newspaper and billboard advertising during the ensuing year.

William Goldman, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation, which controls 17 olcal houses, has announced that the Kings theatre, one of the most pretentious theatrical edifices in St. Louis, will hereafter run a Loew vaudeville program and that the Garrick theatre, which is situated in the downtown district, will be the means of exhibiting the film features formerly displayed at the Kings. Another radical announcement from the office of Mr. Goldman was to the effect that the Pershing theatre, one of the Famous-Players most elaborate first-run houses here, will offer a high-class stock bill after Christmas Day. The admission fee will be raised from 40 cents to 99 cents.

E. S. Holmes, manager, and Charles Howard of Vitagraph, Minneapolis, returned recently from a trip to La Crosse and Eau Claire, where they closed contracts for "Trumpet Island."

C. A. Gordon has become Minneapolis manager for Stoll Films, the product of an English picture company which will be distributed through Pathe. Mr. Gordon was formerly with Pathe.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Heida"

(Dramatic Story in Colors by Prizma. Directed by Tom Cushing. Scenario by Catherine Carr)

PRIZMA'S natural color subjects have ceased to be a novelty even to audiences but a dramatic story presented in colors, other than those hand-painted subjects of French origin and one or two multiple reel hand colored productions, is a most decided innovation. For its first venture into the dramatic field Prizma has selected the century old fairy story, "Heida," with its locale laid in picturesque Switzerland. This seems a wise choice for the apparel of the various characters of the play, the beautiful exteriors selected and the back grounds of flowers and red roofed Swiss buildings, permit the use of many of the photographic tints that show best and allows an opportunity of appealing to the senses both from a dramatic standpoint and from the angle of beauty of shades and colors.

Dramatically "Heida" is little more than an episodic story of the little Swiss orphan who, after living with her grandfather, a shepherd of the Alps, goes to the city far below to become the companion of a rich man's daughter and then back again to the old home when it becomes evident that she is not happy elsewhere. There is a slender theme of "Miracle Man" flavor to be sure, but the main interest in the picture centers about Madge Evans as "Heida" and the variety of beautiful colors that have been utilized in the ever changing sequences that make up the several reels of the offering. In support of little Miss Evans is a very capable cast of fine types for the roles of the various Swiss characters. Harry Rattenby who plays "the Alm Uncle" is especially good.

We cannot but feel that the release of this picture marks an epoch in motion picture production in that it is the first real indication that the black and white photography with its limited tintings is ultimately to be superseded by colors for dramatic subjects.

Prizma's artistry in color photograph does not need explanation but it might be well to state that the gaudy glaring shades of red and somewhat unnatural blendings of other tints have been entirely eliminated in "Heida." Some very beautiful effects are achieved in close-ups of the star and other players that lend naturalness to the images of the faces of the characters. There is, of course, an inclination toward staging the scenes of the story in exteriors that will allow the use of bright colors but the story moves along fairly well as drama.

As a picture for children's matinees, or special shows when the ordinary subject is not suitable this can not be excelled. Its exploitation possibilities from the fact that it is the first picture to combine the dramatic and artistic so successfully are great.

What the showing of "Heida" will mean to the industry remains to be seen. If Prizma can achieve as satisfactory results with any degree of certainty, at a reasonable cost, we do not see any reason why it should not monopolize the entire photographic portion of production until such time as competitors appear in the field. Certainly such colorings as appear in "Heida" would go far to put over the many slender picture stories that go to make up an average of the present day releases and further enhance the good picture both in entertainment and dramatic value.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Edgar's Little Saw"

(Booth Tarkington—Goldwyn—Comedy)

HERE is a perfect representation of a certain Christmas spirit which prevails wherever big brother and little brother get together. Booth Tarkington has touched upon an idea which is remarkably truthful—one which generates humanites—one which scintillates with effervescent humor. Johnny Jones, who essays the part of Edgar Pomeroy, has found on Christmas morning that the long cherished carpenter's set is his for the asking. The most prized article is the little saw. Now Edgar reminds his baby brother to keep away from his toys in general and his saw in particular. But with infant precocity the youngster finds the hidden implement and proceeds to carve up the furniture, father's derby, the cat's tail, and Edgar's other toys. He doesn't miss hardly a thing which is destructible.

Of course when the parents see the damage they naturally blame Edgar and upbraid him for attempting to place the blame on little Charlie. Of course the youngster has forgotten the incident. Which scores another point for Tarkington and the director, Mason N. Litson. Tiny children forget very easily. But the cat is let out of the bag in due time when the cook discovers little Charlie attempting to renew his plan of sawing off the cat's tail. And Edgar is exonerated from blame. So he is permitted to go to his best girl's party. She makes fun of him for crying. But he retorts by saying, "Only girls cry."

The comedy is rich in childish fun and the pranks will be remembered by more than one parent. Perhaps it has been exploited in more than one home either by the parent when he was a child or by his offspring. At the Strand, New York, the audience was kept in constant glee. These Edgar comedies are so true to life that it is a pleasure to witness them and record their excellence. The company includes Lucille Ricksen as the best girl, Ruddy Messenger as the pal, Virginia Madison as the little brother, Charlie, and John Cossar as the doting and chastising father. Length, two reels.—LAURENCE REID.

"Fantomas"

(Fox Serial—Twenty Episodes)

THIS successor to "Bride 13," judged from the first four episodes, is a serial of a battle between a master criminal and the shrewdest minds of police headquarters. The correct planting of the character of this prince of crime and the development of the atmosphere of fear and awe and baffling mystery is most essential in the very beginning and it is excellently done. It is not exaggerated by crass improbability, but at the same time the suspense created is intense.

The story of the serial is adapted from a series of French detective novels by Marcel Allain and Pierre Souvestre. The various episodes are certainly full of the mystery and daring we are wont to ascribe to French detective stories. For instance, in the first episode, "At the Stroke of Nine," Fantomas threatens to kidnap Harrington, an eminent scientist, at nine in the evening. Harrington is sitting in his library, surrounded by a detective and members of his household, and his grounds are guarded. Seemingly it is impossible for any foul play to take place. Yet by a series of incidents, far-fetched to a certain degree of course, Fantomas carries off his prey under the very eyes of the police.

The second episode concerns the million dollar reward for the return of Harrington, offered by his daughter. It ends with Fantomas himself stealing the money. More interest is created by the effort to locate the formula for making gold, which Harrington has discovered. There is romance on the serial, with Johnnie Walker, who created the unforgetable role of the hero in "Over the Hill," playing a serial hero in first class style. He is athletic, hard-hitting, and is able to defeat single handed about thirty men in one episode. The girl is Edna Murphy, who, in the first four episodes at least, is not called upon to do any daredevil stunts. Fantomas is Edward Roseman, who is sufficiently crafty and hateable and wears his many disguises very well. The rest of the cast is equally satisfactory.

The story is laid in New York City, with some backgrounds which will be easily recognized. As for the physical thrills, they are there, but not the stupendous, breath-taking variety. There is a motorboat blown up, and an automobile wreck. Walker also hangs from the edge of a roof, with a crowd of villains firing shots at him from a distance of ten yards, and a man stamping on his clutching fingers from above.

Fantomas should take its place with the best of the "crack" serials if the suspense can be kept up in the remaining episodes. The scenario and direction are by Edward Sedgwick. Horace Plympton is responsible for the photography. —MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to September 18, 1920.

CLOTHES (METRO) OLIVE TELL ..... OCT. 9
"Talky picture made from stage satire."—M. P. News.

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... DEC. 25
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture bringing average box-office receipts." "Drew about average crowds during the entire week. People characterized it as 'very good.'" "Average picture with about usual business."

"Has plenty of action and should please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleasing picture but we had about average business." "Well up to the average of Wm. S. Hart's pictures and should be a good drawing card at all theatres where he is popular. We did excellent business with this picture for one week." "The combination of a popular star and a good picture, and the result is good business." "Out of Hart's line, should be kept in the Western type." "Carried picture seven days. My custom is two changes weekly." "Attracted large audiences but failed to meet with the approval usually accorded the cowboy." "Fine picture, played to big business." "A different Hart picture, but none-the-less vigorous than his Western productions. Pleased his admirers and also those who do not care for Hart as a rule. Big business."

CURTAIN (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD ..... OCT. 16
"Lifelike story suffers from mechanical development."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to exceptional business. Katherine MacDonald appears to be growing more popular." "Katherine MacDonald gave entire satisfaction. Picture well produced. Splendid supporting cast. Business very good." "It's by far the best acting Katherine MacDonald has ever done. People liked it well enough to fill two houses for a week simultaneously. Good entertainment." "Averagely pleasing story. Poor ending. Star's work shows improvement." "Very pleasing audience picture to good business. Miss MacDonald's best picture. Story at least for her rational and she is livening up considerably."

DANGEROUS BUSINESS (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE ..... DEC. 11
"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business."

"Vivid, 'punchy' story; production excellent."—M. P. News.

DEVIL TO PAY, THE (BRUNTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC.
"Strong mystery story carries interest."—M. P. News.

"Rather grewsome story, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment.—"Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business." "Its too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused."

"NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS"
(Kane-First National)

Ray Scores Again With Pleasing Study of Small Town Life

IT is only a jump from the farmer lad to the small town youth, but Charles Ray can always negotiate it. Indeed there is scarcely any difference in the two studies. What passes for one could easily pass for the other. "Nineteen and Phyllis" could be called "Peaceful Valley" and vice versa, since there is not enough variation of plot and characterization to distinguish them. The newest release places the star in store clothes. That is about the only difference except the romantic note is better emphasized and there is more broad humor. "Peaceful Valley" relied much on its note of pathos and heart interest. "Nineteen and Phyllis" conquers through its representation of small town life.

One might call it a grown-up Edgar comedy. The wealthy rival who sports the only dress suit in town. Ditto a car and the fact that the dashing heroine lives up to her sex by keeping her worshippers guessing—his is of the Edgar brand. It is delightful comedy which sends out flashes of real entertainment. Never is there a dull moment. The hero might be another Tarkington character too—one Billy Baxter. The incident is what keeps the spectator's attention. The author or director is responsible for adding a timely touch. He brings into play the crime wave which is sweeping the country. A burglar is preying on the village and a thousand dollar reward is offered for his capture. To the "eighteen per week" clerk, this is a sum not to be lightly dismissed. It means that he can also have a dress suit and a sport car.

A trolley car is utilized which carries the young people to a dance hall which is a reminder of the Toonerville trolley that meets all the trains. Its constant bumping generates enthusiastic guffaws. The laughter is maintained in Ray's efforts to measure himself for a dress suit. The humor and pathos are expressed in his attempt to sneak out of the house to attend the party. This is a rich incident which is subtly introduced and lightly touched upon. The youth is all togged out, but father waits at the bottom of the stairs. He takes off his shoes and carries them, but father still waits. Perplexed, he is about to give it up when he thinks of the roof and escapes. But in effecting his release he runs right into the burglar. There is a struggle upon the roof with shoes and silk hat falling into disrepute. But the criminal is captured and lugged out to the party and the reward is enough to make the heroine realize that her hero possesses the necessary courage. The titling is attractive, being placed in a circular frame after the manner of paintings. "Nineteen and Phyllis" is one of Ray's best. Make no mistake in booking it.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of small town life is represented in Charles Ray's latest picture, "Nineteen and Phyllis," which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. Of course it is natural to expect Mr. Ray in a study of this character. He has played it so long that it has become a perfect representation of its kind. The picture offers the star to flash his skillful talent in a part which he has made famous. He is remarkably adept in giving life to the small town youth. As Andrew Jackson Cavanaugh the star may be said to add a further study to his gallery.

The story revolves around a youthful romance. The hero works for eighteen dollars a week and his poverty is a thorn in his side when he compares himself to Jimmy Long, the wealthy son of the seed store merchant—a boy who flashes the only dress suit and racing car in town. The youth knows that if he had a thousand dollars he could win the girl easily. The sum is his when he wins the reward for capturing a burglar. The heroic exploit makes him secure in the girl's estimation. And romance and riches are his for the asking. The company supporting the star is proficient and the direction is praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

He was chagrined because his rival constantly taunted him with a dress suit and a fast motor car. Andy could only wear his store clothes bought with a salary of eighteen dollars a week. He knew that if he couldn't get a dress suit and a car that the girl would give her affections to his hated rival. It was a good thing that a crime wave was abroad in the little town. Else Andy might never have gained the girl, the dress suit and the car. But in capturing the ————. To telling more would be spoiling the picture for you. So come to the ———— theatre next ———— and see Charles Ray in his brightest and most humorous comedy-romance of the year. See "Nineteen and Phyllis."

SUGGESTIONS

Here is Charles Ray again. So get out the S. R. O. sign. You might state that this comedy-romance is much like a story by Booth Tarkington—that it offers the same captivating study of small town life. Play up the title. It is attractive. Make use of the incident. Use the ideas of Ray measuring himself for dress suit and carrying his shoes in his hand to avoid a stern father. Your artist can exploit the idea for your lobby frames. You can use the old songs for prologue with a rural character singing them. You can stage a barn dance effect which could appeal to your audience. But if you don't want to go to expense, the announcement that Ray is coming might be enough.

"THE ROOKIE'S RETURN"
(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Quite Frail But Fairly Pleasing

IF the audiences who remember "Twenty-three and One-half Hours Leave" have been waiting expectantly to see another model of its kind, they are apt to be disappointed in "The Rookie's Return," the latest Douglas MacLean and Doris May attraction. It seems to us that Thomas H. Ince will have to try again. The first-mentioned has been mellowed in the memory until it stands out as one of the finest pictures ever made. Which, of course, counteracts the good points of the newest release. One expects too much of these co-stars. Perhaps that is the reason that we are doomed to disappointment. So we must accept the next best thing.

"The Rookie's Return" is not quite up to the standard of some other releases charged up to the MacLean and May account. At that it offers pleasing entertainment, although its substance is not overcharged with red corpuscles or film calories. Its plot is easily penetrable, but manages to exude a deal of color through the spontaneity of the action and the charm of the interpretation. It is all about a young rookie who, unable to find a job, takes up the precarious task of selling books. While he doesn't dispose of any, good fortunes places him in the path of an attractive specimen of the opposite sex. And orange blossoms are certainly seen in the offing. The hero comes from a good family and he inherits his aunt's estate under certain conditions.

Here is where most of the comedy enters and it scintillates with effective incident. The servants are under the impression that they will inherit princely sums if they are discharged immediately. So they evolve a plan to make things unpleasant for the erstwhile rookie. But he is determined to put up with their insults to keep the fortune in the family. Another channel of effective comedy flows from the efforts of a humorous grandfather of the girl who would bring the young people together. He, it is who, translates the will to read O. K. with the hero. And because of his fondness for him there is no question of the love stakes. MacLean has a pleasant way which has established a healthy following for him. It is to be regretted that Miss May is not given equal opportunities. Her name is on the silversheet in prominent display, but her presence in the plot is scarcely noticeable. One of the best bits is rendered by a very competent character actor, Frank Currier, and Leo White has opportunities to play his Gallic role again—a role he made famous in Essanay comedies. "The Rookie's Return" is frail and hardly substantial enough for feature length. But it entertains after a fashion. The speed keeps it going—breezy acting and action—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Rookie's Return" is the title of the latest Douglas MacLean and Doris May picture which comes to the ———— next ————. This offering is said to be on a par with "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave" in its perfect comedy and the spontaneous development of its plot. Besides it measures out an equal portion of humanities. Mr. MacLean plays a rookie lately returned from the war who, deprived of a job, takes up the task of selling books. He doesn't meet with any success and is forced to turn to another occupation. Good fortune smiles upon him when he inherits his wealthy aunt's estate and his troubles still assemble when he endeavors to keep the inheritance within the family.

A clause in the will states that the servants will come into goodly fortunes if they are dismissed. So it is a task to keep them despite their insults. He takes his affairs to a lawyer who is so charmed with his manner that he arranges to have him in the family. The lawyer allows himself to be kidnapped but it all ends happily with the hero finding romance with a pretty heiress. The comedy is rich in its sure-fire incident and breezes through with plenty of vigor and vitality. The stars are perfectly at home in their respective parts and are splendidly supported by Frank Currier and others. Jack Nelson directed.

PROGRAM READER

He came back from the war and couldn't find a job. But when one is out of work one can always sell books. It is a precarious task and Douglas MacLean found it out to his sorrow. But in soliciting his offers he met a very charming girl—a girl he felt was the brightest personality that ever entered his life. So well did he like her that he made provision to meet her again. Did he? That remains for you to discover when you see Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "The Rookie's Return" at the ———— theatre next ————. It is a highly entertaining comedy—one which is certain in its appeal to the fancies of young and old. It carries sentiment, humor, romance and heart interest, and is perfectly acted. To miss it is to miss the treat of the season.

CATCH LINES

He came back from the war to find himself out of work. He took up the task of selling books. What happened? See "The Rookie's Return."

See Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "The Rookie's Return." A picture as enjoyable as "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave." Don't miss it.

"THE CHARM SCHOOL"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Wallace Reid Has Another Winner Here

WALLACE REID doesn't have to wait over a lapse of pictures for a good one. For having consecutively excellent productions, this popular star wins the prize. Is it any wonder that he is leading his rivals in the popularity contests? Here is "The Charm School" for example. This product hasn't had time to grow cold from its stage presentation, but someone's far-seeing eye has been used to advantage. Is it Tom Geraghty? If it is, he saw the rich screen possibilities in this delightful bit of romantic nonsense—nonsense which is made almost real. It is quite a departure for Reid, too. There is none of the crisp and snappy action characteristic of "Always Audacious" and "Excuse My Dust."

It conquers for its original incident, its quaint humor, its intelligent titling, its captivating charm and a nearly perfect interpretation. The continuity flows along evenly without a break discernible anywhere and there is so much contagious comedy that the spectator is caught in the embrace and capitulates without a murmur. The hero inherits a select boarding school which is rapidly going to the dogs because of old fashioned principles and principals. The girls are modern to a degree and they welcome the chance to worship at the shrine of a new head-master. Reid would install a plan which would make the sub-debs charming—either through a course of physical culture sprouts or being taught the graces of the perfect deportment page. Calculus and higher learning, he claims is antediluvian and tends to develop girls with masculine characteristics. And the star has a lot of fun—fun smoking cigarettes on the side and fun exclaiming to doting papas and mammas that their children are not commonplace. He is a keen student of human nature and knows that to win parents he must first praise their offsprings.

There is no single track development either. A romance carries on the charm which is also generated through the new curriculum, the pretty girls, and the spontaneity of the comedy. Every scene is perfectly dovetailed which shows finished workmanship in each department. The humor is not lost for a moment, but effervesces throughout. This picture rounds out a year of highly entertaining Wallace Reid pictures—the kind of pictures which is placing the screen on a par with the stage. The picture is effective propaganda for those schools which are adopting a similar policy. The old-fashioned schools will doubtless build propaganda against it. What are studies compared to making a hit in society, through being graceful and charming? The star and his company play with unbounded enthusiasm. This will be one of the hits of the season.—Length, 5 reels. —Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wallace Reid, who is considered by many the most popular star in pictures, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in his latest comedy-romance entitled "The Charm School," adapted by Tom Geraghty from the magazine story by Alice Duer Miller. This story has also found its way to the stage and was played with great success in New York the past season. The tale may be said to be highly original upon the screen and sends forth flash after flash of rare humor as well as scenes which captivate for the manner of their interpretation.

Mr. Reid plays the part of a young man who inherits a girls' boarding school. Tired of the manner of bringing up the modern girl, he tries the plan of starting a charm school, holding to the idea that it is more advantageous for women to possess charm and grace than higher learning. The picture builds with plenty of scintillating high lights which captivate the audience. It is humorous to see the girls jump at the chance to give up higher learning for the sake of athletics or the graces of the ball-room. "The Charm School" is said to be Wallace Reid's best picture, which is saying a good deal after his memorable "Always Audacious."

PROGRAM READER

What would you do if you were a young man who inherited a girls' boarding school? What would you do with it? Would you sell it or would you attempt to teach in it? Would you also cultivate an acquaintance with a charming girl or two? This is the problem that greets the popular Wallace Reid in "The Charm School," the scintillating comedy which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. This is quite the most delightful picture that Mr. Reid ever appeared in and offers him manifold opportunities to show his rare comedy talent. The picture abounds with humor and romance and is the biggest comedy treat of the season. See "The Charm School" and have romance again.

CATCH LINES

He inherited a girls' boarding school and determined to make the fair students charming. How did he go about it See "The Charm School," the finest comedy in which Wallace Reid ever appeared.

What would you rather be—a girl possessed of captivating charm or one having an education of higher learning? See "The Charm School."

"CINDERELLA'S TWIN"
(Metro)

Just Misses Being Very Commonplace

METRO acclaims this an original story by Luther Reed, which leads us to observe that "original" may mean not adapted from a novel or play or can be taken literally.

In the latter connection the caption referred to is rather a misnomer. If there is anything original or even interesting in "Cinderella's Twin," it is to be found in the first few sequences showing a "push button" kitchen with the star presiding as chief cook and bottle washer. After that Mr. Reed's story is strictly orthodox and made to order from such material as is at the finger tips of the trained scenario writer, showing how Miss Dana as a modern Cinderella went to a grand ball, danced with her Sunday supplement hero, unwittingly became the accomplice of a gang of crooks and finally posed for the clinch.

Had the fundamental idea of this picture been developed with entertaining incident, as, for instance, in "You Never Can Tell," rather than painstakingly building to the end of an obvious story we would find no fault with the offering, but such is not the case.

Titles that attempt to be clever and just escape being inane, and some pronounced overplaying by several principals of the cast, add to the production's shortcomings. The star doesn't have much to do but look innocent—rather too innocent for a girl named "Connie McGill," who has been a kitchen mechanic on a lot of different jobs by her own admission. Ruth Stonehouse appears in a bit after a considerable absence from the screen and makes the best impression of any one in a role that offers little opportunity.

At times the offering borders on slapstick and never does it present any real screen drama. However, there are probably some audiences and some people in all audiences who will find it satisfactory and as a program picture it may slide by without raising a storm of protest.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Viola Dana, Metro's popular ingenue star, is to be presented in a new comedy drama, "Cinderella's Twin," at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

As may be inferred by the title "Cinderella's Twin" is a moderu version of the famous fairy story presenting the star as a little slavey whom fate allows to go to a grand ball there to meet the hero of her dreams who later asks her to become his wife, after it becomes known that she is innocent of being an accomplice in a jewel robbery.

In support of Miss Dana is a well known cast and the production is one of the most meritorious of the year. Miss Dana wears a wonderful gown when the good fairy sends her to the ball and the plot and its complications will be found of unusual strength. In addition to the feature a big bill of smaller attractions has been prepared.

PROGRAM READER

"Cinderella's Twin" is the title of Viola Dana's latest starring vehicle on the Metro program and will be presented at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

In the photoplay popular Miss Dana is shown as a little kitchen slavey whom fate elects shall enact a modern version of the famous fairy story with additions in the way of a gang of crooks who unwittingly use her to help steal some valuable jewels. How she goes to the grand ball there to dance with the hero of her dreams and how she finally accepts the young prince's offer of marriage makes as interesting a romantic drama as this season's photoplays has presented.

Miss Dana is supported by a strong cast of well known players and the production itself is fully up to the present day standard. There is plenty of comedy, some real thrills and oodles of romance. What more can be required for a pleasing motion picture?

SUGGESTIONS

Opportunity is presented for tie-ups with merchants who sell kitchen articles, n the first scenes of the picture. Build window displays modeled after these scenes. For a lobby display carry out the same idea. You could rig up a complete kitchen with range, dumbwaiter, etc., all in spotless white and install a cook who will double Miss Dana. Use signs such as these. This is the kind of a kitchen Cinderel'a's Twin works in. Cinderella's Twin got ninety a month in a "push button" kitchen like this, but she fell in love and wanted a flat of her own.

In your newspaper advertising carry out the same plans. Use snappy selling talk and lead your patrons to expect light entertainment. Don't tell them the plot beyond saying that it is a modern Cinderella yarn with a gang of crooks mixed up in it. Use plenty of stills and big newspaper space. For a scene cut select stills that suggest comedy. You might give the author, director and supporting cast some mention also.

CATCH LINES

Connie ran a push button kitchen at ninety a month and dreamed of her fairy prince. Then fate and a crooked fairy godmother sent her to the grand ball, where she lost her slipper and caused a lot of trouble, but finally she went out to hunt for a four room flat in which to keep house for her prince and probably a lot of little princes and princesses by and by.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

"Very good entertainment in this complicated story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good audience picture. Its many leading love themes are apt to be confusing but it opened very big." "Good productions, which brought the crowds." "A rather complicated theme which kept up the suspense until the end. However, a bit too melodramatic in spots."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL..... DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.

"Rather obvious, but fairly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also." "Disappointing after seeing '23½ Hours Leave.' Fair business." "Very bad for the star and weak story. Business was poor." "Picture started big, slumped, and then ended big. But on the whole it's a lemon." "A usual Doug. MacLean and Doris May production which did the business. Both of these actors have been very popular in this city since appearing in '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES..... NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advanced prices."

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST..... DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week."

LAW OF THE YUKON, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST..... OCT. 2
"This picture proves a disappointment."—M. P. News.

LEOPARD WOMAN, THE (ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS)..... OCT. 16
"Melodramatic romance adapted from adventure story."—M. P. News.

"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy."

"Not above the average."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Helen Jerome Eddy is fair in this picture. Business as usual."

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH..DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LITTLE GREY MOUSE, THE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY..... NOV. 13
"New star's first picture mildly interesting."—M. P. News.

"Dorothy Gish scores in story filled with hokum."—M. P. News.

LOVE (J. PARKER READ, JR.-ASSO. PRODUCERS) LOUISE GLAUM ..... DEC. 11
"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses."

LOVE'S FLAME (FIDELITY PICTURES CO.) THOS. J. CARRIGAN-VIVIENNE OSBORNE ..... OCT. 16
"Story has distinctive appeal."—M. P. News.

MAD LOVE (VICTOR KREMER PRODUCTION) LINA CAVALIERI ..... NOV. 6
"Average production stars Cavalieri."—M. P. News.

MADAME PEACOCK (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA..... OCT. 16
"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity."

MADAM X (GOLDWYN) PAULINE FREDERICK..... OCT. 9
"Tremendous drama faultlessly acted and skillfully produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to very poor business; competition to circus and Fair as well. But has built steadily up etver since. Business, total, very good. A fine picture—a classic." "Not up to the standard of Nazimova pictures. There are moments in the picture that do not ring true. However, Nazimova followers seemed satisfied." "An average production. Box office returns fair." "Despite the fact that most persons who saw it seemed to like it, it didn't reach expectations. Crowds were only average all week, and my report is only 'fair.'" "Pleased immensely. Star at her best. Went big all week."

"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.

MARRIAGE PIT, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO..... OCT. 16
"Interesting story of big business and feminine pride."—M. P. News.

"Melodrama of interesting quality."—M. P. News.

"Drama lost amidst family squabbles and omnipresent dream ending."—M. P News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big picture which drew more than usual business." "A good picture which drew well." "Filled two houses during a simultaneous first run. Young has a steady following, who are enthusiastic supporters. This picture is different from those which have preceded. Star not so much in evidence as in 'Eyes of Youth.' Good support helps to make the picture interesting." "Picture is O. K. but we had poor business." "Mediocre picture not up to Clara Kimball Young's standard as to either drawing qualities or picture. Fair business. They came, but expected something better." "Business was good. Picture only fair. Audiences not well pleased." "The box-office showed that the public likes this production. Clara Kimball Young is well liked in this city and her name appeared frequently in the daily papers while the picture was running."

MIDSUMMER MADNESS (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 18
"Perfectly constructed picture stamps De Mille as master director."—M. P. News.

"Stage adaptation is fairly successful as picture."—M. P. News.

"Satisfied from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture which did big business for three days." "My patrons did not like this one at all." "This is a very poor offering, and we had dull business during run."

MONEY-CHANGERS, THE (BENJ. B. HAMPTON-PATHE)..... NOV. 6
"Hectic melodrama may draw in the neighborhood houses."—M. P. News.

MR. WU (STOLL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA) LANG-M'CARTHY ..... JAN. 1
"Unique and strongly dramatic from plot angle."—M. P. News.

NEW YORK IDEA, THE (REALART) ALICE BRADY..... DEC. 18
"Stage success not so good as a picture."—M. P. News.

"Colorful backgrounds and vivid action in this picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good, played to better than average business. Lots of action. The big scenes, especially those in which the animals participated, made a big hit." "Not up to some of the other Curwood stories but was liked. Average business." "ood business on this picture, which seemed to please."

NORTH WIND'S MALICE, THE (REX BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 30
"Probably the best Beach picture yet produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not much. Did fair business." "Good picture of the cold Northwest which did excellent business for two weeks, having been held over a second week on account of the large crowds it drew the first seven days."

OCCASIONALLY YOURS (GASNIER-ROBERTSON-COLE) LEW CODY ..... OCT. 2
"Male vampire in a mere succession of society scenes."—M. P. News.

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE..... NOV. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard, although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box-office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

"THE HUNDREDTH CHANCE"
(Stoll-Pathe)

Familiar Story Is Well Picturized

THE difference between the English and American productions is not so noticeable in Stoll's latest importation, "The Hundredth Chance." While a familiar and obvious story is represented here nevertheless it has been well picturized. Praise must be given to the scenario writer for furnishing an even continuity which the director has fashioned into scenes which build consecutively. While there are certain technical flaws in the production these will pass unnoticed by the average spectator because of the story interest. The analytical may observe that the interior shots are taken from corners—that complete reproductions of rooms are not offered. Some may notice faulty grouping and the over-elaborate sets.

These technicalities do not spoil the story which moves with effective situations and finishes with a good thrill and an adequate climax. As far as the plot is concerned, the picture can be easily punctured. For one thing the note of pathos is stressed a trifle too much. The heroine is represented as a much persecuted girl who, seemingly, flies from one pair of brutal arms to another. To bring solace to an invalid brother she willingly consents to marry a man far beneath her station in life, although she is unwilling to maintain her marital vows. In other words she takes everything and gives nothing in return. Her husband is groom to the "heavy" who would compromise her. And the latter is pictured as having a firm place in her heart. But in the end she realizes that her better half is a man through his willingness to fight for her.

It strikes us that treating the story with a touch of humor—painting the girl succumbing to her husband by having him play the indifferent attitude would be more effective. Instead the pathos is accentuated. Wherever she turns there is the sterner sex ready and eager to pounce upon her and devour her, so to speak. English country life is well visualized in appropriate atmosphere and the camera work is highly commendable. The thrill finds expression in a stirring steeplechase which is caught in a marvelous long shot. Riders are tumbled from their horses with reckless abandon. There are very few close-ups and more might have been used—especially in acquainting the public with the delicate charm and beauty of Mary Glynne, who is a composite picture of Constance Talmadge and Irene Castle. She is given too much liberty in emphasizing the sorrowful note. Still she has a distinctive personality which is certain to be felt. A finely balanced cast is in support. The title finds meaning in the chances of the husband to win the steeplechase and his bride at the same time. And he succeeds. The picture should prove a good box office attraction.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— is "The Hundredth Chance," produced by the Stoll Film Company of America. It is from the pen of Ethel M. Dell, one of the foremost novelists of the day, and tells a story o fa girl who in order to escape the blows and caresses of her guardian accepts a proposal of marriage from a trainer of horses—a man far beneath her station in life, with the understanding, that he must win her love before she becomes his wife in fact. After the wedding the groom's employer renews an old friendship and tries to compromise her. Her husband is not optimistic in winning his bride's love, believing that his chance is one in a hundred.

In the stable is a horse that he thinks is capable of winning the coming steeplechase. So he names the horse "The Hundredth Chance." The animal wins the Derby and the husband wins his wife, but only after she realizes that the gold in his character dominates the dross. It is a picture which is well charged with human elements—elements which build interest and suspense. There are moments of pathos and sentiment. The offering is well staged in the proper settings which exude a perfect atmosphere. Prominent in the cast are such well known English players as Dennis Neilson-Terry, Mary Glynne and Teddy Arundel.

PROGRAM READER

A story of how a man won a girl against heavy odds—as the situation looked to him—is told in "The Hundredth Chance," the Stoll picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— with a celebrated cast of English players. How the girl has full opportunity to compare him with his rival, realizing that he hasn't a chance to lose—how the lucky man wins the great steeplechase the same day—how he proves to his bride that while he may be rough in manner but carries a heart of pure gold—these things are pictured in a stirring melodrama of the eternal triangle. "The Hundredth Chance" is well balanced with thrills and such notes as pathos, romance and sentiment and is wonderfully acted. It contains charming atmosphere.

SUGGESTIONS

You might tell your crowd that the chance is theirs to see a fine English picture—a picture quite comparable to the best American production. Tell them that "The Hundredth Chance" is a stirring picture of the eternal triangle—of a girl and a man who had a chance in a hundred to win her. She married him under the stipulation that he had to win her love before she became his wife in fact. Make that plain to your crowd. Play up the cast. Tell that the actress playing the lead is remarkably beautiful—a composite picture of Constance Talmadge and Irene Castle. Tell that Dennis Neilson-Terry is in the cast. Bring out that he is a son of Ellen Terry, the famous tragedian and a brother of Alice Neilson Terry. Play up the stirring steeplechase. Use stills.

THE "TORRENT"
(Universal)

Orthodox Story Makes Rather Colorful Picture

ALTHOUGH Universal's latest is fashioned from an orthodox formula—the desert island refugee idea—it carries enough color and melodrama to provide a satisfying hour. There are highlights in its favor which may be emphasized here as picturesque night photography, an effective storm at sea, and enough adventurous incident to charm those patrons who cater to serials. The action crackles much after the serial fashion and provides a good note of suspense, although it is perfectly obvious to discover the development of the story. "The Torrent" may be put down as primitive melodrama with emphasis placed upon a persecuted heroine and the element of romance.

The introductory shot reveals a carousal aboard a yacht with the mortified bride jumping overboard to save herself from the beastly personality of her husband. Conclusions are jumped at conveniently here and one must accept it as unadulterated fiction to discover the girl in the next episode a refugee on a barren island. To this spot comes an aviator who is forced to remain when his machine is destroyed by a bootlegger. The adventurous incident develops when a party of whiskey runners come to manufacture some "hooch" and carry it back to the mainland. They mistrust the hero to be a government agent and subject him to various forms of torture—one of which is unduly cruel. Jack Perrin certainly earns his money in being tied flat to his back on a floating raft and the surf allowed to run over him. The villains have another object which is to harass the girl and dishonor her if possible.

One must not question the means of sustenance or the fact that the hero is clean-shaven despite the fact that he saved nothing from his wardrobe. One overlooks these flaws in the vigorous episodes which certainly contain some thrills not equipped with shock absorbers. Of course, propinquity brings the pair together in a number of romantic embraces and their adventure on the island is taken up with rescuing one another. The girl thinks she has become a widow, but for the purposes of the complications, her husband is allowed to resuscitate himself. In the end he dies from dissipation, leaving the romancers to find love's fulfillment in matrimony. They make their escape by overpowering their opponents and riding away in their launch. The picture offers several "he-man" fights which are realistic with such capable character actors as Jack Curtis about. He is unusually villainous here and may be said to excel himself. The night photography, presumably taken with powerful arc-lights or search-lights, is always effective. Miss Novak plays with considerable enthusiasm. "The Torrent" may defy logic, but it carries a sting all the same.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A story of adventure and romance is "The Torrent," adapted from George Rix's novel, "Out of the Sunset," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ————, with Eva Novak as the star. The action pilots the charming Miss Novak through scenes which build the utmost in suspense and adventure and compel her to show flashes of capable histrionic ability. As Velma Patton, who is shackled to a brutal husband but who finds love's expression after the supposed death of her spouse, she is called upon to give vitality to scene after scene and her work calls for the highest praise.

Unable to put up with her husband's brutality, she suffers him to have a paralytic stroke during a cruise on his yacht. The wild orgy ends in the girl finding sanctuary on a lonely island while her husband is seemingly brought to his death. To this island comes a young aviator whose virtues counteract the faults of her husband. And they manage to exist and propinquity lends an enchantment which ends in love. But adventure comes also in the figures of bootleggers who torture the aviator under the suspicion that he is a government agent and harass the girl at every opportunity. However they make their escape and their romance culminates in marriage after the husband dies from dissipation. The picture is colorful and charged with crackling action and is capably enacted by a cast that includes Jack Curtis and Jack Harris.

PROGRAM READER

She was cast upon a lonely isle. But she wasn't a Crusoe. Into her life came a refugee, and together they managed to exist. Perhaps romance had something to do with it. But their happiness was cut short by a group of bootleggers who tortured them at every opportunity. How they made their escape—how they find real happiness in the end is told in five reels of adventurous melodrama. The action crackles with suspense and mystery. The patrons of the ———— will enjoy "The Torrent" when it comes to the ———— theatre next ————, with Eva Novak as the star. They will enjoy the night photography—the storm at sea—the rescue—the startling scenes on the island—they will see a picture of vigor and punch. Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

See the pretty and talented Eva Novak in her latest picture, "The Torrent." See the storm at sea, the rescue, the fine romance, the mystery. See a red-blooded melodrama.

Can a wife give up hope of finding happiness if she is married to the wrong man? The answer is found in "The Torrent," Eva Novak's latest Universal feature.

"THE FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Play Seems Old-Fashioned as a Picture

IT may be that the late Clyde Fitch is old-fashioned if one accepts the film version of "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" as an example of his playwrighting ability. As a play the offering carried wit and charm and established itself as sure-fire entertainment. In its screen form the vitality is missing because the dialogue could not be incorporated. Such a play depended entirely upon its conversation. It is not a play of situation or climax. Hence it does not make good screen material. The picture represents a deal of talking between the characters with little or no movement from the radius of the camera.

Developed as a lively, polite comedy or treated in a different manner from the original might, have spelled some measure of genuine entertainment. But one can find no response in stilted figures who go through their capers like so many puppets on a string. The old-fashioned aspect enters in the cut and dried plot and action. It is a theme which has been used time and again by companies which cater to exaggerated comedies. But here it is done with a great deal of repression—as if the soft pedal was the best medium of expression. Whatever charm it contains is found in the personality of the star who gives color and zest to her role of the mischievous widow who, to save her sister from disgrace, suffers herself to sustain a shady reputation. The tempo is altogether too slow which may account for the lapses of action. Quickened up, even with the risk of shortening it this side of feature length, the picture would carry a better spontaneity.

This vital element is missing—an element absolutely necessary for comedy expression. There is a counter romance which provides the complications. But there is no suspense or surprise for the simple reason that every scene, every incident, is firmly planted in the mind of the spectator. One knows far in advance just what will happen. Director Dillon has done wonders in guiding his players. He has brought out Billie Burke's charming style and put her through her paces in a thoroughly compelling manner. And his backgrounds are always effective. There is a carnival scene which is rich in atmosphere. Most of the action transpires indoors and some of the shots are unduly studioesque. A comedy should never be told through the medium of captions. Being a dialogue play, something should have been written into it in the shape of incident or action. Very little humor comes to the surface. An often-told tale, it somehow falls flat for its absence of the necessary ingredients. The only peppery note is found in the title.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture of a charming widow who compromises herself to save her sister from disgrace is revealed in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," adapted from the late Clyde Fitch's play of the same name. Upon the stage, the offering was characterized as a scintillating entertainment—one which afforded the spectator a pleasureable hour in the theatre. The screen version is said to duplicate the original in the manner of its sure-fire incident and effervescent humor. Mr. Fitch was a master of situation and climax and "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" may be said to paint the playwright at his best.

As a vehicle for the expression of Billie Burke's talents it affords her wonderful opportunities to score her individual charm and personality. She plays the part of a gay and winsome widow who, to save her sister from disgrace, suffers herself to be compromised. This precipitates a deal of adventure and causes her to lose place in the estimation of her beloved. However, the sister comes to the rescue by declaring herself guilty and compensates by bringing the charming widow and her fiance together. Miss Burke is delightful in the role—a role which may be said to be ideal for the expression of her personality. Her company is competent and the production is of a high class order.

PROGRAM READER

The charming Billie Burke—the winsome Billie Burke—the most delightful comedienne on the screen is coming to the ———— theatre in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." This is an occasion to make the most of, because the picture is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play of the same name—a play which captivated audiences a few short years ago. Mr. Fitch was a master of dialogue—a master of domestic complications and he could write intelligently upon the triangle. "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" is a tale of a charming widow who compromises herself for the love of her sister. How her self-respect is established is told in five enjoyable reels which scintillate with humor and gaiety. Miss Burke gives a colorful portrayal. See "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson."

CATCH LINES

See Billie Burke in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," a picture of adventure and romance. A picture of a charming widow who found herself in a peck of trouble but who came through with flying colors.

"THE GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART"

(Goldwyn)

Madge Kennedy Plays Two Roles Exceptionally Well

THIS is a pretty fair picture and ought to go over in good shape with any audience, but it might have been better, or at least more convincing and less of a vehicle, if somebody, maybe Miss Kennedy, hadn't decided that in order to let the star appear in 99 44/100 per cent of the scenes it was necessary that she play two roles when there is absolutely no use made of the "look alike" stuff.

From the vehicle standpoint Miss Kennedy certainly delivers. Her characterization of the maid who runs away from the straight laced religious sect is both unique and appealing, and just as clever is the way she plays the gum-chewing way wise telephone operator in a Broadway hotel. This latter characterization is aided by exceptionally good titles.

The story of "The Girl with the Jazz Heart" is largely a series of incidents showing how two girls, one a Quaker sort of a maid who has come to New York to marry a matrimonial bureau advertiser, the other a Broadway flapper, spend an evening at a Broadway "jazz" restaurant, each grabbing off a satisfactory husband as a result thereof. As the Quaker maid Miss Kennedy has to go back home under arrest, there to be rescued by the hero, while as the other girl she gets her man without any trouble at all.

All in all it is a very entertaining yarn, with good incident provided for the cabaret scenes and some excellent religious sect characterizations by a strong supporting cast. Miss Kennedy is as comely and petite as ever and makes the most of the opportunities presented by two fat parts. In a way we don't blame her for not wanting to give either of them up to another actress. Still the picture would have been better dramatically if she had.

The exteriors used in the religious sect sequences were very evidently the real thing. They suggest that a trip up into certain parts of Pennsylvania must have been made to film some of the scenes.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The main attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Girl With The Jazz Heart," starring Madge Kennedy. This is considered the best vehicle the charming and talented Goldwyn star has ever had and it permits her to play two parts with that poise and presence which is hers on stage and screen. She captivates with her humor and conquers with her delightful mannerisms. Prominent in her support is Joe King, while others who contribute noteworthy performances are William Walcot, Robert Vaughn, Emil Hoch, Lillian Worth, Helen Du Bois and Leon Guerre Gendron.

Miss Kennedy plays the part of a Quaker maiden who runs away from the boredom of a country village and comes to New York, where she finds adventure in searching for a husband through a matrimonial agency. There is plenty of intrigue and mystery and romance and no small amount of humor in the offering and the part played by Miss Kennedy is rich in its possibilities for expression. One might say that it is a double role—a role which carries enough variety for the star's talents. She is the demure Quakeress and the sophisticated city girl. Lawrence Windom, the director, has given the picture a good production. He has provided settings which contain appropriate atmosphere and his action is charged with vitality and vigor.

PROGRAM READER

Madge Kennedy, the charming comedienne, will come to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest Goldwyn picture, entitled "The Girl With the Jazz Heart," written by Robert T. Shannon and directed by Lawrence C. Windom. This offering permits Miss Kennedy to bask in the radiance of a double role—that of a demure Quaker maiden and a sophisticated city girl, and it is so rich in its expression that the star may be said to have the best vehicle which has ever been hers on the screen. The picture is marked for its adventure and sentiment, romance and humor-elements which spell perfection in entertainment. A competent company is found in the star's support. "The Girl With the Jazz Heart" is one of the best pictures of the year. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

You can make a statement here which will not stand contradiction. Make plain that Madge Kennedy has the best vehicle of her career upon the screen. Tell that the story tests her ability as a dramatic actress and also as a comedienne and that she comes through with flying colors.. Play up the title. Make use of it in your copy and treat same in a manner which will invite curiosity. Play up the cast and director. Use your artist to paint posters showing the star in the two roles—that of a Quaker maiden in the correct costume. A good touch would be to draw the star in a demure attitude. Then paint her as a girl full of life and keen for pleasure. Your prologue can contain a singer attired in a Quaker costume singing a Quaker song. Then you can have some dancers going through the latest jazz steps.

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"The Restless Sex" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Stood up well during second week. A play with a wide appeal presented on a lavish scale." "Good title but poorly screened and business dropped toward end of week." "This picture began big but dropped steadily each day."

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" (Metro)—"Business only fair. Audiences liked it fairly well. Picture too long for story."

"The Restless Sex" (Paramount)—"Played a week behind Carlyle Blackwell's road show and cleaned up. Had 'em chained out at 2 P.M. on opening day and business picked up later. Corking good picture and one with a sure-fire feminine appeal." "This picture opened big and continued so. Full houses every show."

"Up In Mary's Attic" (State Rights)—"Only a fair production but a good box-office attraction."

"The Fortune Teller" (Robertson-Cole)—"Despite the fact that star is not known here, we put this over in great shape by using a crystal-gazer who told fortunes immediately after the picture. Usual policy of this house is three-day runs—played this one to a week's fine business."

"The Riddle: Woman" (Associated Exhibitors)—"Good. Any objections to this picture may be the animosity of the public toward Geraldine Farrar." "This is a wonderful story but Farrar herself does not photograph well and the picture has other defects. Picture did not draw well at all."

"Best of Luck" (Metro)—"A poor show—looked like a serial all done up in 6 reels. Three days to poor business."

"Kiss Me Quick" (Fox)—"Far ahead of Chaplin. In Lloyd and Seamon's class. Played is four days."

"Rose of Nome" (Fox)—"This is a fair Alaskan picture; usual dance hall stuff. Poor business one day."

"Nurse Marjorie" (Realart)—"Pleasing picture. Minter is growing in popularity. Average business one day."

"Six Best Cellars" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Pleased greatly. Big business one day."

"Sick Abed" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Some disappointment on this; perhaps we exploited it too strong. Average business one day."

"Humoresque" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Extra good. Two days to extra big and big business."

"Desert Love" (Fox)—"A good picture to extra big and big business for two days."

"The White Circle" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"A poor picture. Played it two days to average and poor business."

"Little Boss" (Bessie Love)—"Fine star; fine picture. Big business one day."

"Great Accident" (Goldwyn)—"Very good. Two days to big business."

"King Spruce" (Hodkinson)—"A good picture; plenty of action. Average business two days."

"Heart O' The Hills" (Mary Pickford)—"Played to a big week's business. On the whole the picture seemed to please although there were some adverse criticisms."

"THAT GIRL MONTÁNA"
(Hampton-Pathe)

Star Dominates Pleasing Production

"THAT GIRL MONTANA" might be termed a personal triumph for Blanch Sweet, for she dominates every scene in which she appears.

Although the story is not as strong as some of her previous ones, and is inclined to be illogical, the star has a role which entirely fits her personality and gives her opportunity to display her talents.

In the openng scenes the star is seen in the role of a boy who is forced to become a bandit by a man she believes to be her father. Miss Sweet paints her character very true and somewhat resembles the renowned Maude Adams in action and appearance, when she played in Peter Pan. These scenes are full of action and tense moments and should afford plenty of excitement.

When Miss Sweet changes to women's apparel the story seems to change with her and loses much of its former advantage. Not that the plot deteriorates in any way but that the interest seems to lag.

However. the star comes to the rescue and by a series of well thought out situations, carries the picture to a pleasing finish.

The story is of a girl who seeks to free herself from a life of crime she detests. In her efforts, she finds the man she had feared was not her father, but a gambler who had run away with her mother.

She finds her real father, a just fate befalls the villain, and the girl and her hero start life anew.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"That Girl Montana," a picturization of the novel of the same name by Marah Ellis in which Blanche Sweet is starred under the Pathe banner, will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of next ————.

In the production, Blanche Sweet is seen in a virile, outdoor portrayal, different from anything she has characterized heretofore.

In the opening of the picture she appears in boy's clothes, helping her father hold-up a stage coach, and the action of the drama shows her transition from the untamed state of a girl of the West to the sweet girl of her lover's dreams.

Briefly, the story is of a girl who seeks to free herself from a life of crime she detests. In her efforts, she finds the man she had feared was not her father but a tin horn gambler who had run away with her mother.

She finds her real father, a just fate befalls the villain and the girl and her hero are at last free to begin life anew.

There are some real thrills in "That Girl Montana" and the action is smooth and fast. It is rich in human interest and the love theme is a tender and pretty one.

The locale is laid in the Kootenai country, which extends for miles along the Canadian boundary line, with British Columbia on one side and Idaho and Montana on the other.

PROGRAM READER

The elite of Sinna Ferry had foregathered in honor of the "day-out" of Montana Rivers—"That Girl Montana." It was the happiest moment of Tana's life—it meant that she was recognized as repectable. Then came the thunderbolt!

"What're you doing among decent people? Main street's the dead-line for women like you! You traveled around, dressed as a boy, with a low-down crook, and now you aim to horn in with respectable folks!"

This is one of the gripping, tense and dramatic moments in "That Girl Montana," Blanche Sweet's newest Hampton-Pathe feature showing at the ———— theatre ————.

It is a picturization of Marah Ellis Ryan's novel of the same name and relates the terrific struggle of a girl to overcome the stigma of sins of which she was innocent.

The action of the story takes place in Montana, along the Kootenai River at the time when gold seekers flocked to that beautiful country.

In the production Miss Sweet is seen in a virile, outdoor portrayal, different than anything she has characterized heretofore.

SUGGESTIONS

If your patrons like Blanche Sweet, do not be afraid to book this one, for it will afford them good entertainment.

The star does some of the best acting of her career and injects plenty of action into a part that would fall flat if it were not for her talents.

You can play up Miss Sweet as strongly as you like without any fear of a comeback. Tell your patrons that in the part of the boy which she portrays in this production, Miss Sweet resembles the renowned Maude Adams both in action and personality.

CATCH LINES

"What're you doing among decent people? Main street's the dead-line for women like you! You traveled around, dressed as a boy, with a low-down crook and now you aim to horn in with respectable folks!" So said one of the elite to the young girl who believed she had become respectable. See Blanche Sweet in her latest production, "That Girl Montana." It will thrill you.

"TWO MOONS"
(Fox)

Jones in a Story of Gunplay and Hard Riding

"TWO MOONS" is a Western without anything very distinctive about it except that the action is carried on en masse. That is to say instead of Buck Jones fighting single handed throughout five reels, the combat is carried on with a great expenditure of ammunition by two miniature armies—the cattlemen and the sheepmen. For the story is one of those laid in that period of the West's history when the meeting of a cowpuncher and sheepherder was the signal for the drawing of guns and much billingsgate.

"Two Moons" also is unusual inasmuch as neither of the two factions are much to be admired. Jones plays an inspector in the employ of the Cattlemen's society who are carrying on a campaign of murder against the sheepmen. The girl, who is naturally taken as representing the sheepherders is equally vicious in her hated of her enemies. So it is something like a fight between two East Side gangs or a couple of Chinese tongs. Neither side wins the sympathy of the audience.

The character of the girl is probably the most interesting thing in the picture. In the beginning she tries to kill Jones—the representative of the despicable cattlemen. He punishes her for horse-stealing by kissing her. In the very climax of the picture she is fighting him with all her strength and it is only when he falls wounded that she realizes her love for him. It is another variety of the cave-man and primitive woman theme. The girl is played by Carol Holloway in a satisfactory manner.

Of course, the romance is only secondary to the main ingredient of every Western—action. There is enough of this, for there are a couple of lynching parties, shots in the dark, wild escapes of the heroine, a single combat, and in the end, the storming of the cabin in the clearing with the hero shooting first from one window and then another as his enemies encircle the hut. They are driven off at the nick of time by rescuing cattlemen, much like the cowboys used to scatter the invading Indians. Unlike a Mix picture there is no outstanding daredevil stunt of the star to leave a deep impression.

"Two Moons" has not the zest of Buck Jones' last picture, "Just Pals." It is just an average, likeable Western.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones, cowboy-actor-soldier and all around he-man, will play the stellar role in "Two Moons," the feature attraction at the ———— which will open on ———— for a ———— days' run. More thrills are in store for the great number of this star's admirers, for "Two Moons" is a swift moving Western drama, with plenty of action and love interest. The story is adapted from Robert Welles Ritchie's novel, "The Trail of Two Moons," and is a stirring tale of a Western feud.

"Two Moons" was adapted and directed by Edward J. LeSaint. Carol Holloway, in the role of the tempestuous daughter of the sheep herder, proves to be just as capable an actress as she is pretty. Buck Jones manages to find place in the picture for new and daring stunts which will thrill even the most hardened picturegoer. Jones enacts the role of Bill Blunt, a cattleman, who complicates a feud between the sheep herders and cattlemen, by falling in love with the pretty daughter of a sheepman. She has been raised in hatred of everything connected with sheep, but finally Jones, largely through cave-man methods, convinces her that even a cattleman can be worth loving.

PROGRAM READER

"Look 'em straight in the eye," says Bill Blunt, "and they are bound to miss." And it worked. When the daughter of a sheep herder was shooting at him, a cattleman, he only looked her straight in the eye and smiled. And she missed. Blunt also had his own methods of love-making. The girl who tried to kill him found herself in his arms before many days were past. How did he do it? That is a secret that only Buck Jones can tell you. For this daring cowboy-actor plays Bill Blunt in "Two Moons," the feature picture which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This picture is a happy combination of romance and thrills, with its story laid in the West in those days when cattlemen and sheepherders engaged in a continuous feud. The story was adapted from the novel, "The Trail of Two Moons," by Robert Welles Ritchie, by Edward J. LeSaint, who also directed the production. Playing the leading feminine role is Carol Holloway, an accomplished actress as well as one of the prettiest leading women on the screen. "Two Moons" is a story of a he-man, and if you like to see a virile, rugged type of American manhood you cannot afford to miss this picture.

CATCH LINES

A mixture of entrancing romance and virile action—with Buck Jones, the leading portrayer of virile Western characters, in the stellar role.

Now nearing completion in Hollywood

It is now merely a matter of weeks when we will officially announce and formally open our magnificent California laboratory which will be operated under the personal supervision of a man world famous as one of the great Masters of the Art of good developing and printing.

During 1921 we hope and expect to start construction on laboratories in New York and in London.

Dependable Salesmanship

Even a gilt-edged bond doesn't find a ready sale in the hands of an untrustworthy-looking salesman. Similarly a film might of itself be a most excellent production, but if the posters with which it is advertised are not attractive, persuasive, convincing—in a word, if they do not inspire a complete confidence, the exhibitor has small chance of deriving the profits to which his efforts have entitled him.

Just as fine films result from the properly co-ordinated efforts of great directors and writers and actors, so also the RITCHEY POSTER results from the like efforts of the greatest artists and advertising experts concerned in poster production. Such posters are a necessary aid in putting over even the finest of films. Booking a fine photo play is not enough—the job is only half done. Complete it by using RITCHEY posters—for RITCHEY posters are the product of the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world!

with JOHNNY HINES as "TORCHY"

"Torchy," the famous red-headed office-boy, has a 100% appeal to motion picture audiences. His creator, Sewell Ford, has been writing about him for 10 years in leading magazines such as "The Saturday Evening Post," in leading newspapers, also in seven books—all "best sellers." Over 2,000,000 families in the United States and Canada know him and laugh heartily at his every antic.

"Torchy"—a sort of super office-boy, with all the readiness of boys for a fight or a frolic, all the quickness of wit, the love of fun, and the sense of honor so typical of our American youth. His capers ring true—and yet have all the fun of the funniest farce. "Torchy" Comedies are CLEAN, FINE FUN.

Announces

ESTABLISHMENT OF

FINE ARTS CITY

More than 700 acres of ground in Jacksonville, have been purchased by Fine Arts Pictures, Incorporated, of New York.

Over $1,000,000.00 will be spent transforming Camp Joseph E. Johnston into a spot of beauty.

Murray W. Garsson, President of Fine Arts Pictures, Incorporated, starts work immediately erecting 20 complete unit studios. These studios, capable of accommodating 40 companies, will be the finest in America. Each unit distinct and separate. Every studio will give each company an entirely separate working space from all other companies using Fine Arts City.

The streets already built in Fine Arts City are paved with brick. A complete sewerage system covers the entire city; fire pumps are on every street, close enough to each other to limit fire hazard and assure perfect safety to the entire city.

In Fine Arts City there is being built a "Western City" for filming Western pictures; slums typical of Chinatown quarters; and outdoor sets of every description are being built for filming big productions. A fireproof laboratory complete in every detail is being erected.

Fine Arts City will stand for greater efficiency in the production of motion pictures.

Plus this wonderful motion picture city where complete service will be given producers, the City of Jacksonville and in fact all the people of Florida, stand behind this gigantic movement ready to extend the motion picture industry their service and a hearty welcome. This welcome means that producers will be treated in the kindest way; we assure you it will not be necessary for you to form your own buying units; we pledge ourselves to work with you hand in hand in making your productions a success from both an artistic and financial standpoint.

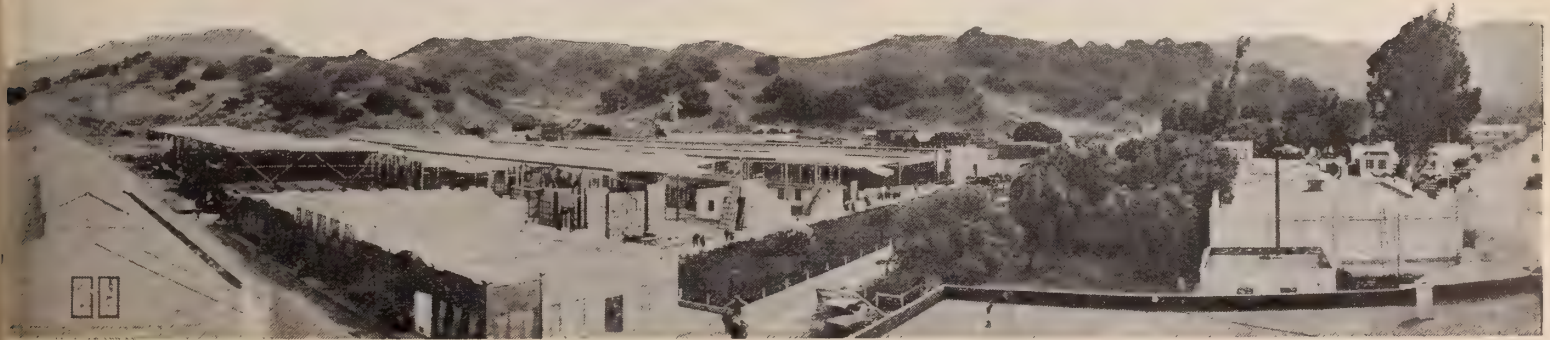
The Turkish and Oriental Field Sets at Universal City, with their streets and separate buildings, would make a pretty good sized village all by themselves. Many of these buildings and streets you often see, artfully camouflaged, in the pictures of other producers who have not Universal's vast resources.



52 Good Pictures a Year

THE Turkish Field Set (Number 170) shown here is only one of more than two hundred similar reasons why Universal can give you scenic realism at low cost in your Special Attractions—and do it fifty-two times a year.

No other producer in the world has anything like Universal's standing resources in Field Sets. As a matter of fact, competing producers are constantly renting from us parts of this magnificent equipment at Universal City. We think that visible picture-making facilities such as these furnish you a far better guarantee of satisfaction than any quantity of printer's ink and adjectives. We think you'll see that there's no cause to worry as to where your weekly good picture is to come from—right straight through the year.

We Couldn't Improve the Service So We Improved the Posters

International News Service, as it stands at the moment of writing, cannot be improved. This is because during every minute of the day and night members of International's vast organization are on guard to make even the most minor improvement the moment the need for it is shown. It is this constant vigilance that assures you the last word in a news reel with every issue of International.

SO great an attraction is International News that a series of new posters has been designed to draw even more business to those houses presenting the service. These posters are in four colors and are intended to be used consecutively. Beginning on the first of the year, the outstanding features of the current reel were printed on Design No. 1, the features of the next issue on No. 2, etc. This step on the part of International is merely one more indication of the spirit behind the International organization that makes International service first in news, first in features, and first in the theatres of the country.

Wonderfully Human and Humorous Little Picture—A Delight

"THE TRUANT HUSBAND"
Rockett Film Corp.

DIRECTOR ..... Thomas Heffron
AUTHOR ..... Albert Payson Terhune
SCENARIO BY ..... Daniel Whitcomb
CAMERAMAN ..... Al Siegler
AS A WHOLE ..... Very human little picture—filled with subtle comedy and fine human interest
STORY ..... Splendid and realistic version of eternal triangle—one of Terhune's best
DIRECTION ..... Just right
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK ..... Very good
LEADING PLAYERS ..... Betty Blythe, Mahlon Hamilton and Francelia Billington all do splendidly
SUPPORT ..... Minor
EXTERIORS ..... Very appropriate
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL ..... Splendid
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Old sweetheart attempts to renew romance with happily married husband
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... About 5,000 feet

Al and Ray Rockett are making their bow as producers with "The Truant Husband" and a more auspicious beginning has seldom been recorded for a producing company. "The Truant Husband" is one of those intimate little pictures, something on the scheme of the comedies produced by the late Sidney Drew and the comedy realities produced by Mrs. Drew with John Cumberland as the star.

The story is one of Albert Payson Terhune's best and tells of a husband, happily married for six years, who meets an old sweetheart and, on her suggestion, attempts to revive their old romance. The major part of the action concerns their trip to an inn where they used to have such good times.

Vera, the old flame, insists on taking the train just as they used to. It is a hot and dirty trip and wears down the good humor of each of them. To make matters worse, Vera loses her vanity case and when, after the dirty ride and the long dusty tramp along the road, she is unable to freshen up her charms, she presents a very sorry sight.

Friend husband is quite disillusioned when he sees Vera's makeup running amuck over her fact but struggles bravely on to the inn. This garden spot of their romancing has deteriorated into a picnic ground. More disillusionment. Finally an argument and the two go their ways home.

The husband's excuse to get away from home for the day had been an airplane trip with a friend. The friend was to send a telegram when he reached his destination purporting to come from him, the husband. Back in town he reads a paper that his friend has met with a fatal accident on the return trip. He hurries home, not knowing what alibi to offer his wife and finds, to his joy, that she has been away—the telegram lies on the table unopened. He decides, anyway, to make a clean breast of the affair to his wife but she laughs when he tells her the truth.

Type doesn't convey the delightful subtleties and satirical thrusts of "The Truant Husband." It is a joy from start to finish. Director Heffron has done his work in splendid spirit and has been assisted by a remarkably appreciative cast. Betty Blythe deserves worlds of credit for her portrayal of Vera—especially since she seems willing to "smear" her beauty with the effects of the hot railroad trip. Mahlon Hamilton is exceedingly good as the husband and Francelia Billington's part as the wife is given rare charm by her performance.

A Fine Attraction for High Class Theaters

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Releasing arrangements haven't been concluded with regard to "The Truant Husband" but when they are this picture ought to be signed up by all exhibitors who cater to audiences of intelligence and appreciation. Its parallel with the comedies referred to above only goes part way, for certainly this is chuck full of the most entertaining sort of action and never a dull scene shows itself.

There are good advertising angles too, notably the name of the author and the fact that this was a Cosmopolitan Magazine story and the three featured players. Such a combination of names to advertise ought to draw the crowds in pretty well. And certainly the picture will entertain. It is one of those that causes chuckle after chuckle. Of boisterous laughs it has very few but its THERE in every entertaining point. Grab it when you get the chance.

EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

"The Price of Silence" is Peggy Hyland at her best. The intensely dramatic and totally surprising climax make this story interesting entertainment.

The Billboard

An entertaining picture, splendidly acted and finely presented. Will hold the attention of the most restless crowd. Can be played at any theatre, as it is clean, wholesome and highly dramatic. Peggy Hyland has struck her stride at last.

The Morning Telegraph

The film is absorbingly interesting as a rattling good story. Peggy Hyland gives a sympathetic portrayal as the heroine. The story gains momentum and ends with a typical Sherlock Holmes punch after much well-planned suspense.

Motion Picture News

Sunrise has injected into this feature suspense of the very best kind. "The Price of Silence" is a likeable mystery story with a likeable star which will hold the interest of all.

EXHIBITOR'S HERALD

A generally acceptable offering. Will be found satisfactory entertainment by the majority of picture goers.

ANITA STEWART ANNIVERSARY WEEK

LOUIS B. MAYER

To comply with so many unsolicited requests from exhibitors in large and small towns all over the country I have, at their demand, inaugurated, and feel very proud to present, my first Anita Stewart Anniversary Week commencing January 16th, which I will make an annual event.

The product in which I have presented Anita Stewart, coupled with her popularity, has reached a pinnacle far surpassing my fondest dreams and this remark was made to me by one of the most prominent executives of First National: "Mayer, in my opinion, you have been the most consistent shooter in First National and I congratulate you."

My ambition is a full 100% representation in the United States. Many exhibitors of the smaller towns have not, to date, played all the Stewart Productions. Every exhibitor has played one or more but I want a full 100% representation!

First National branch managers have received instructions relative to revised price list which I am sure will meet with the approval of all exhibitors to such extent that I will gain the object of this campaign, namely, a full 100% representation of the Anita Stewart product in every town.

Exhibitors by the score have repeatedly told me that the cost and worth of my productions upheld my predictions and you will please me greatly by making my first annual Anita Stewart Week commencing January 16th a great big success.

I thank you.

LOUIS B. MAYER.

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXIV JANUARY 15, 1921 No. IV

Footage

One of the New York dailies recently tried to make a sensation out of the situation with a front page story of closed studios, actors out of work, etc., etc. The story is pointless—and not a discovery.

Within the trade we have been talking reduced production for the past few years, starting with the slogan of "fewer and better pictures and longer runs." There has been, of course, more talk than action, more advertising propaganda than sincerity.

Last Spring the writer, after a survey of the Los Angeles field, called attention in several editorials to the increase of production units and the decrease of production per unit—a very sharp one, to not more than four pictures a year.

This curtailment is healthful. It is economic progress. It simply means—better pictures and less waste. But we'll do better if we stop talking about it aimlessly, and superficially, and find out just exactly what it means and indicates.

In the writer's opinion, we are, right now, in the midst of the second biggest turning point in the industry's history.

And the key-word, past and present, is—footage.

We turned from footage once before—that was the first big turning point; and now we are turning again.

Trade history is being made—and we are entering its second big chapter. New alignments will result, and there will be a breaking down of old mechanisms.

In earlier days—in chapter one, in other words,—the General Film Company bought all product from its producers upon a simple, arbitrary basis of ten cents per foot. Footage was the sole basis of dealing between producer and distributor.

The public bought footage too. That is to say, they were largely interested in pictures as a mechanical novelty. So the scheme worked well. It was sufficient unto the times—for a while—

Until—the producer wanted to make fewer and better pictures, wanted, in other words to break away from footage production. And with this aim he wanted, necessarily, to break away from footage distribution, because footage distribution made footage production, was a leveller of effort, a damper upon quality pictures.

So footage distribution gave way to percentage distribution, the producer being paid by the quality and not the volume of his product, by what, in other words, its merit earned from the public.

So we changed—and with considerable speed from footage to features—and from footage exchanges to feature exchanges.

A large number of feature exchange systems developed. The exigencies of the times encouraged them. We have never believed in the producer-owned exchanges. We believe the system to be uneconomic. Just the same it has been difficult to argue against the producer's contention that it was necessary for him to own his own exchange in order to get the most out of his pictures.

But the supreme fault of the many producer-owned exchanges was this: their initial investment and large overhead—at least a million dollars a year—put a heavy strain upon production and induced the producer to go into volume production in an effort to reduce distribution expense per picture.

The aggregate effect, in other words, was to sway us back into that which the industry climbed out of in chapter one and only through the breaking down of footage distribution—namely footage production.

For the past several years, we have produced, each year, almost twice as many features as our domestic and foreign market called for; and we have done so at a heavy general loss. We know of individual instances where large annual sums have been lost on the production of the regular program release only to be made up by the production of a few "special" features, serials, etc.

Which brings us to the "special" picture—and chapter two of our history.

Out of the mass of feature footage production of the past several years, we have had numerous "special" pictures. They are better pictures, that's all—the genuine fewer and better kind, made with care and time and outside of the rut of schedule or footage production.

So again—in chapter two—we are turning from footage production to better pictures; and, as before, we must now have the kind of distribution that discourages footage production and promotes and encourages fewer and better pictures.

This is the highly important problem today.

We believe the industry for the next two years will seek to readjust itself around this central and fundamental demand.

And, in closing, we add the thought: if distribution had to change from a flat and arbitrary purchase price to percentage—in order to encourage better pictures—won't exhibition have to change in the very same way to achieve the very same result?

WM. A. JOHNSTON.

Urges Abolition of Police Censors in Chicago

Complete abolition of police censorship of motion pictures is one of the principal recommendations of the Chicago Moving Picture Commission, following an investigation and hearing that have been under way since September 23, 1918. The voluminous report of 184 pages contains many remarks on the question of censorship and declares that there should be such censorship, but not at the hands of the police. A proposed ordinance is embodied in the report, creating a department of motion pictures of three members which should have exclusive jurisdiction over the issuance of permits. A salary of $5,000 a year, " in order to secure persons who are fitted by education and other qualifications to judge of the films," is suggested.

The commission also believes that the commission should approve posters and other advertising matter put out with each picture and that the stamp or label of the department should appear, not only on each film but on each poster.

The present system of " pink permits," which permits the exhibition to children of certain films, should be done away with, in the opinion of the commission. " No picture should be exhibited that could not be shown before the father and mother in company with their children," says the report.

Announcement is made from the headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation that Daniel Frohman has rented the Lyceum at West 45th Street, New York, to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a period of ten years from next October. This does not mean, adds the statement, that the Lyceum is to be converted into a picture house. The dramatic traditions of the Frohman management will be preserved at the Lyceum as at the Empire, which has also come under the control of the Famous Players-Lasky organization.

In the meantime, the association of David Belasco with Charles Frohman, Inc., continues at both these theatres.

New York F. I. L. M. Club Install New Officers

Special meeting was held on Tuesday evening of this week for the installation of the following new officers who will officiate during 1921: President, I. E. Chadwick, Vice-President S. Eckman, Jr., Treasurer L. Rosenbluh, and Sergeant-at-arms A. Ables.

The membership now includes 99 per cent of all distributing companies which have offices in New York City.

Preparation for next annual convention of exchange managers in Boston, New Haven, Albany, Buffalo and New York City will soon be under way.

Snapshots

By Wm. A. Johnston

Big Five.—Secret out at last. Has had industry by ears for past four weeks. Pencils have been working overtime on hotel table cloths, figuring out possible producer combinations; trade papers beseeched for information; wise ones knew all about it, etc. But never a leak till evening of January third when the trade press, at a dinner, was informed that Big Five meant five Big First National productions to be given special showing to exhibitors in Chicago January 10th. Clever publicity stunt. About the best ever pulled off. Based upon keen insight into industry's love of gossip and exhibitor's interest in new production sources. First National received over 500 letters from exhibitors asking for information.

N. B.—C. L. Yearsley made a speech at the dinner.

Joe Brandt.—Back from interesting trip. Saw many exhibitors. Says fewer and better pictures is the note for 1921. Exhibitors must and will keep open dates. Good interview in this issue.

W. R. Rothacker.—Breezed in and out of town. Happy over his new California laboratory, right in the heart of Hollywood, ready for business in February and with a capacity as large as his big Chicago plant. The capable Joe Allers will be in charge.

Benjamin B. Hampton.—Has a column and more interview in Los Angeles Times on how and why he produces good pictures. He does; and deserves his success. One producer who really works; his hours are from 8 A. M. till dark—and after. Maps out the picture with his staff in advance of camera work—all sequence and details. Infinite care taken. Holds conferences right along with directors, cast and writers. Gets them all into the spirit of the play. Says " the play's the thing." New stars will be made. Warns against censorship. About to launch big campaign through Pictorial Review.

The New Riviera Theatre—Knoxville, Tenn. Another addition to the S. A. Lynch Chain. Cost $250,000. Seats 1,100. Hope Jones Organ. Beautiful furnishings. Plans are also under way for Rivoli Theatre in Chattanooga, a combination house, to cost $500,000. Will be similar in design to the Tivoli, Chattanooga's million dollar picture theatre which opens early in February. All in the Lynch chain. Frank Dowler, Jr., General Manager of Tennessee Enterprises, controlling Rivoli, Tivoli, etc., in New York.

Does Not Expect Increas in Chicago Licenses

Motion picture theatres in Chicago ar not to have their licenses increased durin 1921, according to Alderman A. J. Ce mak, chairman of the council revenue com mittee, who has gone on the warpath aft the legitimate theatres which have raise prices and which have turned their bus ness over to brokers, from whom the cit gets no revenue.

At a hearing of the committee this wee Maurice A. Choynski of the Allied Amus ments Association, appeared to object t any further increase in license fees for m tion picture houses.

" We get absolutely nothing from th city now for what we pay," he declare " The police and health departments ca find plenty of men to serve several notice daily on me to remove the ashes from th alley, but I have to pay a man to haul the away—the city does not do it. All we g is fire and police protection, but any tax payer gets that."

"Who Are 'Big Five'?" Answered by First National Announcement

"WHO are the 'Big Five'?" This question, which has been the source of much conjecture on he part of the film industry during the ast few weeks, has at last been definitely nswered. The Big Five are not produc-rs or distributors, as seemed to be com-nonly supposed; the mysterious quintet rove to be five products, which are to be eleased by Associated First National Pic-ures as "super-specials of the million-ollar class." These five super-spe-ials are announced to be "Pas-ion," which has already been presented or two weeks at the Capitol theatre, New ork; "The Kid," the multiple-reel spec-l upon which Charlie Chaplin is said to ave worked for over a year; the Albert . Kaufman production, "Man, Woman, Marriage," in which Dorothy Phillips ars under the direction of Allen Holu-ar; the R. A. Walsh production, "The ath, which presents an all-star cast; and e Louis B. Mayer special, "Sowing the ind," in which Anita Stewart appears s the star.

These pictures will constitute the initial Big Five Productions" series. Asso-ated First National announces that other milar groups are to be made up in the uture, as productions of a sufficiently igh calibre to qualify them for this cate-ory.

The mystery surrounding the teaser ad-ertising of "The Big Five," which has een conducted in recent issues of the rade publications, was cleared up on Mon-ay evening of this week when formal an-ouncement of the character of the "Big ive" was made to the representatives of he trade press at the Hotel Astor, New ork. It was explained by C. L. Years-y, director of publicity and advertising or First National, that the teaser adver-sing formed the preliminary announce-ent of plans "of extraordinary import-nce by which a group of super-specials f the million-dollar class will be available or booking in series for presentation in heatres in a special 'Grand Pictures Sea-son' with cumulative profits to exhibitors of the series."

The scheme of advertising adopted has been conceded to be one of the most effective advance campaigns thus far evolved to stimulate curiosity and focus interest on a new enterprise. Frank Hughes of the J. P. Miller Agency, who handled the advertising, reported at the Astor meeting that more than two hundred applications had been received for employment in one capacity or another in the new "Big Five" organization. Earl Hudson, assistant to J. D. Williams, declared emphatically that these letters when forwarded to the First National headquarters were not read by anyone connected with the organization but were immediately returned to the Miller Agency with instructions that they be destroyed at once or returned to the writers. "In this way," said Mr. Hudson, "the contents of the letters remain entirely unknown to members of the First National organization, and no confidences have been broken or will be broken."

The following statement has been issued from the New York headquarters of the Associated First National Pictures in connection with the announcement of the "Big Five:"

"The company's statement is emphatic in drawing attention to the fact that its officials have screened and critically passed upon the merits of each of this first Big Five and can vouch for the super-quality of every one of the group, and stress is laid upon the point that the success of the undertaking is underwritten by the extraordinary quality and variety of the productions. The present announcement is made only after the final one of the selected productions has been screened and found to be of super-quality.

"Speaking of the reasons for the group-booking of what Associated First National's directors believe to be five of the most pre-eminent productions yet made, executives of the company state: 'As a result of the Circuit's encouragement of independent producers to put forth their best efforts, coupled with the general public demand for bigger and better pictures, we have obtained a class of attractions which we feel must be handled in a new manner in order that the maximum of the results may be gained with a minimum of effort and expenditure. After many conferences between our executives, prominent franchise holders and exchange managers, it was decided to launch boldly into the undertaking of putting out super-specials in groups instead of singly. Having assured ourselves of the success of "Passion" as the result of trying out the Pola Negri feature in Paterson, Newark and New York, in every case to record breaking business, we proceeded to select from special merit completed productions a group of five which we believe will revolutionize box office receipts and set new records in exchange history.

"It will be observed that a wide range of entertainment is provided by the assortment of subjects included in the first Big Five. 'Passion,' for instance, is a powerful dramatic period spectacle; 'The Oath' is one of the most virile domestic dramas yet produced for the screen; 'The Kid' is without doubt the greatest screen comedy ever produced; 'Sowing the Wind' is a most remarkable woman-story; and 'Man, Woman, Marriage' is in many respects the most extraordinary of the group. All are in eight or more reels, with the exception of 'The Kid,' which is in six reels.

"The expense and exhibitor effort necessary to the exploitation of these five subjects individually would be very heavy; advertised, however, as a group the expenses and labor for the individual offering is largely absorbed, for the general advance campaign will, we believe, make more effective the exploitation of the individual productions. Our great effort will be to convince the public, in advance, of the remarkable season of entertainment to be presented and thus to pave the way for and enhance the effectiveness of the

All Prepared for Washington Convention Jan. 26

Everything is set for the annual convention in Washington, D. C., of the exhibitors of that territory which will be held January 26 and 27. Local exchange managers and theatre owners and managers have prepared an elaborate program of events running over two days.

Committee appointments have not yet been completed, but President George Fuller, of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, has put a number of his fellow managers to work and results are beginning to show. Abe Dresner has been selected chairman of the entertainment committee. Associated with him are Sidney B. Lust, vice-chairman; W. A. Mack, S. A. Galanty, Jules Levy, W. L. White and Paul E. Krieger.

The Finance Committee, under the leadership of Lester Rosenthal, has collected from the exchanges a fund that in dollars represents four figures to cover the entertainment expenses, which will be elaborate. Mr. Rosenthal has associated with him Jean Crandall, vice-chairman, and Abe Dresnes, G. R. Ainsworth, Louis Reichert, Sam Flax and J. H. Beavers.

The Executive Committee has as its chairman George W. Fuller, Lester Rosenthal as vice-chairman, and Clarence L. Linz, Edwin A. Sherwood and Abe Dresner as members.

Other committee appointments will be announced later by Mr. Fuller. Invitations will be sent to each exhibitor in the Washington territory within the next week or ten days and it is estimated that there will be upwards of two hundred visitors in town for this event.

Curwood Warns Against Unauthorized Agents

James Oliver Curwood is urging the producers of the country to get into direct communication with him, or with his authorized agents, the Robert H. Davis Corporation, when screen rights to stories of his are offered from outside sources.

"Such caution may possibly save legal troubles and expense for the producer," says Mr. Curwood. "In several trade journals recently appeared the announcement that the E. P. Hermann Corporation had the screen rights to four of my novels. When called upon to explain, E. P. Hermann wired, 'In reply to your wire, Joseph Ziden, New York City, offered us four of your stories written before 1910, but deal fell through.'

"I have never heard of Joseph Ziden, and he has no screen rights to novels of mine," states Mr. Curwood.

Broadwell Office Moves

Broadwell Productions, Inc., announce that they have moved their New York office from the Brokaw Building to 133-137 West 44th street.

First National Gets Mason

Lesley Mason

A NOTABLE addition to the Associated First National home office staff was made this week in the appointment by Manager James D. Williams of Lesley Mason, the announcement of which was made to the Trade Press editors at the Big Five dinner at the Astor Hotel, New York, Monday, January 3. Mr. Mason last week announced his resignation as vice-president and editor of the Exhibitors' Trade Review. The news of his affiliation came as a surprise to his fellow editors at the dinner and was received on all sides with hearty congratulations to himself and First National.

While the announcement was made on behalf of Mr. Williams through C. L. Yearsley, it was expressly stated that while Mr. Mason's editorial experience will prove of high consultive value, his activities will be directed to other departments of work as well as that of the publicity department.

All Filmdom Turns Out at Big Ball

"BIGGER AND BETTER" might pithily describe the ball held by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Hotel Astor the night of January 5. Big it was—bigger even than advance promises held out.

Everyone—or so it seemed—of Filmdom's Blue Book was present.

A full account of the ball will be carried in next week's issue.

Great Film Campaign for European Relief Fund Under Way

Hoover at Film Meeting; Appoints Committee Heads in Every Section

THE national campaign for the Hoover European relief fund, now being conducted by all branches of the motion-picture industry, was given added impetus at a rally meeting of the exhibitors and exchange-men of New York and Northern New Jersey, held on Friday morning of last week, December 31st, at the 48th Street Theatre, New York. The Honorable Herbert C. Hoover made a short speech, outlining the work that is being done by the European Relief Council in administering to the millions of children in the stricken districts of Eastern and Central Europe and summoning the motion-picture screen as the greatest medium of publicity in the present day, to the aid of the Relief Council in the emergency that now besets it.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided at the gathering. I. E. Chadwick, president of the F. I. A. M. Club of New York, followed Mr. Hoover on the platform and promised the whole-hearted co-operation of the exchanges in the New York territory, including the distribution of pictures to all exhibitors, free-of-charge, that will be used in the picture houses of New York and northern New Jersey on January 26th, which is to be honored in film theatres throughout the country as "Hoover Day." The Rev. Dr. Nathan Krass also addressed the meeting, reciting from his experiences abroad in the effected districts and urging that the motion-picture industry lend its whole-hearted support to the cause, "so that purified by this great service it may ascend to greater successes in the future."

President Cohen informed the assembly that a meeting of the exhibitors' committee with the exchange representatives for New York and northern New Jersey had been arranged to take place later in the week, at which meeting the details for the observance of "Hoover Day" in this territory will be worked out. Announcement of these details is to be made next week, Mr. Cohen declared. He also reported that the Hoover Fund campaign was being carried forward with great enthusiasm in all parts of the country, as reports recently received from the various exhibitors' state leagues indicated. Mr. Cohen also announced that William Fox and Marcus Loew had informed the headquarters of the M. P. T. O. of A. that their chains of houses throughout the country were available to the committee for the observance of "Hoover Day." Mr. Cohen also thanked William A. Brady for his courtesy in extending the use of the 48th Street Theatre for the meeting.

First Picture—Music Convention

JANUARY 24—25—26

Hotel Astor, New York

Following a short introduction by Mr. Cohen, Mr. Hoover mounted the platform amid the hearty applause of those assembled.

"During the War," declares Mr. Hoover, "the associations in the United States allied in this great work, contributed most liberally. With the present financial depression and economic readjustment, the revenue from many of these associations has practically vanished. The Council has at present on its hand about 3,500,000 children. Unless the depleted resources of the Council are quickly replenished, the Council will find itself in a state of bankruptcy by the end of February, and this three-million and a half-children will be turned into the streets destitute and the easy prey of crime, hunger and disease. The great people of America, in whose name these 17,000 refugees have been administering to the stricken children of Europe, must not allow the American flag to be hauled down over the refugees they have established and these children to be abandoned to their fate. National honor and credit is at stake, and hence it is that we have decided to call upon the great industries of our country to come to our aid in this emergency. We believe that with the coming of the next harvest, Europe will once more be set on its feet, but it is the interval between for which provision must be made that constitutes the present emergency."

Mr. Hoover made it plain at this point in his address that he regards the motion-picture screen as the most efficient channel whereby to reach the hearts of the American masses. "The trouble with our people is that they lack patience," declared Mr. Hoover. "The newspapers in millions of instances are read but hastily and much that is in them is lost entirely upon the readers. With the 'movies,' we have a different situation. People go to a theatre; they sit down, and with eyes fixed on a screen, they are taught and impressed by the visualization of scenes in a manner beyond the power of any other medium to convey. It is to the 'movies' then that we look with the greatest of expectations to carry the message of the stricken children of Europe to hearts and minds of the millions of people in this great country of ours."

In the New York territory, Mr. Hoover has selected Samuel L. Rothafel of the Capitol theatre. Those to whom telegrams were sent are as follows:

Visiting British Film Magnate Feted

Arthur Clozenberg, of Film Booking Office, Tendered Dinner by Carl Laemmle

ARTHUR CLOZENBERG, managing director of the Film Booking Offices, (1919) Ltd. of London, was officially welcomed into the ranks of the Universal organization last week at a dinner given in the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Clozenberg, whose corporation is the British distributor of the Universal product, came to this country to get acquainted with Universal executives, methods and management.

The dinner was attended by prominent film men, editors of the trade press, business associates of Mr. Laemmle, and by half-a-hundred Universal department heads, executives and employes. The affair was a tribute to Mr. Clozenberg and his associates of the F. B. O. who entertained Mr. Laemmle royally during his visit to London last summer.

The feature of the evening was a short talk by the guest of honor, in which he expressed his admiration of the Universal organization, built up by Mr. Laemmle, and the appreciation which the F. B. O. officials feel for the Universal chief, and for George E. Kenn, Universal's export manager, who visited England prior to Mr. Laemmle, to negotiate the preliminaries of the big F. B. O.-Universal tie-up.

Mr. Clozenberg was greeted with great applause when he anounced that long extended investigation on the part of the F. B. O. organization had proved that there is no more popular brand of film shown in England than Universal pictures.

With a view of cementing closer relationship between the Universal organization in America, and the F. B. O. organization in Great Britain, Mr. Clozenberg anounced that he would pay the entire expenses of any Universal representative Mr. Laemmle chose to send to England on a pleasure trip. The tour will include all the points of interest in Great Britain, and possibly a visit to the Continent. The lucky Universalite also will be conducted to the points of interest in the British film world and will have a chance to study the British distributing system, as exemplified by the F. B. O. It is understood that Universal will accept the offer and award the plum to one of its prize salesmen.

Mr. Laemmle recounted to his employes and friends present at the dinner the surprise he received at the hands of the British organization when he arrived in London, where he found an elaborate banquet awaiting him, and his astonishment at the progressiveness of the F. B. O., which he likened to an American film organization in its alertness and systematic methods. He predicted that the tie-up with the F. B. O. will prove to be the most far-reaching arrangement ever attempted by Universal. Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, voiced the sentiments of the Universal executives in appreciation of the genial personality of the guest from across the ocean.

Paul Gulick, publicity director of Universal, whose reputation as a toastmaster gained added weight during the evening, called upon E. H. Goldstein, Universal's general manager, to tell the visiting Englishman something about the Universal organization. Mr. Goldstein startled those present, despite the fact many long had been in the Universal employ, by an array of figures indicative of the immensity of Universal activities.

Interesting talks also were given by Mr. Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, Mr. Kann and Mr. Harry Reichenbach. Among those present were Messrs. William A. Johnston, publisher of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS; James Beecroft, New York manager for the Exhibitors' Herald; Joe Dannenberg of Wid's; P. D. Cochrane, exploitation manager for Universal; Edward Moffat, advertising manager; Vernon R. Carrick of the Fairmount Feature Film Company of Philadelphia; Louis and Oscar Jacobs of the Century Film Corporation; I. N. Landauer and Alvin Mayer of the Photo Repro Company.

Among the Universal executives and employes also present were John Ohrt, controller; John Ward, Charles Rozenweig of the Big "U" exchange, and his two associates, George D. Uffner and W. C. Herrmann; Sam Sedran, Universal purchasing agent; Joe Mayer, special exploitation representative; Ben Grimm, F. W. Talbert, Henry Clay Bate, Paul E. Perez, Harry Zehner, George Brown, George Perkins, L. I. Kutinsky, Robert F. Roden, Sidney Singerman, J. A. Levinson, Bert North, Irving Stockman, Phil Hodes, Alexander Kroll, C. A. Hill, David Robbins, Joe Fine, Ernest Trucco, Paul Kohner, Max Gorlin, Willy Wyley, Maurice Pivor and Theodore Solomon.

E. J. Ludvigh Made Famous Players' Treasurer

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the resignation of Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the company, was accepted, and Elek J. Ludvigh was elected treasurer in his place.

Mr. Ludvigh has been secretary and general counsel for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation since its organization.

Readjustment Reducing Production Cost to Minimum, Says Lasky

Discusses New Production Policy; Announces Signing of Big Author

IN a series of statements just issued by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the declaration is made by the Paramount executive that the motion-picture business is at present passing through a period of readjustment, like so many other industries, and that the result of this experience will be the abandonment of extravagance and wastefulness in the making of motion-picture productions. Another statement from Mr. Lasky announces the acquisition by Paramount of W. Somerset Maugham, the prominent British author, who will become a regular member of the literary colony on the West Coast. Mr. Lasky has just returned to New York from the Hollywood studios.

"The motion picture business," said Mr. Lasky, "is passing through a period of readjustment—it is becoming stabilized and is getting back to normal. This readjustment is rapidly weeding out the incompetents and is reducing extravagance in film production to a minimum. The day when directors and players can waste time and money in the production of a picture has passed. This readjustment has had the effect of throwing out of work a large number of directors and actors whose value in the past had been greatly overrated. It has had no effect on good actors and good directors, nor will it have.

"Readjustment has created a much healthier atmosphere in the production end of the film business and is proving of immense benefit to all producers, because it enables them to concentrate more time and ability on more worth while pictures. It also has brought home to directors, actors and authors the necessity of co-operation. Now we see in the Lasky studio in Hollywood famous authors, directors and the best of casts all working harmoniously together toward one end—better pictures. New young directors are pushing to the fore, with new ideas and more efficient methods, authors have recognized the need of going into the studios and learning screen technique and stars have come to appreciate the fact that if they are to remain stars they must give 100 per cent. value for their salaries.

"Our new production policy of merging the entire production department into one big stock company is working out with entire satisfaction. Cecil B. DeMille already is well along on the first of the big pictures to be made under this plan, 'The Affairs of Anatol." The cast includes Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley, Bebe Daniels, Agnes Ayres, Elliott Dexter, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Monte Blue, Dorothy Cumming, Theodore Kosloff and Julia Faye—probably the greatest group of artists ever assembled in a single dramatic production. Paul Iribe and Howard Higgin have designed some of the most beautiful settings ever made for a picture, and everybody in Los Angeles is expecting 'The Affairs of Anatol' to be the greatest picture ever produced.

"Elinor Glyn already has completed the script of her first original story for Paramount, 'The Great Moment,' in which Gloria Swanson will be starred following the completion of her work in 'Anatol.'

"Sir Gilbert Parker has finished the script of 'The Money Master,' his first story for Paramount Pictures, and everything was being put in readiness when I left Los Angeles for the start of the production under the direction of George H. Melford, with Dorothy Dalton and James Kirkwood as stars.

"Edward Knoblock has completed his first original screen story and is now working in close co-operation with William DeMille, who will direct it, and Olga Printzlau, Mr. DeMille's scenarist.

"My experiences with the famous authors who have gone to the Lasky studio to write original stories for pictures has amply justified my belief that once they saw how pictures were made they would realize the imperative need of going into the studios and studying screen technique at first hand. They know now that it is impossible successfully to adapt novels or stage plays to the screen, and it is my purpose to reduce such adaptations to a minimum and in the future devote our energies to getting original stories from authors of recognized merit. In this way only can we build up the dramatic merit of pictures."

Mr. Lasky expressed great enthusiasm over the motion picture prospects during the coming year. He anounced that the new $2,000,000 studio in Long Island City will reopen January 24, when three companies will begin work. Its reopening will mark the completion of several necessary alterations, including the installation of $200,000 worth of additional electrical equipment.

W. Somerset Maugham, author of "The Land of Promise," "The Moon and Sixpence," "Penelope" and "Smith," is the latest British author to join the staff of Paramount Pictures.

"Mr. Muagham has already started work on his first story," said Mr. Lasky, "and has become a regular member of the West Coast literary colony, which already includes Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Elinor Glyn and Avery Hopwood. Perhaps no writer in English literature has more accurately mirrored human nature as it really is in all its faults and foibles, its humor and tragedy. And it is this remarkable sense of human values that we expect will bring new riches to Paramount Pictures."

W. Somerset Maugham was born January 25, 1874, in Paris, France. He was educated in Paris and lived in the French capital until the death of his father, a member of the British Embassy.

His first play, "The Man of Honor," did not meet with success. His second, "Lady Frederick," was done in America by Ethel Barrymore, both on the stage and screen. "Jack Straw," "Mrs. Lot" and "The Explorer" followed on the stage. Both "Jack Straw" and "The Explorer" have already been filmed by Paramount.

After that came a series of well-known plays, including "Penelope," a light comedy, played by Marie Tempest; "Smith," starring John Drew in America and Robert Loraine in England; "The Land of Promise," starring Billie Burke both on the stage and in pictures; "Our Betters" and "The Tenth Man."

Mr. Maugham left England some weeks ago bound on a trip around the world. He stopped in Hollywood, however, and was so attracted by the motion pictures that he was persuaded to sign his present contract with Paramount.

"Being altogether an amateur of the cinema," he said recently, "I was amazed by the infinite time, money and pains spent to get details precisely correct; to accurately mirror life. I was intrigued by the new art—and was immediately anxious to try my hand at it. I look upon motion pictures as a new and wonderful method of expression, with possibilities in many ways beyond those of play and novel. What I shall do with the new technique, whether it will be comedy or serious drama, depends upon my own reaction to the profession as I learn it at the studio. I know already, however, that I shall enjoy it and not the least part of the enjoyment will be the association in Hollywood with Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock and the many friends who are already at work writing stories for the screen."

Date of Virginia Convention Is Changed

The date for the Virginia Exhibitors' Convention, which was scheduled to be held in Washington on January 12 and 13, has been changed to January 26 and 27, in order that it might be affiliated with the convention of the Washington exhibitors, which is to be held on the later dates.

Fine Arts Begins Building of Film City at Jacksonville

Plans 20 Modernly Equipped Studios; New York Capital Backing Project

ACCORDING to reports from the Southeast, work has started in real earnest to make Jacksonville, Fla., the third great producing center of the motion-picture industry in the United States. Ground has been broken at Camp Joseph E. Johnson, Black Point, which is situated outside the Jacksonville suburbs, for the erection of twenty complete motion-picture studios. The enterprise is being conducted by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., of New York, of which Murray W. Garsson is the president. It is stated that $1,000,000 will be spent in transforming the former cantonment into a modern production center. Loomis and Company, New York bankers, are reported to be financing the project. More than seven hundred acres have been purchased by the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation as a location for the new studios, and building operations are to begin at once under the supervision of H. J. Klutho, a prominent architect of Jacksonville. The new producing center will be known as Fine Arts City.

The decision of the Fine Arts Pictures Corporation to build a film city at Jacksonville is the first result of an extensive character, of the campaign that has been conducted for some time past to interest motion-picture producers in the filming advantages of this part of the country. Mr. Garsson first came to Jacksonville at the suggestion of William J. McCormick, special representative of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, who was sent here to personally investigate the claims of the motion picture committee regarding production possibilities of Jacksonville. Mr. McCormick, after a stay of a few days here, telegraphed Mr. Garsson urging that he come at once and see for himself what Jacksonville had to offer. That was more than a month ago. Since that time Mr. Garsson has remained in the city with the exception of three brief trips to New York.

The motion picture committee of the chamber of commerce is credited by Mr. Garsson for having brought him here, though he came through the direct instrumentality of Mr. McCormick. W. R. Carter, chairman of the committe, and H. J. Klutho, one of its most active members, have aided Mr. Garsson greatly in completing details for the transfer of the camp property. Legal matters in connection with the negotiations have been in charge of Hal P. Adair, of Knight & Adair, attorneys.

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., has laid out a program of production. The program calls for the production of forty-six pictures classified as follows: Fifteen two-reel comedies; fifteen two-reel Westerns; twelve super-productions and four special productions. Mr. Garsson announced that the company will begin building a number of permanent "sets" at once. These will be available for the use of all producers using Fine Arts City. Among these will be included typical "Westerns," Ghetto streets, a Chinatown section, rural village streets and many others. In addition, a number of large indoor and outdoor swimming pools and diving tanks will be installed.

Fine Arts City is eight and one-half miles from the center of Jacksonville, on a brick paved highway. A trolley line runs into the property and has its terminus near where will be erected the administration building for Fine Arts City. The property is on the main line of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad from Jacksonville to Tampa, and a station will be erected within Fine Arts City and maintained as a permanent stop for all trains, it is stated. In addition to these transportation facilities, the St. Johns river touches Fine Arts City at two points, the northern and southern extremities of the immense tract. Ample dockage space is provided for steamships and yachts.

Fine Arts City is 27 hours from New York. This accessibility was one of the deciding factors in Mr. Garsson's action in securing this immense property. "Producers may be in thorough touch with their companies working at Fine Arts City," he said. "When it is considered that the West Coast is 108 hours from the financial center of the motion picture industry and Fine Arts City only 27 hours from the Pennsylvania station, the importance of this center to the industry will be easily realized."

Scenic and climatic conditions in Florida were important factors, also, in the decision to locate Fine Arts City here, Mr. Garsson said. "I have thoroughly investigated climatic conditions, and I find from United States weather bureau reports that the temperatures of this section are more even than anywhere else in the United States. It is a popular fallacy on the part of many producers and directors that work cannot be continued in Florida during the summer months. I have compared summer temperature records of this state with those of West Coast cities and I find that Florida is particularly favored with pleasant summer weather. It also is a matter of record that there has never been a case of heat prostration in Florida."

In scenic wealth Florida offers incomparable advantages to the producer, Mr. Garsson declared. This state has every character of scenery offered by the West Coast with the exception of mountains. However, mountain locations are available within less than twelve hours' ride from Jacksonville. "The mountains in the vicinity of Asheville and Hendersonville N. C., offer the widest imaginable range of such scenery for the use of producers," Mr. Garsson said. "Foothills are available within four or five hours from Fine Arts City. Besides, there is every other character of scenery including the most marvelous beach and seaside locations. The beaches, within less than one hour's ride by motor from Fine Arts City, are the most wonderful I have ever seen. Back of these beaches lie broad stretches of white sand as bare as the desert, making admirable settings for desert locations.

"There is every other desirable location within close reach of Fine Arts City. Florida is not a land of palms and moss, as many directors who have come to the state for a few locations erroneously believe. The trouble is that the majority of motion picture companies which have worked on location in Florida have seen nothing of the state except the particular locations they were sent to shoot. Typical New England farms, fishing villages, northern scenes, wonderful homes of every type of architecture, Spanish mission type buildings, narrow streets, broad winding avenues, boulevards, Italian and Greek colonies, typical rural scenes are to be had in great profusion. In fact, a

The exchanges are: Famous Players, New York, Des Moines, Atlanta; First National, Chicago, Minneapolis, New Orleans; Fox, Cincinnati, Indianapolis; Goldwyn, Detroit, Omaha; Metro, St. Louis, Washington, D. C.; Pathe, Pittsburg, San Francisco, Portland; Realart, Cleveland, Seattle; Robertson-Cole, Albany, Kansas City, Milwaukee; Select, Boston, Charlotte, New Haven; United Artists, Denver, Philadelphia; Universal, Los Angeles, Oklahoma City; Vitagraph, Buffalo, Dallas, Salt Lake.

Emergency prints will be supplied to the following cities by Universal: Butte, Spokane, Wichita, Sioux Falls, Fort Smith, Memphis.

Rothacker's New Partners

LOOKS like a big 1921 for the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co.! Watterson R. Rothacker is starting out the new year with about twenty new partners.

Shortly before the Chicago laboratories closed down on the afternoon of December 31st, Mr. Rothacker called a group of his fellow workers into his office and made them his fellow partners by presenting them with stock bonuses.

In all $14,000 of Rothacker Company stock was distributed, according to the terms of service.

"You have earned a partnership," Mr. Rothacker told them. "This stock is not a present. I am giving it out the same as one would give out anything in appreciation of loyalty and service. I look forward to the time when every one of my present business associates shall have become my business partners."

The entire Chicago force gathered in the studio where Mr. Rothacker spoke as follows: "Almost every industrial plant in the United States is laying off workers or cutting salaries. The Rothacker Film Company has no desire at all to do either of these. We want you to earn more than you are now, if possible. We want to increase the number of workers instead of laying off some.

"You can help us in our determination to continue paying good salaries by keeping down waste in your various departments."

rector can secure within easy reach of Fine Arts City every type of scenery necessary for any production."

Fine Arts City will offer the most complete service to the producer ever tendered by any motion picture center, Mr. Garsson said. "Immense warehouse buildings on the property purchased by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., will be converted into property and costume houses," declares a statement from the Fine Arts' headquarters. "These features will be complete to the most minute detail. Each company operating at Fine Arts City will be given the benefit of the city's information and service bureau. Complete laboratories in fire-proof buildings will be provided. These will include vaults for the storage and safe-keeping of film."

A bungalow colony to provide living accommodations for workers at Fine Arts City is provided for in the plans of the company. An immense tract with water-frontage has been set aside for this purpose.

"Every street in Fine Arts City is paved with brick and cement," declares the Fine Arts' statement. "Water and sewerage lines already are in operation. Electric installations are complete, and there are even telephone installations already in. This work was done by the government during the period of the operation of Camp Joseph E. Johnston."

"Fine Arts City will be the largest and best motion picture center in the world," Mr. Garsson declared. "And producers will be quick to realize the benefits of producing here. Already a number of large producers have requested the reservation of studio space at Fine Arts City, and it is certain that every studio will be occupied on a permanent basis as quickly as completed."

The Who and What of "The Big Five"

individual productions. The plan is being perfected in every possible detail and we believe it will have a far reaching influence on existing distribution and exhibiting methods and carry immense benefit to exhibitors.

"Necessarily, the thousands of holders of First National Chaplin contracts will get 'The Kid' independently of the group should they so desire. Equally certain it is that all Associated First National franchise holders will get the other four of the Big Five, and for those unable, because of contract complications, to secure the Chaplin feature we may include a fifth release of equal calibre. Exhibitors, however, will not be obligated to book the series, and may choose one or any number of the Big Five. The greatest benefit will however obviously accrue to the exhibitor who plays them in the form of a Grand Special Season.

"This plan of group releasing and Season exhibition is designed purely to obtain maximum returns for both exhibitor and producer. The identity and individuality of each of the productions and of the stars, directors and others responsible will receive fullest recognition and publicity. It is our belief that by heralding such a season of entertainment in advance, theatre goers will be prepared for the unusual and will look forward to and receive the series with keenest interest.

"Exhibitors booking the Big Five may find it advantageous to increase the length of the runs or possibly raise the admission price. There is no doubt that every one of the first Big Five is well worthy of increased, if not of doubled admission rates, and in any case, of extended runs.

"In launching this new plan, our Board of Directors are meeting the very remarkable situation of a distributing company having value and also a line of stellar releases of a quality never before offered by any one company. Productions of such front rank stars as Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charles Ray and Katherine MacDonald will go out at regular intervals to be interspersed between Big Five productions; or, in the case of those exhibitors who play the Big Five in direct succession to each other, each will form a powerful box office star feature available to follow the Big Five, thus obviating the set back which usually follows the exhibition of two or three extraordinary attractions played in succession.

"We believe the general plan is fool proof and can result in nothing less than the great benefit of exhibitor, producer and all concerned. We will shortly announce a plan that will convince exhibitors that every claim made for the extraordinary quality of the Big Five is true and that their box office possibilities are rather understated than the contrary."

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST

Jack Willis, who made the trailer which carried the dedicatory announcement at the opening of Ascher Brothers' West Englewood theatre, is very much pleased over the favorable comment on the artistic excellence of this trailer and promises an equally handsome one for the opening of Aschers' new Palace theatre at Peoria.

For the second time in the history of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's Orpheum theatre, it is holding over an attraction for the entire week. The feature to achieve this honor is Wallace Reid in his success, "The Charm School," which is regarded by Jones, Dinick & Schaefer as the best picture that Mr. Reid thus far has been starred in by Paramount.

Bennett J. Brandon, well known in exchange and export circles, is scheduled to visit New York, arriving there on January 10, and will make his headquarters at the Elks' Club. He is contemplating enlarging his Chicago activities and while in the East will confer with some of the leading independents in regard to his new plans.

Dick Robertson of Independent Film Association, made a New Year's visit to New York on business connected with his organization. H. E. Belford of the sales department, is back at the Chicago headquarters after a visit to New Orleans and other Southern points.

Alexander Alt and Al Martin of the Union Film Company, California, spent the week in Chicago, en route to New York where they will arrange for the distribution of the series of pictures their company is producing, featuring Mr. Alt and Helen Howell. They report that the Union Film Company is completing a handsome new studio at Sherman, California; that work will start on the fourth picture about the middle of January, and that they hope to be back in California by that time.

Ben W. Beadell, manager of the Stoll Film Corporation's Chicago exchange, gave his salesmen a New Year luncheon at the Hotel Brevoort on December 31, and it is needless to say that with the genial Ben at the head of the table, the crowd had a good time. Those present included Julius A. Alcock, assistant manager; Walter Altland, E. C. Davies, Charles Chase, John Dilson, Eddie Bricketto and Ben W. Beadell. Mr. Beadell is enthusiastic over the way the exhibitors are signing up for his concern's pictures and can see nothing ahead but a prosperous year.

Leo Brunhild of Brunhild & Young, owners of the Shakespeare, President and Emmett theatres, is sojourning in New York for two weeks seeking novelties for his houses. It is reported that during 1921 Brunhild & Young will add several theatres to their chain.

Two years ago at New Year's time the Randolph theatre was presented to Chicago's picture fans and in commemoration of this event its owners, Messrs, Jones, Linick & Schaefer are celebrating the anniversary. In two short years the Randolph theatre has leaped to the fore as a temple of exhibition for the cinema art. Last year a brand new and imposing lobby was cut through from the State street side, making the Randolph the only picture house in Chicago having two entrances on Chicago's two most boosted highways. Jones, Linick & Schaefer spared no expense in making the Randolph a comfortable spot to view perfect projection and expended a fortune on the State street lobby, where picturesque marble fountains, urns, benches and pedestals proclaim it an art spot. At night, the motor cars delivering people to the Randolph clog traffic on State street, bearing witness to the high-class of fans who frequent this theatre.

In celebration of the anniversary a double feature program has been arranged. William C. DeMille's new picture, "Midsummer Madness," and Mack Sennett's new First National comedy, "Married Life."

H. A. O'Brien, city salesman for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is back on his job after nearly a two months' ilness. "O. B." celebrated his comeback by turning in four contracts the first day.

Of the many Christmas gifts that found their way into the Paramount Exchange none were more highly appreciated than the wonderfully fine desk sets bestowed upon District Manager Harris F. Wolberg, Manager P. A. Bloch and Exploitation Representative Doob by the officers and men of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. The desk outfits were made up of airplane parts—bits from the Liberty motors, the propellers, even the airplane clocks. The sentiment and work put into these gifts have endeared them to the Paramount men. Lieut. Commander E. E. Wilson tendered the gifts in recognition of the cooperation given to the station by Paramount during the past year.

The new Fort Armstrong theatre, Rock Island, Ill., will soon be ready for opening—the date being either January 19 or 26. Joe Hopp is bubbling over with enthusiasm and a look at the new house justifies all his radiant descriptions of its beauties. He will play as his opening picture either William DeMille's "Midsummer Madness" or Cecil DeMille's "Forbidden Fruit." The house will seat 1,700 and carries out the Indian traditions in decorations.

Lee Herz, of the Interstate Film Service, has secured an imposing array of pictures for release in Northern Illinois including fifteen-two reelers directed by D. W. Griffith, starring Mary Pickford and a cast which included Mae Marsh, Harry B. Walthall, and a number of other equally famous film stars. The first of these pictures to be released will be "A Beast At Bay," which is scheduled for February 3rd. Other pictures recently acquired from Aywon are "The Woman Above Reproach," a new six-reel feature starring Florence Chase, and "A Woman of Mystery," a five-reeler starring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. He will also release "When Dr. Quackel Did Hide," a five-reel travesty on Dr. Jeckyl and Mr. Hyde, in which Charlie Joy and the Miami Bathing Girls furnish the comedy.

Manager Aschman, of Pathe, has booked "The Riddle: Woman," featuring Geraldine Farrar, for six weeks showing in the loop, starting with three weeks at the Ziegfeld at a dollar top price, and then moving to the Boston and Rose. Early reports from the Ziegfeld are to the effect that the picture is opening to big business.

K. Hoddy Milligan, vice-president of Creation Films, Inc., arrived in Chicago from the west coast this week for a conference with his brother, B. Herbert Milligan, who is president of the corporation. It was stated that in addition to the production work, which is being pushed on the west coast, that the making of a series of four or five feature pictures will be started at the Kalem Studios, in New York, about the end of February, and that a director and star already have been secured for this series.

Several resignations marked the closing days of the year 1920. Pat Dillon resigned as manager of the Chicago office of Comedyart and Joe Smith as a salesman of the same company. George Weinberg resigned as salesman for Masterpiece Film Corporation.

President Vandawalker of Doll-Van Film Corporation of Illinois, is leaving for New York next week, where he will spend several days looking over pictures with view to making extensive purchase for release in this territory. Mr. Vandawalker is convinced that 192 will be a big year for independent exchanges, and is planning to hav an adequate supply of pictures t offer to exhibitors. The capitalization of his corporation was re cently increased from twenty t fifty thousand dollars.

Charles Goldberg, J. R. Mahc and Jake Link, all well known i Chicago film circles as artists, a vertising and publicity men ability, have formed a company be known as The Independent A Masters, with offices at 606 Co sumers' Building. They will prepared to handle art work various kinds, including announc ments, posters, heralds, etc., for t trade.

Manager C. B. Maberry, Goldwyn, started the new year right by giving a luncheon to h sales staff at the Winter Garden the Consumers' Building on its fi working day. Those present at t luncheon were: C. E. Knicke bocker, Ben Reingold, J. S. Ar garat, Sam Shurman, E. Schottmueller, R. A. Alber Frank Young, W. Weinschenk Harry Charmass and Public Representative H. S. Lorch. was announced at the luncheon t Frank Young was winner of t ten dollar prize offered by M Maberry for the best scrap bo on Goldwyn productions. All t salesmen competed and it was s that they have a wonderful coll tion of sales ammunitions in t books they got together, and t they all know more about Goldw productions now than they ever in their lives before, so that contest has been a benefit around.

Superior Screen Service, I has bought the rights for Illin and Indiana to "Madonnas Men," from H. Jams Productio This is one of the big producti of the year and played to t week's record business at Kunsl handsome theatre at Detroit. perior also has closed for Illi and Indiana for twelve-two Perry Comedies, starring Ambr McSwain and five-two reel Mi De Free (Mrs. Roscoe Arbuck Comedies for Illinois. Presid Harry Weiss is planning to s on a trip through Illinois and I ana key centers on January 10

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

UNIVERSAL

Once to Every Woman—

Ran this picture a week and never at any time have had anything more pleasing or which made more friends. (East.)

Record business for the week. One of the few pictures that we really could give the public to combat the opening of a big new house in opposition. (Middle West.)

REALART

Oh, Lady, Lady—

Great. Bebe certainly has a great following here, and this picture went over 100% better than her first. Believe she is going to be one of the biggest drawing cards among stellar-folk. (South.)

Good picture and business was very good during run. (West.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dinty—

Personally, think this is better than "Go and Get It," but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it. (South.)

Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house records. (Middle West.)

This is a fine picture and brought good business for me. (West.)

Love, Honor and Behave—

Broke all house records on opening day. Great. Wonderful box office attraction. Shows that people enjoy a good laugh better than anything else. (Middle West.)

Unseen Forces—

A fair picture that brought big business. (Middle West.)

Curtain—

A fairly good picture which drew well. Katherine MacDonald is very good to look at, but is rather cold. (Middle West.)

Nineteen and Phyllis—

Good entertainment. Ray at his best. Average business throughout week. (Middle West.)

Nomads of the North—

Certainly a sure-fire box office attraction. Just packed 'em in. As to picture value, it is very entertaining indeed. (Middle West.)

The Master Mind—

Big attraction. Picture full of interest. Box office receipts large. (West.)

Married Life—

Entertaining picture which went over big. Good box office attraction. (West.)

FAMOUS PLAYERS

An Old Fashioned Boy—

Audience greatly enjoyed star in this picture, which attracted overflow business during holidays. (East.)

The Charm School—

Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's. (Middle West.)

Heliotrope—

Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run. (Middle West.)

Flying Pat—

Fair picture. Business very good. (East.)

To Please One Woman—

Picture only fair; business good because of the fact that it is a holiday week. (East.)

The Testing Block—

Best picture Hart's made in a long while. Marks his return to the sort he does best and that people want. Fine business. (East.)

Idols of Clay—

Picture is quite fair. Good business during run. (West.)

Behold My Wife—

Held over for a two week's run, and did big business throughout. Critics pronounce it one of the best of the year. (Middle West.)

Midsummer Madness—

A splendid production. Great business. Held for second week on demand. (East.)

Opened to excellent business which grew and was therefore held over for a second week. The De Mille name has a big box office value. (Middle West.)

FOX

Prairie Trails—

Regular Mix picture. Well liked. Big crowds mostly men. (Middle West.)

Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court—

The Untamed—

METRO

Billions—

Opened to big business, but didn't hold up so well. (Middle West.)

Picture heartily criticized and Nazimova's very stagy and unnatural acting has killed her in this city. (Middle West.)

The Mutiny of the Elsimore—

A good picture. Will appeal strongly to those who like Jack London's writings. Tremendously exciting. (Middle West.)

The Bait—

Picture well liked and brought good business. (West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

A Slave of Vanity—

Fair picture, business very good. (East.)

Kismet—

Broke all attendance records. The kind of picture that points to big things in 1921 picturedom. A remarkable production in every way. (East.)

Wonderful picture. Brought great box office reports. (West.)

GOLDWYN

His Own Law—

Majority of my patrons are women and they didn't like the ending of this, although they seemed to like the picture itself, up to that point. Box office, just fair. (South.)

The Great Lover—

Fine picture with some very excellent acting and interesting story. Played to better than average business for week. (Middle West.)

The Guilt of Women—

Good picture. Business better than usual. (West.)

SELZNICK

Everybody's Sweetheart—

It certainly "took" and "took" well. Everybody liked it. And the box office reflected these sentiments. (West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

The Mark of Zorro—

Very good picture to fine business. (East.)

This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Will hold over for another week.

Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run. (West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

Last of the Mohicans—

Opened to great business. Assured of great success. Don't miss this one. (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Heritage—

Great—one of the most wholesome pictures made. Everybody enthusiastic over it. Appeals to young and old alike. A treat. Matty Roupert wins approval by his clever acting and remarkable personality. (Middle West.)

The Inner Voice—

Fair production, star well cast, and it went over fairly well. (East.)

Smilin' All the Way—

David Butler's popularity growing with each picture. There was nothing spectacular about this—but it was a clean little picture, well received. (South.)

Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves—

This picture will draw the youngsters, but will hardly prove of interest to the grown-ups. For those who still like fairy tales the charm is rather spoiled by the occasional use of a too-modern sub-title. The picture would be improved if it were confined entirely to child actors. (Middle West.)

London Slums Set to Be Set Afire in Final Scenes of Metro Special

THE final scenes on location for "A Message from Mars," the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production, starring Bert Lytell, are in the course of being taken at Recreation Ball Park, Long Island City, where a section of the London slums has been built by Metro to be destroyed by fire in the concluding big scenes of the play.

Following the completion of camera work on the giant London street set that Metro has constructed within the Eighth Coast Defense Command Armory in the Bronx, the entire force of workmen and electricians were transferred to Long Island City where the construction of the exterior set representing a section of London slums was already under way. This set is virtually the companion set to the one built within the armory as the action of the story directly follows the series of events that transpire upon the latter locality.

The story in thus shifting from the West to the East End of London shows the passage of the fire engines through the former district and their arrival at the latter, where a tenement house, crowded with poverty-stricken human beings, is shown consumed by fire. All the misery, all the destitution of London slum-dwellers is depicted here in the great concluding exterior scene of the picture, declares the Metro statement.

It is this fire which in the play's story, gives Horace Parker, a selfish young scientist, his great opportunity through the aid of the message from Mars to redeem himself in the work of rescuing lives from the flames, to which emergency he rises handsomely in his final regeneration. In the part of Horace Parker, Bert Lytell portrays one of the most interesting roles of his career.

Miss Mason in "Wing Toy"

WHEN "Wing Toy," Fox Film Corporation's newest vehicle for Shirley Mason, is released the public is going to get a 100 per cent Chinese subject done in 100 per cent Chinese style, announces a statement from the Fox Film home-office. "Most of the action transpiring in Chinatown, the Los Angeles Chinatown, has been the target of a battery of Fox cameras for several months, and many real Chinese players, wearing costumes that were imported from China solely for this production, have been registering enough Oriental local color to make the picture a striking example of correct atmosphere," reads the announcement.

Howard M. Mitchell, who has had charge of the direction, enlisted a local Chinese intellectual at the outset of the filming, to pass upon every bit of business and detail in order that the production might be consistent throughout; and the result is said to be one of the most correctly staged pictures ever offered to an exhibitor.

Pearl Doles Bell, who wrote Shirley Mason's two greatest successes, "Her Elephant Man" and "Love's Harvest," wrote the book for "Wing Toy," and is said to have turned out an exceptionally strong story.

The selection of the role of a supposedly Chinese girl for Shirley Mason, was, according to advices from the Fox offices, the choice of William Fox himself, who figured—and not without good reason—that the locale of an American Chinatown, so long a goal of big city slumming parties and curiosity seekers, would be particularly attractive to the theatre-going public.

Saenger's Puts Married on Stage Stunt

"WANTED—One young and handsome couple to wed; daring in nature, to embark on the obvious enterprise before a large and appreciative audience. Mail applications and photos to I. H. O. F., Strand theater."

That's an ad as it appeared in one of the New Orleans newspapers—handsome and obvious, and all.

"What's it all about?" Maurice Barr, supervising manager of the Saenger Amusement Company's New Orleans theaters, was asked. "Are you starting a class in wedding technique, or what?"

Well, it didn't seem that there were such a horde of folk wanting to be married, but there did float in enough applications to give the management something to worry about. It was a job to decide which couple should be let in on the good thing. And it was a good thing for the Saenger Amusement Company furnished everything but the man and girl, license, parson, carriages, flowers, supper, honeymoon (at the Saenger recreation home on the Gulf Coast).

And the crowd! There was such a jam at the Strand the night of the wedding, that photos could not be taken for fear of starting a stampede. Quite a successful wedding. The bride's bouquet, when thrown by her into the audience, hit an engaged girl.

Of course "there was a reason." The Strand is to show "The Heart of a Fool."

Pay Finds New Way to Cooperate with Papers

A new way of grabbing space from the newspapers has been devised by M. A. Pay of the Colonial theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D.

Mr. Pay writes a column that is being run on the editorial page of one of the Sioux Falls dailies under the title of "A Weekly Meditation."

This "Weekly Meditation" is run each week and is a sort of sermon with a motion picture to be played at the Colonial as its theme. Recently "Earthbound" was the subject with the biblical quotation "Of the earth—earthy" its opening sentence.

Mr. Pay is authority for the statement that the space he gets with his editorial sermon could not be purchased at any price and that the advertising he obtains for his attractions thereby is not equaled by any other form of publicity he has ever tried.

"The Weekly Meditation" has no press agent flavor and aside from the fact that it ties up with pictures is really what it is alleged to be, a semi-editorial, well written and of real literary quality.

Lack of space forbids publishing a sample of Mr. Pay's "Weekly Meditation," but we feel sure that a copy of the Daily Argus to which he contributes on the theme mentioned will be forthcoming if any interested exhibitor will write him.

Noble's Big Bet Is Prologue

Portland, Ore., Exhibitor Stages Excellent Specialty Number for "Peaceful Valley"

A CLEVER combination of new and old songs, with a stage setting of a farm vista, including hay mows, wood piles, and other farmyard decorations, comprised the prologue for "Peaceful Valley," which caused cheering among the audiences at the Liberty theatre, Portland, Oregon, where it was presented.

Paul G. Noble, manager of the theatre, who has created quite a reputation for the house through the prologues he has originated during the past several months, declared the "Peaceful Valley" presentation to be one of the most economical as well as successful prologues ever used at the theatre.

The stage setting consisted of three drops each depicting a rural landscape. Two of these were used at the sides of the stage, set back a few feet from the curtain opening, and the third was used at the back. The effect was one of unlimited space especially when contrasted with the "props."

Directly across the front of the stage was a picket fence which Mr. Noble had gone to the trouble of buying from a farmer some distance outside Portland. He desired the weather-beaten appearance and knew of no cheaper way to procure the real thing. Near the back of the stage on the right side he had piled about two cords of split and sawed wood with a few uncut logs and a saw-buck and saw to give the required atmosphere. To the left rear was a hay mow made up of real hay borrowed for the week from a local feed store for the cost of carting to and from the theatre.

Three actors were used in the prologue.

Just before the curtain lifted the orchestra played a melody which included instrumental imitations of familiar farm animals and changing into the vamp of "Hayseed Jazz," as the stage was disclosed. The orchestra vamp was continued for a period of about thirty seconds to give the audience time to fully view the stage before the trio began the singing. Following the conclusion of this number, the trio sang "The Chicken Ray."

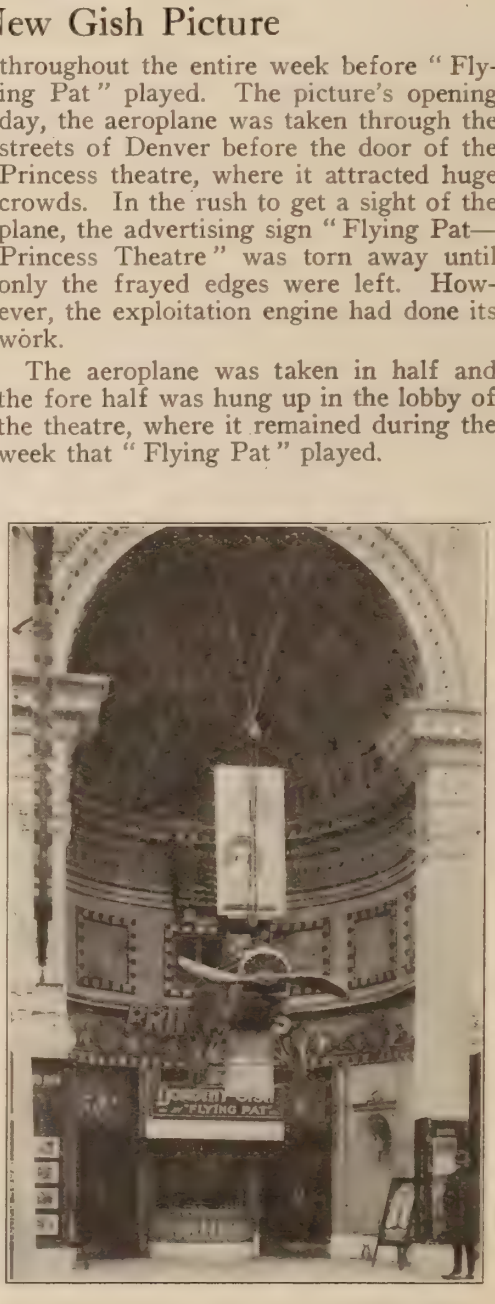
'Plane Puts Over "Flying Pat"

Princess Theatre, Denver, Pulls Many Stunts for New Gish Picture

AEROPLANE exploitation put "Flying Pat" above everything else in Denver when the picture made its appearance at the Princess theatre, in that city. Fred V. Green, Jr., exploitation representative at the local exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, put the picture over by a sensational exploitation stunt in which an aeroplane, the Princess theatre, the Curtiss-Humphreys Airplane Company and a dead ringer for Dorothy Gish all figured.



The exploitation started a week before the picture made its opening. Plans had already been laid with the result that a tie-up with the Curtiss-Humphrey Company resulted in the loan of one of the company's machines together with an experienced pilot. This was all charged to publicity and advertising as far as the Curtiss Company was concerned and didn't cost the theatre a cent. The Curtiss Company got its share of the publicity that exploited the Gish picture.

Contrary to what might have been expected, not a single newspaper story heralded the advent of the aeroplane. Green had thought the matter out logically with the result that when an airship suddenly circled above Denver, without any knowledge as to how, when or where, curiosity was sharpened. The papers took it up, hailed it as a great stunt, forgot such words as "free advertising" and popularized the airship in front page stories.

A plan to extend invitations to various entrants who claimed a resemblance to Dorothy Gish had to be cancelled because of the alleged risks which the company refused to assume responsibility for. The dolled up, wool wrapped waterproof Dorothy Gish of Denver, however, made all flights with audacity.

The aeroplane made its daily trips throughout the entire week before "Flying Pat" played. The picture's opening day, the aeroplane was taken through the streets of Denver before the door of the Princess theatre, where it attracted huge crowds. In the rush to get a sight of the plane, the advertising sign "Flying Pat—Princess Theatre" was torn away until only the frayed edges were left. However, the exploitation engine had done its work.

The aeroplane was taken in half and the fore half was hung up in the lobby of the theatre, where it remained during the week that "Flying Pat" played.

Classical Musical Numbers Needs Scenic Settings, Says Hyman

Do highly classical music numbe used in a motion picture theatre need bo stering up? Students of music insist th the numbers alone are adequate, yet t mass of the people get more from the m sic if scenic and other means are used interpret them, contends Managing D rector Edward L. Hyman of the Broo lyn Strand theatre, who rarely gives t work of some great composer unless aids in putting over the number.

During the current week Wilfr Glenn, basso, sang "Evening Star" fro "Tannhauser." As a solo bare of settir etc., the number no doubt would ha been accepted by the audience, but by little embellishment Mr. Hyman sent across big.

Mr. Glenn, wearing an ancient toga a dressed in a real Tannhauser costume, a peared in a suitable setting, a forest v ley at night. While he sang of the st one lone star appeared in the sky dro It was effective and accentuated his vo ability.

Gift Books Prove Hit at Los Angeles Theatre

Gift books containing admissions to th atres have been one of this year's Ho day showshop innovations in several citi including New York, where seve houses, including the Capitol, are usi the stunt.

Fred Miller, manager of the Califor theatre, Los Angeles, is another mana who used the gift book plan and it s proven so popular that he is going to k it up throughout the year. The Califor book sales have amounted to over $1,0 so far and Mr. Miller figures that nin per cent of this is clear gain for the r son that the books will bring people to house that have never been there befor

Mr. Miller's books ranged from $2 for ten tickets to a season book of 52 missions selling at $25. The tickets bound in a decorative cover announc what is contained. The books were vertised by means of circular letters well as in the theatre.

Aiken's Stunt for "Go and Get It"

THANKSGIVING is always a home-day and people are not much inclined, particularly in small towns, where the enormous mid-day dinner makes one feel very torpid and lazy, to go out to theatres, or movies. But Manager A. M. Aiken, of the Colonial theatre, Commerce, Ga., determined to change this for one day, at any rate. He had booked "Go and Get It" and he wanted everybody to see it.

So he announced a rather novel "treasure hunt" for the day before Thanksgiving, in order to focus the minds of the people on the picture the next day. He selected three citizens—a schoolteacher, a minister and a local merchant—to aid him in the stunt. To the minister he gave a ten dollar bill, to the teacher five dollars and to the merchant two dollars and a half. He then announced, by special heralds, a generous amount of newspaper space, and from his screen, that valuable cash prizes had been given to local people. Those who wished to enter the contest for the hidden treasure had but to pick out the people they considered most likely to have the money and say, "Hidden treasure—go and get it—Thanksgiving."

This proved very effective, and the third prize had not been discovered until late in the evening of that day, and by this time, everybody in town was talking about the picture, the unusual title, and Manager Aiken's stunt.

The lobby on Thanksgiving Day was decorated by the Ladies' Civic Club, the members of which are Mr. Aiken's firm friends. He never overlooks an opportunity to help them out, is always willing to cooperate with them in every way—and their attitude towards him proves that this pays.

The lobby was decorated to keep up the Thanksgiving atmosphere. Garlands of autumn leaves, and chains of them, their bright colors glowing, were used over the box office and across the front of the theatre. Great stacks of cornstalks, piled in corners, and with a pumpkin or two, hollowed out and with grotesquely smiling faces, behind which tiny candles burned, around the base of the cornstalks. Great jars of chrysanthemums and potted plants added their note of gay, colorful beauty.

But the prize achievement of the day was a church choir and ladies' orchestra.

Kinema Stages Prologue for "So Long Letty"

The Kinema theatre of Los Angeles recently staged a prologue in connection with the showing of "So Long Letty" that won special favor with the Kinema patrons.

There were four characters to the stage to represent the four principals of the production. In pantomime they went through the action which takes place outside the bungalows when Letty leaves her husband and goes to live with the other man.

To liven matters, the three principals sang the song hit of the original production, entitled "So Long Letty." As a background for the set was a sky drop with a large moon just setting. Fleecy clouds rolled by on the horizon. After the song was finished the switched couples retired to the bungalows, pulled down the shades (which were transparent) and could be seen eating dinner.

As a climax to this very effective prologue, a large flower pot, standing center stage in the rear, opened and a little girl, attired as Cupid, stepped out with bow and arrow and took a shot at the couples.

A cut of the stage setting showing the four characters who appeared in the prologue appears below.

'Frisco Newspapers Boosting Picture Business

Just what cooperation and assistance Messrs. Roth and Partington, associate directors of the California, Imperial and Partola theaters, San Francisco, are getting from the 'Frisco papers may be judged by inspection of recent issues of the Bulletin and Chronicle, two of the leading dailies.

The Chronicle has been running a contest which has as its object the naming of a new motion picture star from San Francisco in that the winning aspirant to film honors will have a part in a forthcoming picture which Allen Hullubar is to make in San Francisco with Dorothy Phillips in the leading role. The Roth-Partington theaters screens will record the progress of the contest; hence added interest and added box office returns, to say nothing of the free advertising the theaters get on the contest pages of the papers.

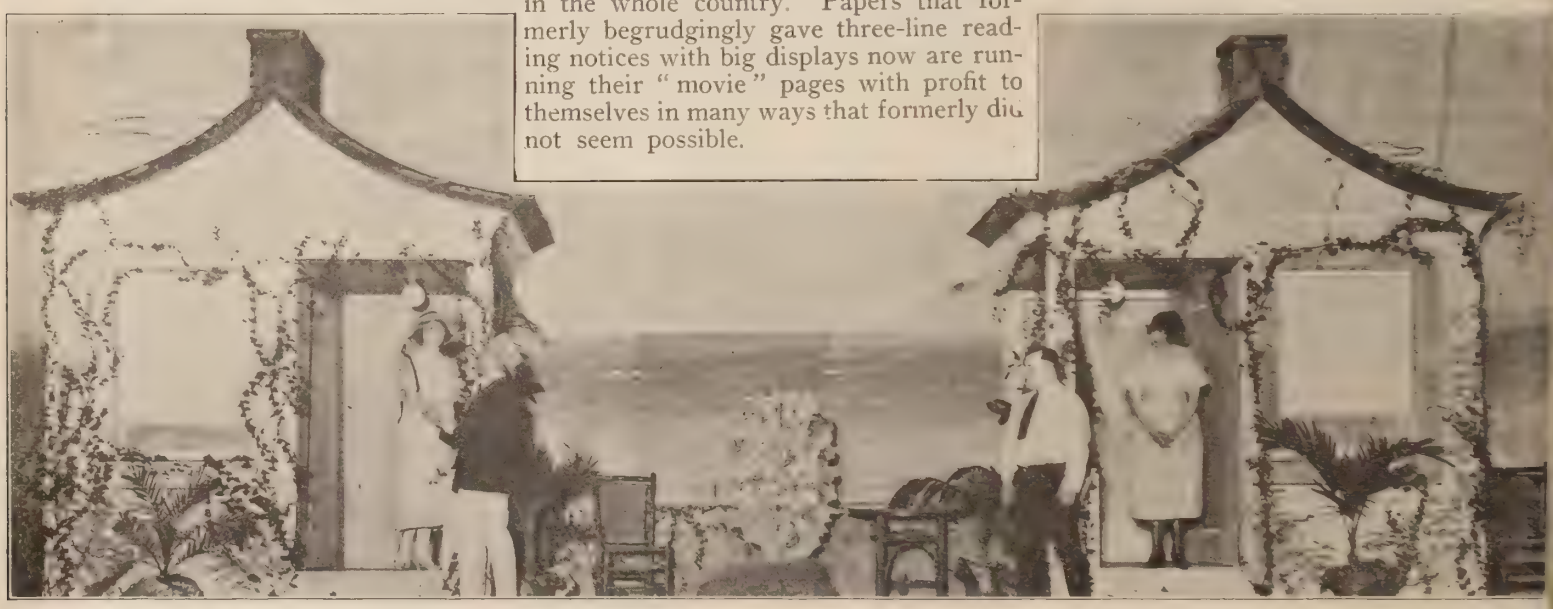
The issue of the Bulletin, to which we refer, was a nice layout of a number of poses of Roscoe Arbuckle along with the announcement of the coming of "The Life of the Party" to the California theater and of a contest under the caption of "Can you tell by a man's facial expression what he is thinking about?"

The support accorded the picture houses of San Francisco is indicative not only of the change of a comparatively short period not only in that city alone, but in the whole country. Papers that formerly begrudgingly gave three-line reading notices with big displays now are running their "movie" pages with profit to themselves in many ways that formerly did not seem possible.

Omaha Theatre Lobby Used for Church Fair

Ministers and church workers in Omaha were given a timely introduction to the true spirit of the movies when John Loveridge, manager of the Rialto theater, invited all the churches of the city to hold their Christmas bazaars in the lobby of the theater.

The response was spontaneous.



Every foot of available space in the entrance lobby and the balcony rest room was taken up by booths representing 17 churches. A. H. Blank, director of the theater, was so interested in the affair that he made a special trip to Omaha from Des Moines to see the result.

Some women who were so assiduously interested a year ago in movie censorship legislation in Nebraska were among the attendants at the booths.

Mention of the hospitality shown the churches in being allowed the use of space at the Rialto theater was made in pulpits throughout the city.

The affair proved an enterprising exploitation stunt, in that the theater was given wide publicity in newspapers and by word of mouth of the "church fair in a theater."

During the bazaar, Mr. Loveridge was visited personally by prominent social workers and ministers who commended him highly on the spirit shown the churches in giving them cooperation.

Robinson's Prologue Proves Fine Investment

Ben Berkowich, publicity man, and Dee Robinson, manager of the Madison theater, Peoria, Ill., are responsible for a prologue on "Something to Think About" that earned its cost of $180 many times over. Taking inspiration from the fact that many of the scenes in the picture are laid in the blacksmith shop, the prologue was merely a rendering of "The Anvil Chorus." A quartette, male, garbed as blacksmiths, appeared in large gold frames — two men on each side of the stage. One was an anvil setting; the other a glowing forge, with a made-up Theodore Roberts. The Madison orchestra played "The Anvil Chorus," the blacksmiths sang and "worked" with the electrically-charged anvil emitting sparks, etc. Then the men step from the frames and respond to the encores. A big hand greeted each performance.

"Something to Think About" played the Madison just after the first of the month. That gave Serkowich a real idea. He had a dozen rubber stamps made and distributed them to that many big stores in Peoria. The merchants used the stamps to imprint their monthly statements and bills, going out to customers. "Something to Think About" proved a real catch-line instead of "please remit."

The billboards were plastered with 24 sheets and other paper. Special block one-sheets were used to imprint "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early." Other window cards were made from stills, tying up with various businesses.

The cut above illustrates two different scenes from the "Something to Think About" prologue described. The characters who took part were local singers making the presentation expense within reason.

"Aida" Being Given at Capitol Theatre

THE Capitol theatre for the current week is using the finals of the second scene of the second act of "Aida" both as an orchestral overture and as a vocal number. With a stage setting conforming in a general way to that of the opera when sung from the original score, showing a gate of the city of Thebes, a cut-out drop representing the stone wall with its wedge-shaped openings, and a sky line canvas back of this, Emily Beglin as "Aida," Erik Bye as "Amanasro," Max Sasonoff as "Radames" and Rose Reed as "Amneris," assisted by the Capitol ensemble and ballet corps, sing the finals including "Amonasro's" recital.

The entrance and ballet numbers of the "dancing girls carrying treasures" is also given by Mlle. Gambarelli and the ballet corps.

New St. Louis Theatre Presenting Elaborate Specialties

One of the features that makes the Missouri theatre, St. Louis' $1,250,000 motion picture house, salient among the advocators of good presentations with each program is the manner in which these special scenes are produced.

Every program of the Missouri theatre contains at least four novelty features. The stage is the largest in St. Louis and is more than adequate for handling the most pretentious spectacles. The accompanying photograph shows the setting for the Chinese Garden," a dancing specialty which was on the program of the week of December 12. The scenic and lighting effects were in perfect accord with the atmosphere of the dance and the audience gave vent to a great applause before the sextette of Chinese dancers even appeared.

Gives Comedy Big Billing

Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Reverses Its Usual Exploitation Procedure

EXPLOITING a two-reel comedy is the latest stunt to be successfully attempted by the management of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis. When Louise Fazenda was given the first vacation of her motion picture career she decided to visit her birthplace in Indiana, having never left California since her arrival there at the age of five.

Manager Goldman learned of Miss Fazenda's contemplated visit East and immediately began correspondence with a view of having her stop in St. Louis, at which time he hoped to book "Home Brew," her latest Sennett picture. Miss Fazenda had never appeared on a stage in her life, and was hesitant about accepting the invitation. She finally accepted, however, and the picture was booked for the week of December 5th. Announcements were made through several columns of paid advertising in the four local dailies of the proposed visit of the comedy star. They attracted much attention because of the fact that Miss Fazenda has attained a degree of popularity locally and because of the fact that she was the first comedy star ever to make her personal appearance in St. Louis.

The St. Louis newspapers began heralding the event, the editors having recognized the visit as a real news value. Before Miss Fazenda actually arrived the press had devoted a total of six and a half columns of news and feature stories to the Missouri theatre in this connection.

Rothafel's Prologue for "Bunty"

AS a prologue for "Bunty Pulls the Strings" at the Capitol theatre this week, Bertram Peacock, attired in Scottish costume before a Scotch plaid drape, recites the following lyric by Martha Wilchinsky:

"O, lave a' yer worries an' troubles behin' ye,
Wi' niver a thocht tae the cares o' the day,
An coom wi' me back tae the shores o' auld Scotland,
Tae the fair purple heather that blooms far awa'.

"O' a bonnie sweet lass an' a bonnie braw laddie,
An' a faither sae dour, is the tale I wud tell—
An' o' hearts that beat true in bonnie auld Scotland—
Noo open your een an' see for yersel'."

Holds Special Show for Salvation Army Basket

One end of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's film storage room in the Indianapolis exchange was filled with eatables and other useful articles gathered in at a Christmas party for the children of Indianapolis given at the Isis theater, Thursday, Dec. 23, under the supervision of Oscar A. Kantner, F. P. L., exploitation representative in that city. The accompanying photograph shows the results of the party, which was given to obtain food and presents for the Salvation Army's annual distribution.

Each boy or girl was admitted upon presentation at the ticket office of an apple, an orange, a potato, some candy, nuts or any other suitable article in any quantity. Two shows were given, one at 9 and the other at 10 a. m. The proceeds consisted of twelve bushels of potatoes, eight bushels of apples, six bushels of oranges, 250 pounds of candy and nuts, six cases of canned vegetables and fruits, as well as a plentiful supply of clothing, cabbage, onions, etc.

Sid Grauman's "An Evening of Music in an Old Master's Studio" as staged at the Grauman theatre, Los Angeles, and described in an accompanying article

Grauman's Latest Musical Creation

His Sunday Symphony concerts, with 75 artists and the big organ, have won national commendation and enthusiastic approval.

His audiences were given a distinct and pleasing surprise in the way of a feature act, which he called "An Evening of Music in an Old Master's Studio."

Decidedly suggestive of Warfield's "Music Master" was the stage set—a comfortable, but old-fashioned room, with beamed ceilings, kerosene lamps, ancient furniture, with a grand piano as the outstanding feature. Snow crusted window, a cheerful fire in the grate and two old friends chatting, made up the picture.

Shortly sleigh bells are heard, and this proved most pleasing to the big audiences. Sleigh bells are never heard in Los Angeles, where snow falls about once in forty years, and their merry jingle reminded visitors of the blizzards they will miss while sojourning in the land of flowers and sunshine, while to others, not natives, they brought pleasing memories. Soon after half a dozen visitors come piling in, stamping the snow from their feet and shaking it from their clothing.

All were in the roles of old musicians.

Navy Tie-up Still Brings Them In

With only two days' notice on which to plan an exploitation campaign for the opening of "Something to Think About" at the Criterion theatre, Indianapolis, Oscar A. Kantner, local exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, turned to the Army-Navy Recruiting Service.

Two hundred cards were printed in a tie-up for the picture with both services, those for the Army in red and those for the Navy in blue.

The title for the picture was used as the caption for both instalments of the copy. "Something to Think About" at the Criterion theatre and "'Something to Think About,' Young Man"—told the stories in both instances.

Posted in 400 prominent places throughout the city they constituted as strong a campaign as could possibly be conceived.

Helmts Gets Newspaper Co-operation

To the many exploitation exploits of E. H. Helmts, manager of the Rialto theatre, Des Moines, has been added his campaign in the interests of "The Riddle: Woman," whereby the Des Moines Capital, one of the leading papers, was induced to conduct a scenario writing contest based on "The Riddle: Woman."

Two weeks previous to the first presentation of the picture at the Rialto, the Capital reproduced on the front page the first of a series of twelve scene stills from the production. The scene stills were selected by the photoplay editor of the Capital, which reproduced one picture each day, and are supposed to tell a connected story in this pictorial form. The story thus depicted is offered as an inspiration to fans to write a scenario. Prizes of $100 are to be awarded for the best scenarios submitted.

"The Riddle; Woman's Scenario Test," as it is called by the newspaper conducting it, is reported to have excited a great amount of interest among the photoplay patrons of Des Moines. The stunt which has already proved itself a successful one as exploitation for the picture, as well as a circulation builder for the Des Moines Capital, was worked into a direct tie-up with the theatre.

Arnette Aiken Cashes in on Baby Show

Old County Fair Stunt With New Trimmings Goes Over For a Hit

IT takes a brave man in a small town to conduct a baby-show and give a prize to the prettiest baby—for you will be making one friend for life—the mother of the lucky infant—and as many enemies as there are unsuccessful contestants.

But Arnette M. Aiken of the Colonial theatre, Commerce, Ga., decided that a baby show ought to be a good stunt, and figured out a way to get around the usual unpleasantness that attends such contests.

A photographer from Atlanta was engaged, and when one wished to enter one's infant prodigy in the contest, it was only necessary to sign the slips which were furnished by the Colonial box-office, giving name and address, of the parents, and mentioning a day on which the photograph could be made. The photographer would then call and take from three to six different negatives.

More than forty infants were entered in the contest, the age limit being three years. To get things started, Mr. Aiken had his own small daughter photographed, and used the picture in every possible way to boost the contest. A slide was made of this picture, with a caption mentioning the contest, the closing date, etc. A beautiful silver loving cup was the prize, and this loving cup was on exhibition in the lobby from the very first day of the contest's opening.

When the pictures began to come in, slides were made of pictures chosen at random. Then Mr. Aiken began the effort to get judges—and when various able-bodied, sound-minded men in Commerce found out what they were to judge, they immediately had other duties that forbade their mingling in any way with such a "dangerous occupation."

Finally, in desperation, he hit upon a scheme. A slide was made of the best negative taken of every baby entered in the contest, and this slide was numbered. Then announcements were carried to the effect that proofs of the pictures would be at the Colonial on a certain day, and a special matinee was given so that all fond and doting parents might see them. Then the slides were run at every performance, with coupons for voting, by number. When all the slides had been shown for a week, and the ballots were all in, three well-known citizens from a neighboring town were appointed to read the ballots and make the final announcements of prize-winners.

December 10 was the final day of the contest, and on that day "The Soul of Youth" was the feature picture, the minister of a local church made a short address, and the most important of the three visiting citizens announced the prize-winner.

Kinema's Presentations Are Elaborate

Motion picture exhibitors who have had difficulty in arranging appropriate prologues for productions they have booked may be able to gather inspiration from the policy of the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles in deciding upon the method of presentation they will give. Productions which do not obviously suggest a prologue are subject to analysis by the house staff to determine the mood in which an audience will be most receptive to the production and a prologue is then based upon a theme appropriate to this mood.

When " The Master Mind " was booked for the theatre, the house staff decided that owing to the tense dramatic situation with which the picture opens, the best mood to induce on the part of the audience would be one of tranquil meditation. The mood suggested Italy by moonlight to the house artist and accordingly a scene in Venice was decided upon and put up to the various departments of the theatre. The carpenters provided a gondola and the brick work for a wharf. The scenic department provided a back drop of a cloudy sky and appropriate street props. The musical department provided three singers, but the main effect was acquired through the electrician, who arranged a subdued orange lighting for the whole stage, combined with a moon spotlight and a cloud effect that continually dimmed and lighted the moon.

The prologue began with the moon darkened and the orchestra playing " Venetian Moon." As the moon came out from behind a cloud the gondola, drawn on wheels which were concealed by the water but apparently propelled by one of the singers, garbed as a gondolier, came out and stopped in the center of the rear of the stage. The three singers, garbed in the conventional Italian costume and carrying bandoliers, came front while singing the popular song. At the conclusion of the singing one of the men produced a concertina and played an effective solo. The conclusion of the act was another song by the trio with their own instrumental accompaniments, this time an Italian aria.

Rivoli Presents Excerpts from Two Operas

FOR its specialty numbers for the current week, the Rivoli theatre, New York, returns to staging bits from grand opera. The " Toreador Song " from " Carmen " is being sung by Edoardo Albano with the Rivoli chorus assisting. Both the soloist and the ensemble are attired in the traditional costumes of the opera but the stage setting used is a decorative black drop instead of a painted canvas.

The second opera number, and by far the most elaborate, is the presentation of portions of the second act of " Lakme," with Grace Hoffman, noted concert and opera artist, singing the title role, assisted by the Rivoli chorus and ballet ensemble.

With a stage setting showing a street in an East Indian city as in the original production, Miss Hoffman renders the " Bell Song," after some introductory singing and dancing by the characters of the opera, Indian dancing girls in abbreviatetd costumes, natives in proper attire and English visitors as impersonated by Dr. Reiesenfeld's new school of opera and ensemble.

Probably few of the Rivoli audiences know of Miss Hoffman's fame as a singer, but they are aware that they are listening to an unusual voice, as is evidenced by the applause given her solo.

Here's a New and Good One for "Number Please"

The idea of a pasteboard card about three by four inches with a hole in the middle to attach to a telephone mouthpiece was designed by W. W. Kofeldt, manager of the San Francisco Pathe film exchange, recently to advertise an all-night motion picture house. The former design of an owl's head is being changed to a card with the words: " Number please," a sketch of Harold Lloyd, and the name of the theatre at which the picture, " Number Please " will show and date inscribed.

This is a new idea in exploitation and is admirably fitted to exploit the new Lloyd release. The telephone company is cooperating with Kofeldt and several hundred telephones in San Francisco will soon be decorated with the little cards.

Portland Sees Fine Prologue for "The Round-up"

Three cowboys and three prancing steeds put on the act. With a Western background, the characters made their appearance coming down to the front of the stage where the horses " parked " long enough for their riders to harmonize on a cowboy love song. Then each man and beast showed off. Sharpshooting was given a try. Throwing the lariat, dancing and a Western line of comedy put to shame all contributions such as Will Rogers or Fred Stone may have put on. The act is essentially a comedy number, as the entire play was a take-off from beginning to end on Western rodeos and cowboy performers.

This cut shows the stage setting and the artists which appeared in a musical prologue for " The Master Mind " presented recently by the Kinema theatre of Los Angeles

Publicity Stunt for Toonerville Trolley

A stunt that got mention in several papers and was pictured in at least one was pulled off in Philadelphia in conjunction with the first showing of the Toonerville Trolley comedies at the Stanton theatre, during the week of December 20th. The comedies happen to have been made at Betzwood, just outside of Philadelphia, so it was a comparatively simple matter to bring the famous trolley into the city.

It was arranged to have the trolley drawn through the very heart of the business district, on one of the busiest days of the year, by a big car that towed it along as if the Toonerville trolley as a trailer was a daily event. It was a sight to behold and drew all sorts of comment.

Strand Presenting Original Prologue

JOSEPH PLUNKETT, manager of the New York Strand, is presenting an original prologue for "The Last of the Mohicans," the Strand's feature attraction this week.

With a stage setting showing a drop depicting an exterior typical of those used in the picture, and set rock pieces in front of it, Joseph Martel and the Strand male quartette, attired as Indians, sing appropriate vocal selections.

Wendt Strives for the Front Page

Harold F. Wendt, publicity and advertising director of the Rivoli theater, Toledo, maintains that a line of publicity in the news columns of a paper is worth more than a column for the theater page and consequently directs most of his attention toward this end.

An example of how well he succeeds might be noted in his Christmas party which he gave to three thousand of Toledo's poor kiddies on the morning of the holiday. Any paper that would pass up such an event without giving it considerable space has but a noticeable circulation. But Toledo's papers deemed it a corking good human interest story as well as something with news value. For about a month did Wendt work on the party and everything that he did was followed by a story in the papers.

He purposely worked step by step for this reason, rather than give it to them all at one "shot." First there was a general story on his plans. Then the traction company donated transportation for the children. A commission man donated the biggest tree in the city. Ten window trimmers donated their services in trimming it. The Elks took a hand and asked that they might assist by giving every child that attended a box of candy, nuts, fruit and other things that makes Christmas worth while to a kid. An ex-circus clown agreed to play Santa Claus. Theater employes agreed to furnish their services.

Wendt then got after the film men and the Fox, Metro and Standard companies came through with the funniest comedies they could find. Four vaudeville acts donated their services. Each and every step received worthy mention.

More Crescent Theatre, Syracuse Tie-ups

"THE RIGHT TO LOVE Your Country and the right to serve it are combined with the opportunity to acquire an excellent education."

More than 100 large posters were distributed around the city, attracting a large amount of publicity for the picture and the Crescent theatre. The Marine Recruiting band held a parade during the week in which the posters and signs mentioning "The Right to Love" were introduced as part of McConville's exploitation program.

Even in smaller cities where the band is lacking the tie-up with the Marine or any military service recruiting station can be a ready exploitation aid to the exhibitor.

Milk Bottles Take Place of Usual Dimes

Here is an exploitation idea that ought to be good about twice a year in any but the largest towns. It originates in Findlay, Ohio.

FINDLAY, Ohio.—Milk bottles will take the place of coin of the realm in Findlay on December 29th, as far as the price of admission to the motion picture shows is concerned. As a plan to have all milk bottles returned, the Findlay Milk Distributers' Association has arranged with the theatres to admit every boy who brings two bottles. A money prize will be given to the boy bringing in the greatest number of bottles.

Finke Uses Teaser Stuff with Sucecss

Friends of the teaser form of advertising will find this account of how Manager Harry Finke of the Palace theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., put over a campaign for "What's Your Hurry?" interesting.

Some two weeks before the picture opened at the Palace, mysterious signs began to appear about the city bearing only the words, "What's Your Hurry?"

Then came a second query, "What's My Hurry?" but on this card was also an announcement in smaller type of the showing of "45 Minutes from Broadway" at the Palace and explaining the headline by stating a desire to reach the theatre. This apparently explained the first teaser question or at least connected it with the Palace advertising and kept the interest alive until the title of the Reid picture was announced for showing.

The stunt attracted so much attention that the Union-Star gave the Palace considerable free publicity on it.

O'Hare Gets Results with Postals

S. O'Hare, manager of the Armory and Swan theatres, Clarinda, Iowa, has just put over a business building bit of exploitation that many a manager may use to advantage whether he be located in a large or small city.

During a period of stiff competition Mr. O'Hare mailed out a thousand postal cards that contained a list of recognized stars and requested the recipients to designate their favorites and announced also that the card was good for a free admission.

The result of Mr. O'Hare's plan was two-fold. Nine hundred and one of the cards were used as passes to the theatres and invariably the dead heads brought some one with them and that made the box office receipts presentable in spite of the passes. A list of people who had preference among players was made and now when ever a picture is booked with one of these playing in it the person is notified.

The scheme worked well all around, according to Mr. O'Hare and he will continue building up a mailing list with the same plan.

Up State Church to Run Pictures

One of the churches in Watertown, N. Y., a city of 30,000 persons, tried out an innovation this week, by meeting the entire expense in connection with the showing of "The Stream of Life," and inviting the general public. The picture was shown in the church auditorium, with a large attendance. It is quite possible that the success which attended the venture will result in this and other churches in the city putting on pictures from time to time on the same basis.

"Dinty" Exploitation Makes Use of Wesley's Freckles

The Capitol theater, St. Paul, started an avalanche of publicity for "Dinty," when an advertisement in the newspapers appeared reading as follows:

"Attention, all you freckle-faced youngsters! Here's a chance to commercialize those freckles. Tomorrow night every St. Paul boy or girl who has 100 freckles or more will be admitted free to the Capitol theater to see Wesley Barry, the boy star, in "Dinty," his first starring vehicle. Get your mother or father or big sister to count 'em for you. And if you happen to have only 99, don't be afraid to drop around to the Capitol anyway. You'll get in. Count 'em."

As a result of this advertisement over two hundred children were admitted free—but their parents came and paid. Great local interest was attached to this stunt and the newspapers played it up strong under such spread heads as "Freckle Colony of St. Paul See Dinty Barry."

Hyman Gives Scenic Elaborate Presentation

"In Dixie Land," a Kineto scenic review, alive with southern scenes and customs, was given appropriate presentation help at the Brooklyn Strand theater, where Managing Director Edward L. Hyman took the Strand ensemble of eight voices and with suitable costumes, scenic effects and lighting, made the short film stand out as an unusual part of the program.

As soon as the audience had seen the last scene and had their pictorial fill of down south shots, the curtains lifted on a night scene on a Mississippi levee. It might have been a picture from Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer." The back-drop was that of a river with side-wheelers anchored at the wharf. The southern moon hung yellow and large and lights glimmered along the shore line and on the boats. Upon the levee in dim light sported the members of the ensemble, men and women, all garbed in typical Dixie costume. The scene was homely and appealing.

Fifty Cent Lobby Display Attracts Attention

Effectiveness of lobby display often de pends more upon the amount of thinkin expended on them than the amount o money that goes into their preparatio

H. A. Daniels, manager of the Rialt theatre, Laredo, Texas, recently spent les than 50 cents on the material that wen into one of the most talked of lobby dis plays ever used at his theatre. In bac of the idea, however, was the thought o three people.

The display consisted of three re hearts cut out of Bristol board. Whit letters, hand cut from white enamel boo paper, put over the message. The large of the three hearts twenty-six inches ove all, was hung in the centre of the lobb On it in the white letters were the word "The Love Expert." The word "Love in the title was made of small whit hearts. On each side hung a heart, eac nineteen inches over all, lettered in th same way, the wording on one readin "You Tell Me" and the other "I'll Te You."

The remainder of the lobby was give over to lithographs advertising the Co stance Talmadge feature and the whol effect was one of the best which has eve been procured for such a small expendi ure of money.

Wesley's Freckles Counted at Minneapoli

Middle West exhibitors are scoring considerable success in exploiting "Din ty" by means of contests conducted l cally, wherein the efforts are sponsore by local newspapers endeavoring to fin the most be-freckled lad in town.

In Minneapolis, Manager Charles Perry, of the New Lyric, had everyone i town counting the freckles in Wesle Barry's face. In conjunction with th Daily News, Mr. Perry offered $10 t every person who could count Wesley freckles reproduced in big pictures fro day to day during the run of the pictur This special publicity in the newspaper a tracted unusual interest in the film.

Music and The Picture

Meet Mr. Richard Wagner

By Charles D. Isaacson

OF course the famous Wagner is he of the baseball world, but there was another who pronounced the name as if it were "V-ogner" and wore a velvet cap rakishly on the side of his head.

Mr. Richard Wagner of Germany wrote several of the highest-brow grand operas which ever were set on paper. They caused a revolution in fine art, and you were either a pro-Wagnerite or an anti. There was no middle course. Not even in President Wilson's manner could one be neutral by word, act and thought.

Mr. Richard Wagner died nearly half a century ago before the screen was anything more than a part of prestidigitators and shadow-artists. Mr. Richard Wagner died without ever seeing Mary Pickford, or Charlie Chaplin or Geraldine Farrar transporting opera to pictures.

And yet today, Mr. Richard Wagner is the big man in pictures!

Think of it! What the highest highbrows in music thought Richard crazy for attempting, all the modern screen geniuses are using without so much as a blush.

The "best brains" in the industry (to borrow a phrase from Mr. Harding) are using the Wagnerian method, and it's proving more successful than it ever did in "Parsifal," "Tannhauser," "Lohengrin" or "Tristan and Isolde."

A number of NEWS readers have asked for an explanation of the "leit-motif" as it is being applied to pictures and I shall attempt to furnish that information.

The plan is this. Each character in the opera or "movie" is labelled with a musical theme. Audiences have a very keen sense of hearing. Also they have good memories. In addition to a character being recognized by her face, by her play name, by her manner, etc.—she now has a sound. The heroine is designated with a sweet, demure, captivating melody, written expressly for her or taken from some familiar classic like "Traumeri" or Schubert's "Serenade," or Saint-Saen's "Swan" or "Love's Old Sweet Song." The villain is not only recognized by his name, his face, his sneaking effrontery or his coarse blustering manner—but by the sound. The orchestra labels him with a theme which is melodramatic or tragic, which clangs out of the brass or the drums. The hero is given an appropriately courageous and forceful, clear strain of notes. Each person is accompanied by a characteristic theme, which may be humorous, quaint, bizarre, awkward, tender, sympathetic, sneaky, provincial, cosmopolitan, French, Italian, etc.

I have spoken so often of the language of musical sounds that I am certain to have impressed that thought conclusively upon my readers. Hence the "character label" is easily understood.

At first when the orchestra introduces the "motifs" they merely seem to be an additional key to the character. But as the themes are reiterated, the memory sense of the audience becomes more active and assertive. As the picture progresses the theme sounds the approach of the character and even when the actor is not near the front of the stage but is influencing the action, the orchestra can skilfully indicate the spiritual presence of the person.

Of course it is necessary to make each label distinctive and true. I recall one use of a theme recently in a picture where there was a chatterbox theme. One could see her lips moving and her tongue chattering and her unscrupulous, scandal-mongering heart beating quickly. I laughed aloud as I saw her hurrying with her secret, bursting with her importance—I could see her breathing as that music rolled and gibble-jabbled, jabbled, cackled, blathered and blabbered. I remember another theme of an old miser, which seemed to be eternally counting up his gold. Then there was a gay Irishman, whose musical motif seemed to be saying, "The top o' the mornin' to yez."

Of course the motif not only labels the character but it also describes the idea.

Richard Wagner's musical secrets are three-fold:

1. He realizes that he can foretell the actual dramatic idea with an appropriate and familiar bit of melody.

2. He knows that there is a memory-sense in his audience which permits him to further enhance the characterizations of his players by giving each a distinctive musical theme, which always accompanies that person.

3. He has acquired the ability to give voice to the action, the mood, the idea which dominates each episode.

In the first idea, Wagner sets his audience into a state of mind in advance of the actual demonstration, and so makes it easier for the stage (or screen) to create its atmosphere. At the opening of the show, the orchestra plays an overture. It is an attempt. Think of the screen adaptation. The orchestra comes to a dead pause, the house becomes pitch dark. We expect to see the title flash on the screen. But it doesn't come. Instead a plaintive violin solo plays some familiar melody. It is so unexpected and so simple and so familiar and so tender, that the whole audience feels like crying in a homely sort of way, catching the spirit of the idea. Consider the situation. The audience, excited, eager to see this great masterpiece which it has heard so much about, ready to criticize, find fault and underestimate, is suddenly grabbed by the heart-strings, and told by the subtlest of processes: this is a simple, home-story. Then when the screen lights up after about two minutes of this sort of music, and there is disclosed a little country street, a small house and the parlor of an old-fashioned home, the atmosphere is all there. The scene becomes idealized, intensified, made heroic in its way.

Wagner's secret is in finding the keynote to his story—and in advance setting his audience in the frame of mind to understand. What is coming, thinks the audience? Is it war and revenge, as in "The Birth of a Nation"? Is it something mystic as in "Earthbound"? What is it? Well, here it is, says the orchestra, and everybody settles back, in the proper frame of mind.

This in a certain sense is equivalent to the prologue which is coming into universal use before the big feature appears on the screen. (Of course, a big feature being an evening's full entertainment, is suf-

TERRITORIAL SALES AND PURCHASES

In the Independent Field

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

HARRY A. SHERMAN, president of Sherman Productions Corporation, left for the Pacific coast late this week to complete producing arrangements for the company. On his return, it is expected that an announcement will be made of his plans for releasing Sherman pictures during the coming year and the final closing of all territorial franchises.

Franchises for practically all the larger territories have already been allotted, it is said, and it has been understood for sometime past that the only reason for the delay in making the final announcement of the initial release dates and the exchanges through which the Sherman productions will be booked was to enable President Sherman to complete his production plans.

The purpose of his present trip to the coast, it is stated, is to arrange for the lease of one of the largest studios in the Hollywood section and the final signing up of two stars of the first magnitude, with whom he has been in correspondence for several weeks past.

"Madonnas and Men" is Selling Fast

Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., reports that the sales of "Madonnas and Men" throughout the United States have taken a leap in the past week. During that time he sold three separate territories, and one man who had purchased for his territory increased his block by adding on another state.

Climax Film Corporation, for Greater New York; Independent Film Exchange, for Maryland, Dis- of Col., Delaware and Va.; Columbia Film Service, for Western Pennsylvania; Jans Film Service, for northern New Jersey; First National, for Michigan; Allen Bros., for Canada; Ben Fitzer Film Co., for upper New York State; Masterpiece Film Attractions, for eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Export and import Co., for entire foreign rights; Federated Exchanges, for New England; Masterpiece Film Company, for Ohio and Kentucky; Federated Exchanges, for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Superior Screen Service, for Illinois and Indiana.

Mr. Jans feels that before the New Year is another month old he will have sold the remaining territory now open.

Exchanges Vote on Title

State Right Buyers to Decide Name of Second Lubin Feature

REALIZING the importance of picking a 100 per cent. title for his second picture, tentatively entitled "Crossed Trails," Bert Lubin is circularizing the state rights field with a ballot sheet containing twelve suggested names for his second backing."

The idea is proving a very satisfactory one, it is said, and is demonstrating the value of the exchangemen's opinion as to just what constitutes an effective box office title in their respective localities.

"I am doing this," states Bert Lubin, "because I don't believe any producer or any individual is capable of picking the best title for his particular picture. What may be good in New York may fall flat in California.

"I will select the title according to the number of first, second and third votes received on it. If a title receives sixty per cent. of the second votes and doesn't receive a single first I will select it in preference to a title which receives ten per cent. first votes with no second backing."

"Crossed Trails," as the picture is temporarily called, will be ready for release to the independent market within two weeks, it is stated. The winning title will be announced next week. Allene Ray is the star and Robin Townley director.

Sunrise Opening Exchanges

New Company Appoints Managers for N. Y. and Baltimore Districts

THE first two links in the contemplated series of exchange centers to be opened by the Sunrise Pictures Corporation, of No. 220 West Forty-second street, in the larger territories, were established during the week with the appointment of exchange managers for Greater New York and the Baltimore and Washington districts. S. Rubenstein was made manager for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey and will soon locate in a prominent exchange center. Ben Abrams was appointed manager of the Baltimore and Washington territory and has already established headquarters at No. 420 East Lexington street, Baltimore.

To augment the two new exchanges with others, Winfield F. Kelly, general manager, who will make a swing around the country soon, will have his weather eye cocked for promising territories and for men who know their respective districts.

MELVIN HIRSH, manager of the Aywon Film Corporation's New York exchange, announces that the first of the Mary Pickford big little two-reel features to be released are "The Beast at Bay," "The Mender of Nets," "The Informer" and "Friends." These will be put out and exhibited in the order named, the first to be ready for public presentation within a very short time.

The series of fifteen Mary Pickford pictures present the star in a series of pictures which first brought her fame and fortune.

A complete list of exchanges where bookings can be made on the Mary Pickford Series, the Success Series and "The Man of Courage" will be published within a short time.

Jack Hoxie Popular as a Feature Star

The series of four special productions, starring Jack Hoxie, which mark his departure from the serial field to that of the feature photoplay, is proving extremely popular, a fact which is tested by a letter received by the Arrow offices, who are distributing the Jack Hoxie productions, from Walter A. Baier of the Kay-Bee Film Corporation, Milwaukee, Wis.

An excerpt from the letter says: "We screened 'A Man from Nowhere' yesterday and I want to compliment the Arrow organization for having such a splendid production for its exchange men. It is an absolute knockout and what makes it more appealing is the clean type of Western. If this picture is any criterion of what the rest of the Hoxies will be, I predict a wonderful success for this series."

Irish-Made Production Presented in N. Y.

A photodramatic spectacle, "In the Days of Saint Patrick," will open an indefinite engagement at the Lexington Theatre, New York, commencing Sunday afternoon, January 9. This six-reel super production created a sensation in Ireland because of its historical and religious aspect and because of its beauty. The picture was made in Ireland with an all Irish cast and was written from documents collected by the Rev. W. MacSweeney of Maynooth University, Dublin, through the courtesy of the Royal Irish Historical Society. It is presented by Kelwin Film Company.

"You Married My Husband" Is Shown

"You Married My Husband," the initial production of the Art Film Enterprises of Philadelphia, Pa., and which has just completed a week's run at the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, will be offered for outright sale of negative to United States and Canada.

The picture, a product of the Market was made partly in Italy and Spain. The company intends to offer a number of foreign productions which they believe will measure up to the standard of American made pictures.

According to the announcement from the producers, "You Married My Husband" was received with much enthusiasm when shown in Philadelphia. It was pointed out that the week of December 20th, when the picture was shown at the Academy, was the hardest week in the year from the box office standpoint. However, the picture played to capacity business.

No expense was spared in its presentation. A chorus of 30 people sang a selection from La Forza Del Destino as an added attraction. Especially written music has been prepared by the well-known composer and director, Maestro Ettore Martini, to accompany the picture. Mr. Martini personally conducted the orchestra. Philadelphia papers were unanimous in their praise of both picture and music.

The executive offices of the Art Film Enterprises are located at 1338 South 16th St., Philadelphia, Pa., and offices will be opened shortly in New York City, it is said.

Anger Gets Reelcraft Post in Milwaukee

Lou Anger has been selected by District Manager Carl Harthill, of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation to head the Branch Office and Exchange of Reelcraft at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, succeeding G. L. Stiles, who has taken charge of the new office in Kansas City.

Anger has been a salesman for the Indianapolis office of Reelcraft, where he helped to establish several new records for that office that enabled it to keep close to the top of the Reelcraft list. He has been with Reelcraft ever since its organization, and is well versed with the products and releases of its exclusive Short Subject program.

More Open Booking in 1921

By Joe Brandt

THE industrial propaganda which has been waged by almost all of the big metropolitan newspapers throughout the country with regard to careful preparation of plans for 1921 and the execution of same has brought about a peculiar condition in the motion picture industry.

I have just returned from a very extensive trip and I believe that the present unsettled business condition has brought very forcibly to the attention of the exhibitors, the fact that buying pictures for the new year is a matter which must receive more careful consideration than ever before.

So many changes have taken place in the producing field during the year of 1920 that the exhibitor feels that it is imperative for him to use his utmost caution in securing bookings for the year 1921.

While there is the same general tendency on the part of exhibitors to become definitely associated with at least one program organization for a series of pictures that will carry them through the greater part of the year, yet they seem to feel that their interest will be best conserved by allowing at least ten to fifteen weeks of the year for open booking.

A great many of the exhibitors are therefore figuring on a booking arrangement that will guarantee the program for about forty weeks of the year, but they are leaving the balance of the year so that they will not be booked up when special pictures come along that they will want to play.

The fact that Griffith has held back the general release of "Way Down East" and that Fox does not intend to release "Over the Hills" for some time to come, and the indication that several of the prominent directors contemplate making at least one or two specials this year, has a tendency to make the exhibitor feel that he cannot afford to book his pictures for this year in the same manner that he did in 1920.

During the past year the system of laying pictures on the shelf was repeated and the exhibitors are endeavoring to arrange to book pictures so that this will not occur this year.

I covered most of the territory east of the Rockies, and I found that exhibitors in all of the territories I visited were inclined to favor the independent producer. A great many exhibitors had made money during 1920 with special pictures made by independent producers, but they complained that owing to their anxiety to assure themselves of the program service for 1920 they had overstepped the mark and booked more solidly than they should have. This necessitated in a great many cases laying pictures on the shelf to make room for independent productions which had greater box office values. While it is true that the exhibitors did make more money on the independent pictures than they did on some of the pictures they had previously booked, nevertheless the net profit was not as great as it should have been, owing to the fact that they were obliged to pay the film rental on the picture that had previously been booked.

This also affected the revenue of the independent exchanges, because in many cases a concession in price had to be made because of the fact that the exhibitor was compelled to pay for the two pictures booked for the same day.

I honestly believe that from the remarks that I have heard in almost every section of the country that the exhibitors will leave room for more independent subjects during the year 1921.

I am certain that all of the exhibitors throughout the country, no matter what the size of the theatre is or what the location may be, are firmly convinced that it is to their best interests to leave at least ten to twelve weeks of the entire year open to set in big specials that are made by independent producers from time to time, and those that are known among program organizations as "accidents" and which ultimately are released as specials.

As far as my personal observations are concerned, I am positive that the best interests of all will be conserved if the program organizations produce and release fewer and better pictures this year. I don't believe there is a program organization that didn't find at least one "accident" during the year 1920 that was finally booked as a special, and if this organization figures up in dollars and cents what it cost in cancellations on some other subject, or the amount rebated for adjustments, they would find if they had restricted their production activities so that they would not have had as many pictures to offer during 1920, they would be better off financially.

My recent trip confirms the impression that I received when I was at the Coast; that under the forced measures of turning out pictures on schedule, even the bigger organizations are compelled to offer to the public pictures that would not have seen the light of day if more time had been taken and fewer pictures demanded from the producing unit.

I visited about twenty cities on my last trip and I attended as many shows as possible, and from the attitude of the public as well as the criticism in the newspapers, I feel certain that the producers did not, during 1920 maintain the average standard of production that is necessary to satisfy the public and permit the industry to make the strides necessary to keep it in the front ranks of the amusement world.

Form Scenario Service Staff

Eve Unsell Heads Co.; Will Represent Publishers

WHAT is described to be an original type of service to the film industry, is contained in the announcement of the creation of the Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, headed by Eve Unsell, one of the best known scenario writers in motion picture production. Miss Unsell resigned her position as a staff writer with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in order to found the company bearing her name and is president of the new organization. With it are associated as vice-president, E. J. Clode, Jr., son of the well known publisher, and Lester Blankfield, co-author of many of Miss Unsell's original stories, as secretary.

The Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc., according to announcement, offers to the trade a well selected group of trained writers who, under Miss Unsell's supervision, will undertake to write continuities, synopses, opinions and revisions of difficult sections of continuities already prepared, the building up of plot outlines, the rearrangement or alteration of stories for particular stellar parts, and in every other way supply a detailed personal service, extending to subtitles and editing of complete productions.

The Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc., simultaneously announces as its first two contracts with producers one for the preparation of six continuities for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and another for the next six continuities for the First National star, Katherine MacDonald.

The organization will also comprise a book department designed to operate as an exclusive agency for prominent publishing concerns in disposal of the film rights of their books. This department is under the guidance of E. J. Clode, Jr., and Edna Garden, formerly of the Metro scenario department, and starts its active career with the representation in this manner of Harper & Brother and others, including E. J. Clode, Sr., and Thomas J. Watt.

In a statement covering the plans and policies of the Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc., Miss Unsell said:

"The average synopsis of a play or book written to indicate motion picture possibilities, is not a work of art, in the sense that art is a force which reveals the creator's expression. Rather, the average outside synopsis submitted to the editor conceals nine-tenths of the picture possibilities, often emphasizing the wrong points in the story and understating the climaxes and other impelling incidents.

"It is my purpose to supply such synopses for the consideration of producers as will convey faithfully a true, accurate, and well-balanced digest of the plots offered for decision, with every possible opportunity to permit the reader to visualize the story, our purpose being to go so far toward this aim as to include in the synopsis a few passages of the story in finished continuity-form

Graphic Film Will Enlarge

To Release Other Pictures in Addition of Abramson Features

THE GRAPHIC FILM CORPORATION, INC., the New York Exchange, which has been the releasing agency of the production made by Ivan Abramson, announces an important change in its policy during the year 1921 and the future.

The Graphic Film Corporation exclusively handles the productions written and directed by Ivan Abramson, its president. The efforts of the company in 1921 will be marked by the fact that the Graphic Film Corporation in its New York exchanges will also handle other productions of merit. Several purchases have been concluded and arrangements have been made which will enable the exchange to issue a feature release every six weeks. Under no circumstances must this be considered a reduction in the efforts of Mr. Abramson regarding his own productions. It rather means a more intense and elaborate plan of effort on his part.

After carefully reviewing the situation, Ivan Abramson, director general of the company, has come to the conclusion that hereafter nothing but the very biggest kind of dramatic production shall occupy his time as author and director.

Herman Einhorn, head of the sales force of the Graphic Film Corporation, who is well known in the metropolitan district, announces the first release of the year, under his management, namely, Jack Lait's sensational drama, "Where Is Mary?" Jack Lait, now and for a number of years past, connected with the Chicago Tribune, is the author of the story which has been ably directed and splendidly acted. "Where Is Mary?" will be released January 15.

Staging Kineto Reviews

Hyman, of Brooklyn Strand, Wins Praise With Urban Productions

EDWARD HYMAN, of the Brooklyn Strand, who recently ran two Kineto Reviews in one program, thus describes the manner in which he presented "On Board the U. S. S. Idaho:"

"Running this picture at regular speed would only take us about ten minutes, but O Boy! what a hand it got! It offers a fine opportunity for military music and we keyed the picture to some snappy orchestrations, besides staging a prologue that introduced the picture in great style with a dandy song, "The Sea That Makes a Man a Man." This selection was sung by a basso soloist in the white duck summer costume of a sailor, in front of a drop representing the Brooklyn Bridge. It went over big. As the curtain closed on the Kineto picture everybody was ready for a smackin' Nor'eastern right over the decks of the Idaho battleship.

In staging "Dixieland," Mr. Hyman wanted to get away from the use of the "burnt cork" by the singers in the prologue. So he did not use any footlights and to throw the singers into a stronger silhouette, the cottonfield drop was lighted from behind.

One music critic remarked to Mr. Hyman that colored folks harmonized more beautifully than the whites; a remark which goes to show that when the staging is properly done no "minstrel black" is needed to get the desired effect.

Five singers gave the introduction to "Dixieland" with "Old Folks at Home," "Swing Along" and "Dixie."

Sherman Has Fine Casts

Well-Known Screen Personalities to Be Seen in Two Productions

NOTABLE casts will be seen in the first two of the Sherman Productions Corporation releases, "Man and Woman" and "Miss 139." Both pictures were said to have been produced with casts of eminent screen personalities and with the special object of giving to each character the fullest opportunity for development.

The charming Diana Allen who made her screen debut in the notable Maurice Tourneur picture, "Woman," plays the role of heroine in both productions.

Other notables in the cast include Gordon and Herbert Standing, members of the Standing family of actors. The former recently completed "The Foreigner," from the Ralph Connor story which First National is releasing, and the latter plays a prominent part in "The Cup of Fury," the Cosmopolitan production which Albert Capellani directed.

The other well known artists appearing in "Man and Woman" are Joseph King, John L. Shine, Edwin Sturgis, James Alling, Harry Millard and G. H. Carlyle.

In "Miss 139," the second of the Sherman releases, in addition to Miss Allen, the cast includes Marc McDermott, whose remarkable work in his triple role in "While New York Sleeps," the Fox Super-Special, won the widest comment as an example of screen acting almost in a class by itself. Eugene Strong, who played a prominent part in "The Undercurrent," the Guy Empey production which Select released, and Sally Crute, who played opposite Douglas Fairbanks in "Officer 666," and who is known to every old-time photoplay goer. Gordon H. Standing also appeared in this cast together with E. J. Radcliffe.

Charles A. Logue, who is author of both stories, directed "Man and Woman," while B. A. Rolfe, who as a producer has many screen successes to his credit, handled the megaphone for "Miss 139."

Wide Publicity for Star

Rubye de Remer, Arrow Star, Accorded Much Notice in Press

PROBABLY no other single individual in the motion picture industry has received as much publicity as Miss De Remer, the Arrow star, according to reports from that organization.

When Miss De Remer was selected by Paul Helleu, the celebrated artist, as being the most beautiful woman in America the story was syndicated through various newspaper syndicates in the United States with the result that stories about Miss De Remer and her pictures have appeared in over two hundred newspapers in the United States, in many instances on the front page. This publicity has been very widely spread and appeared in papers from coast to coast.

In addition to this publicity, the advertising department has succeeded in effecting tie-ups, with several national advertisers who will use Miss De Remer's photograph in their advertisements appearing in the magazines and newspapers in the United States during the coming year. This advertising will exceed more than one million dollars in volume, and as it will cover a period of a year will prove beneficial not only to the first run exhibitors but to the neighborhood houses as well. All this advertising will be in addition to the advertising being done by the Arrow for these pictures in the trade papers, which the Arrow feels makes them one of the strongest bets an exhibitor could possibly have.

Third Bill West Comedy

"He's in Again" Received by Joan Film from West Coast Studios

THE third two-reel Billy West comedy to be released by Joan to the state-right market has just arrived from the West studio on the Coast, and is entitled "He's in Again." It is stated by Joan that West's third comedy surpasses his first two—"Sweethearts" and "Service Stripes"—in the number of laughs per minute. "He's in Again" is a week behind schedule, which calls for the completion of one comedy per month. The reason it took five weeks to produce "He's in Again" is given by Billy West as the length of time to prepare the equipment and build the special sets necessary for the action of the comedy.

"He's in Again" is directed by Henry Kernan, who was engaged for an indefinite period by Joan to supervise the production of the remaining nine of the twelve two-reelers. Kernan was unavailable for the first two comedies, but has now been signed up by the West company. He has an enviable reputation as a comedy director, and is noted for an inventive mind.

The action of "He's in Again" deals with the perilous career of a tireless book agent, apparently endowed with nine lives. In his determination to make a sale he stops at nothing and nobody.

THE fourth Clara Kimball Young production released by Equity, "Midchannel," from the pen of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, has just finished a run of four consecutive weeks at Chicago's first-run theatre, the Ziegfeld. One dollar admission was charged.

In addition to playing at the Ziegfeld, "Midchannel" also ran two weeks at the Castle theatre, the first of which corresponded to the last week of the Ziegfeld run. The circuit of Lubliner and Trinz also booked the picture for all its theatres.

The total attendance at "Midchannel" during its Ziegfeld run of four weeks was approximately 48,000 each week, or 192,000 altogether, states Equity. The total at the Castle was 56,000 for the two weeks, the Castle being smaller than the Ziegfeld.

Bud Duncan Series May Set Reelcraft Record

The new series of single reel comedies being released to the trade under the brand name of Bud and His Buddies, featuring the well-known diminutive comedian, Bud Duncan, promises to establish a new record for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, states that company.

This series has been extensively advertised through the various trade papers for the past six months, and the numerous Reelcraft exchanges have made a selling drive on the pictures, with the net result of the biggest advance sale of contracts booked in the history of Reelcraft. Present indications point to a new high record for any single reel release in the number of theatres which the new series will be exhibited.

The new series will be released one a week from the distributing exchanges of Reelcraft.

Press Book is Prepared for "Cowboy Jazz"

S & E Enterprises has prepared an unusual campaign book for the benefit of the state right exchanges who are exploiting their two-reel Western production, "Cowboy Jazz."

The "Cowboy Jazz" Campaign Book contains a series of stories for newspaper use; several single and double column cuts, and a specially prepared campaign to assist the exhibitor in tying up this picture with the various Elk lodges in each territory, "Cowboy Jazz" having been made under the auspices of this fraternal order.

"Cowboy Jazz" press sheet also carries an endorsement of the picture from Lee Goldberg, of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Louisville, Kentucky, which organization is distributing this picture for Kentucky and Tennessee.

GREATEST SINGLE REEL IN FILMLAND

Wide Exploitation for "Hush"

Equity Busy Preparing Big Campaign on Young Production

THROUGH an arrangement reached this week between the Equity Pictures Corporation and the nineteen franchise-holders of the Clara Kimball Young productions, an exploitation campaign of big proportions will be inaugurated on this Young release. Plans are now being drawn up for the campaign, including advertising and publicity, on a big scale.

This campaign has been undertaken by the common consent of Equity and its franchise-holders, it is announced. The title of the production has already been declared to be one of the catchiest in motion picture history. The fundamental reason for embarking on a nation-wide drive on "Hush" is the suggestiveness of the title, Equity states. It was felt that a name like "Hush" should not be disregarded and treated in an ordinary fashion. Accordingly, a series of teaser-ads that promise to create a sensation and to arouse suspense to a high pitch have been conceived by the Equity staff. Nat Rothstein left this week for Detroit, where "Hush" will have its first run at the Madison theatre to test the advertising campaign.

In addition, "Hush" will be given extensive exploitation and publicity. Though there are some ideas suggested in the "Hush" campaign book, the Equity exploitation staff has prepared many more, planned to fit any town or city, and every grade of theatre. The exploitation is of a high-class calibre, and possesses nothing of the sensational and the bombastic, Equity states.

The publicity specially drawn up on "Hush" will play the most important role in this campaign. Special articles on dress, fashions, and other subjects of appeal to the motion-picture fan are being written and a new set of photographs of Miss Young in effective poses have been ordered for the purpose.

An artistic prologue, giving full directions as to music, cast and setting is now being outlined. A tie-up with department stores with a view to featuring the gowns displayed by Miss Young in "Hush" is also being effected. Various national chain stores whose product lends co-operation with the showing of "Hush" are being approached on a national tie-up.

The link between the Equity exploitation staff and the first-run exhibitors throughout the country who will show "Hush," will be the Equity staff. It is planned to send Equity exploitation men in every large city, to personally direct the campaign on "Hush" and to cooperate with the franchise-holder and the theatre. The box-office record of "Hush" thus far was beyond expectation, Equity states. In Boston, for example, "Hush" played to a large crowd last week at the Park theatre.

The extensive campaign on "Hush," it is estimated, will make that Young production the most successful of any thus far released.

The Benefit of Fewer Pictures

Exhibitors Will Turn to Independent, Says W. E. Shallenberger

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, in commenting on an article appearing in one of New York's morning newspapers in which great stress was laid on the fact that the national distributing and producing organizations were curtailing their production and planning to release a great many less pictures during 1921, stated that he did not consider this would be a serious matter for the exhibitors throughout the United States.

He stated that while this would undeniably lessen the number of features available through national releasing organizations it would not injure the exhibitors for the simple reason that the exhibitors would be able to secure just as good pictures and just as many of them on the independent market as he has been in the past from the program houses. Mr. Shallenberger further stated that this would be met and overcome by the independent producers and distributors.

In his opinion it is only logical development of the independent producers, distributors and exhibitors. It will undoubtedly mean the entrance of many producing companies who will release on the independent market and it will, beyond all question, mean a tremendous increase in the volume of business of the States Rights distributors throughout the United States. Exhibitors will turn more and more to the independent distributors and there is no question but what this increased volume of business is merited by the independents for years past they have battled courageously against heavy odds to make their way in the field, starting from the time when it was extremely difficult to get a good motion picture for independent distributors up to the present date when the pick of the finest motion pictures are offered on the independent plan, the States Rights buyer has never lost heart but has continued to consistently work for a condition which has now come about, that is, the absolute open market whereby an exhibitor can book such pictures as he feels are suitable to his house without letter hindrance, without being forced to take a number of mediocre pictures to go along with one good one, but simply choose his product and give his patrons the best of entertainment.

Mr. Shallenberger is most optimistic over the situation and states that as further evidence of Arrow's faith in the bright future of the independent producers and distributors they are adding additional representatives to their organization and spreading out in many ways rather than curtail. Last week saw the appointment of two new special representatives to the Arrow organization in the person of Mr. Thomas Curran and Mr. C. M. White, and every week sees increased activities in the Arrow organization.

Attractive Features in New "ScreenSnapshots'

Each issue of "Screen Snapshots" has met with such approval with the moving picture public that it has definitely taken its place with them as the movie magazine of the screen, states John Cohn of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, who is producing this single reel movie "fan" magazine in co-operation with Louis Lewyn on the Western Coast.

"Screen Snapshots" No. 17 is bigger and better than ever in its variety of subjects. Here we have one of the greatest comedians, Will Rogers, at work and also at play and it certain' is a subject that everybody will like," continued Mr. Cohn. "Everybody of importance in movieland attending the Los Angeles speedway motor races, and showing humorous and serious situation with Charlie Ray, Wallace Reid, Bryant Washburn, Douglas MacLean, Betty Compson, Tom Mix, Earl Williams and his wife, H. B. Warner, Frank Keenan and his wife, Herbert Rawlinson, Eileen Percy and Sessue Hawakawa is another big feature; how animal actors act during their leisure moments is not only instructive but has some very humorous bits intermingled with it; Director Jack White burning a country hotel to get a little laugh is one of his coming comedies; and a day spent with Bessie Love in her California home are other features.

Franklyn Farnum, who has appeared in a fifteen-episode serial, "Vanishing Trails," in several two-reel Westerns, and in a series of six five-reel Western productions, arrived in New York, bringing with him the first print of his latest picture, the "Hunger of the Blood."

This production will be followed by two more in which Mr. Farnum will be starred. While in New York he was the guest of Joseph M. Goldstein and Jack Weinberg of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, which is distributing all of the productions starring Mr. Farnum.

Personal appearances of Mr. Farnum at the main theatres in the different territories while on his way back to the Coast is under consideration. In speaking of conditions on the Coast, Mr. Farnum said that while production is rather quiet at present, he expected that the next sixty days will see a marked change in the condition for the better.

Nick Carters Released

The first release of the Nick Carter series entitled "A Cry at Midnight," starring Tom Carrigan as Nick Carter, has been released throughout the New England territory by the Eastern States Film Company, announces Broadwell Productions, producers of the series. First showings were made at Worcester, Mass., to capacity houses and caused a sensation. The Worcester exhibitor booked the series solid and closed for two weeks' run on the first release.

The Apollo Trading Corporation of New York City controls the foreign rights for the entire world, releasing immediately in British Isles and Belgium, it is announced.

Equity Production in First Run Houses

Word has just arrived at headquarters from the South and Southwest, Equity announces, that "Keep to the Right" to date has been booked in sixteen first-run houses of Georgia, nine of Alabama, twenty-one of North Carolina, eighteen of South Carolina, seven of Florida and five of Mississippi, through the Salley Film Co. headed by Frank Salley, who bought the rights of distribution of this Taliaferro feature for those states. In addition, J. E. Pearce, of Pearce Films of New Orleans, reports that he has secured sixteen first-run openings in Louisiana and thirteen in Kentucky.

Levey Showing Jan. 12

The Harry Levey Service Corporation announces the premiere showing of their educational picture, "The Porcelain Lamp," at the Strand theatre, Broadway and Forty-seventh street, New York City, on Wednesday, January 12, at 10 a. m. The showing is private, invitations being issued to prominent men in the automobile and travel industries as well as to city officials, the Secretary of State and prominent exhibitors.

"The Son of Tarzan" Breaking Records

"The Son of Tarzan," the jungle serial which has been distributed in the states right market by David P. Howells, has broken house records in many theatres, announced the distributors.

The fact that is pleasing exhibitors in the few territories in which it has been released, it is announced, is that the attendance for the second and third episode is far greater than that for the first.

This is said to be quite unusual for a serial, owing to the fact that extraordinary exploitation is used to bring the crowd in for the opening and the usual practice is that there is a distinct falling off in attendance for the succeeding episode.

Changes Reported Among Albany Managers

Uly S. Hill, who succeeded Ed. Hart as manager of Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany, N. Y., over four years ago, has resigned to become manager of Albany's newest motion picture theatre, the Mark Strand. Joseph Wallace, manager of Proctor's Grand and Leland theatres, has been appointed general manager of the Proctor theatres in Albany. His brother, John J. Wallace, has been appointed resident manager of the Harmanus Bleecker Hall.

Film Version to Break 20 Years Stage Record

That the film version of the old stage success, "The Parish Priest," will break the record of the show in one short season is the contention of Herman J. Garfield, in spite of the fact that the drama has twenty years of performances to its credit and is still playing.

Mr. Garfield states that the film version of "The Parish Priest," with a hundred prints in use, can play in more theatres in three months than the stage version could take care of in twenty years.

The Following Sales Are Reported in the Independent Market

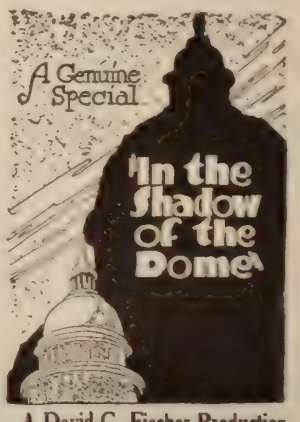
"The Fighting Kentuckians" to Ludwig Film Co., of Minneapolis.

ALLAN DWAN, member of Associated Producers, is busy tying up the ends of 1920, and gathering up the reins of 1921, for he is finishing the picture and starting another. The last scenes of "The Perfect Crime," which he started only a few weeks ago, are being "shot" and the earlier scenes in the cutting room, while the busy director-producer is preparing the script for a new picture which he will start to work upon immediately.

"The Luck of the Irish" and "The Forbidden Thing" were two of the most successful photographers of the past season and others which showed the big things of which Dwan is capable were "The Scoffer" and "In the Heart of a Fool."

Kelley Soon to Start on Selling Trip

In response to the demands from state rights buyers all over the country who are interested in the first Sunrise Pictures Corporation release, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, General Manager Winfield F. Kelley will begin a swing around the country during the week and expects to be away for at least five weeks. Mr. Kelley had originally planned this trip last week, but business pressure in the home office forced him to cancel his trip.



Mr. Kelley will take several prints of the picture with him and will probably close on several of the territories where deals have been pending for the last few weeks.

"Movie Chats" Are Popular in England

The distributing agency which handles Charles Urban's Movie Chats in Great Britain, Butcher's Film Service, Ltd., with headquarters in London, has recently forwarded to Mr. Urban some correspondence which has come to them from exhibitors in their territories. One of these letters reads: "I wish to congratulate you on securing the most entertaining pictures ever shown. Patrons say they could sit and watch them all night, and so could, yours faithfully,

F. B. Day.

That letter is only one of many.

A David G. Fischer Production

THE W. W. Hodkinson organization announces that the release date of "The Breaking Point" has been advanced to February 6. It is also announced that the release of "Partners of the Tide" has been changed to February 20.

Bessie Barriscale is starred in "The Breaking Point." Her support includes Pat O'Malley, Ethel Gray Terry, Wilfred Lucas, Walter McGrail and Eugenia Besserre. The picture, which was adapted to the screen by H. H. Van Loan from a story by Mary Lerner, is described to be a gripping story of mother love and wifely sacrifice.

"Partners of the Tide" is the second Irvin V. Willat independent production. It is a picturization of Joseph C. Lincoln's sea story.

"Behold the Man" on Broadway

"BEHOLD THE MAN," an adaptation of Pathe's feature, "The Life of Our Saviour," will have a Broadway run. This information is contained in an announcement from Pathe, stating that the production will open at the Apollo theatre on West Forty-second street, on January 9, and that the presentation will be repeated for a series of Sundays.

Elaborate arrangements for presenting "Behold the Man," in the settings its story demands, have been made, and according to the announcement an unusual musical accompaniment will be a feature of the presentation. This setting will include an augmented symphony orchestra and renowned vocalists, who will render a musical program of carefully selected numbers chosen to synchronize with the production, states Pathe.

Among the soloists are Harriet Lark, colorature sorano, and Tlda Arlando Boyer, baritone. A chorus has been specially chosen from the New York Opera and Oratorio Society, many of whom are soloists themselves. Among the song numbers to be rendered will be "The Holy City," the Prayer Scene from "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Oh, Holy ..ight," the "Hallelujah" chorus and other selections from "The Messiah" oratorio. George Martens, who was selected to interpret the incidental music which was chosen from the great masters, will also conduct the orchestra.

"Behold the Man!" in the new form is a vast improvement over the original production of "The Life of Our Saviour." To begin with, it is supplemented now with a modern episode showing a mother telling her customary bed-time story from the Bible to her little son and daughter. This lends a plausible reason for the appearance of the main story "Behold the Man!" It not only adds a great degree of human interest to the chief theme but also builds it up much stronger than it was originally. By this means the picture in its entirety becomes an entertainment of rare value with an appeal to any spectator, whether familiar with the Bible or not. At the same time it loses none of the reverential beauty and sentiment, says the Pathe statement.

Assistant-Director Is Cast as "Tramp"

Arthur Maude, co-adapter to the screen of "A Message from Mars," the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production starring Bert Lytell, recently stepped out of his role as assistant to Maxwell Karger, who is personally directing the picture, to play the part of the tramp in a scene opposite Bert Lytell.

Mr. Maude donned the costume of a tramp and appeared with Mr. Lytell in a poignant scene portraying the gradual change that takes place in the heart of the selfish young scientist, Horace Parker.

Al St. John in a Melodrama Burlesque

The latest Sunshine Comedy released by William Fox is "The Slicker," with Al St. John, the limber comedian. In this latest comedy Al St. John has hit upon a theme that certainly looks like a big winner. Nearly all theatre-goers like to see a genuine melodrama occasionally—and they also enjoy a burleque of the melodrama. That is what "The Slicker" is—the old-time sere and yellow drama treated in a comedy vein.

Lesser Corrects Error

Irving Lesser, general manager for the Western Pictures Exploitation Company in Los Angeles, and who is now in New York, desires to correct a statement that appeared in the trade papers which announced that "The Toreador," the Romayne super film company's production, was distributed through California, Nevada, and Arizona by the All Star Features Distributors.

The above statement, which appeared in both Lesser advertisements and general reading notices is an error, as "The Toreador" is distributed in the above mentioned territory by the Clune Film exchange of Los Angeles and who have had charge of distribution for same for many months.

Big First Runs for "The Devil"

"THE DEVIL," a screen version of the play that was the sensation of two continents, in which the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will bring George Arliss to the screen, will be exhibited in virtually all the theatres controlled by the interests directing the Strand, New York. It is in the latter house that the world premiere of "The Devil" has been slated for January 16.

Moe Mark, head of the Strand organization, last week booked the Associated Exhibitors special, in addition to the Strand, New York, and the Strand, Brooklyn, for the following houses: The Strand, Worcester, Mass.; Mark Strand, Lynn, Mass.; Rialto, Newark, N. J.; Strand, Syracuse, and Mark Strand, Albany.

Preparations for the premiere at the New York Strand continue apace. Probably no other picture that has ever graced the Strand screen ever received the exploitation that will support "The Devil" presentation, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

The advertising campaign will be inaugurated in the newspapers a week before the opening on Sunday, January 16. New York also will be posted with the most attractive twenty-four sheet Pathe has ever issued, it is stated.

An innovation in motion picture exploitation will be inaugurated in a conception of an electric light flashing sign box, alternating in colors, about three feet long and two feet high. These boxes can be placed in lobbies, in store windows, where they make wonderfully attractive displays and can be attached to any form of electric current.

The sign on "The Devil" shows the Satanic figure of George Arliss, which at the first flash is displayed in red, then in green, and then in yellow. Far different than any sign of a similar nature ever attempted, these on "The Devil" gain attention because the kaleidoscopic color changes give life to the figure of Mr. Arliss and consequently command the eye of the passerby.

IT IS announced that the Sammy Burns Comedies, Inc., will make twelve new two-reel comedies in the near future, all of which will feature Sammy Burns. They are expected to be started on January 15, under the direction of B. Bech. Releasing plans will be announced later.

Special Stunt for Premier

Sings on Transcontinental Phone as "So Long Letty" Opens in West

WHEN the Western premiere of "So Long Letty," Robertson-Cole release, took place at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, Earl Carroll, the composer of the musical score of the musical comedy, "So Long Letty" in New York, sang over a four thousand mile telephone connection the verse and chorus of the famous song of "So Long Letty." At the Los Angeles end of the line was placed a voice magnifier which amplified the tones brought by the wire from New York City four thousand miles to the Los Angeles theatre. There the crowd, which was assembled for the premiere of the Robertson-Cole comedy-drama, heard Mr. Carroll's voice.

"So Long Letty" was produced in the West by Mr. Morosco from a one-act sketch first put on by Elmer Harris. It attained tremendous popularity on the Pacific Coast and was then sent to New York where it began another triumph. It was on the stage altogether several years. The initial popularity won by "So Long Letty" on the Pacific Coast has been taken advantage of by the Robertson-Cole branches in the West, for there "So Long Letty" has been going enormously, according to a statement from the Robertson-Cole home office.

At the Rivoli theatre in Portland, Oregon, "So Long Letty" was a decided success. It played the Strand theatre, in San Francisco to a very large business. In the South also it has been going very well.

Santschi Series in Demand

First of Western Series Has Been Set for Release for January 23rd

A CRYING need for Western dramas of the type Tom Santschi has produced for Cyrus J. Williams, and the first of which Pathe will release on January 23, is apparent from the tremendous bookings already recorded on this series, declares a statement from Pathe's home office in New York.

"Beyond the Trail," a production with a strong human appeal, and some of the most beautiful backgrounds ever seen upon a screen, inaugurates the Santschi series, announces the Pathe statement. This feature is emblematic of the entire Santschi series.

It was Arthur S. Kane who arranged with Pathe for the distribution of the Santschi productions. At the time negotiations were in progress, Mr. Kane vowed the pictures were the finest of the Western type he had ever seen. Mr. Kane's judgment was quickly verified when "Beyond the Trail" was screened for the first time in the Pathe projection room. The personal popularity of Tom Santschi undoubtedly has led a considerable number of exhibitors to book his Pathe features. Always associated with the great outdoors, because of his powerful build, his breezy manner and his appealing countenance, Santschi has appeared in some of the screen's foremost offerings.

Now that he has become a star in his own right, he will receive the tremendous exploitation that he has won by his clean-cut performances in other productions, it is stated.

While Santschi has been accorded the dominant role in each of the Pathe series, he is supported by a cast of competent players. As a consequence, each picture is said to be an evenly balanced product, surrounded by atmosphere that will have powerful appeal for audiences

Perret Picture a Success

"The Empire of Diamonds" Meeting With Success, Reports State

"THE EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS," the Leonce Perret production which Pathe is releasing is meeting with marked success throughout the country. This picture makes the twentieth screen success which the greatest of French directors has made since entering the motion picture field.

The picture won praise from the reviewers of the trade papers when shown prior to release and its success was then predicted. Full credit for the excellence of the production was given to the direction of M. Perret, and his selection of the cast.

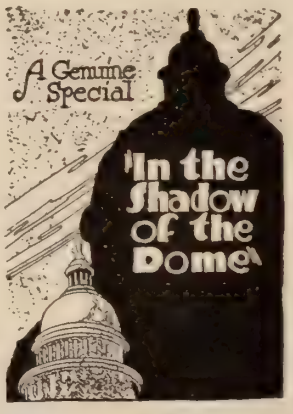
It has the distinction, it is claimed, of being the first picture to be produced abroad with an all-star American and French cast, which included such players as Robert Elliott, who will be remembered for his splendid work in the Fox super production, "Checkers," and who appeared in another Perret production entitled, "Unknown Love," Henry G. Sell, who also appeared in one other Perret production, "Twin Pawn," Leon Mathot, one of the best known French leading men who was featured in the French screen version of "The Count of Monte Christo."

Others in the cast who contributed to its great success are Lucy Fox, Jacques Volnys, Laurent Morals, M. Mailly and Ruth Thorpe.

The exteriors of "The Empire of Diamonds" were all made at their original locales and many points of interest in London, Le Havre, Paris, Nice and Monte Carlo are included.

Another big special production, "A Race for Millions," directed by M. Perret, will be ready for release in the near future.

Ray's Latest Set for Feb. 7



First National Announces Release Date of the "Old Swimmin' Hole"

"IT'S as big a thing in celluloid as Riley's poem is in literature." This is the valuation placed upon Charles Ray's picturization of the Hoosier poet's classic, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," by Charles L. Edson, well known versified and newspaper paragrapher.

Mr. Edson was one of a party that had a pre-view this week of this fourth indepndently-produced picture of Mr. Ray's, in which the star is presented by Arthur S. Kane for First National release. The release has been set for February 7.

Ray is "just boy" in "The Old Swimmin' Hole," a natural, red-blooded, barefoot American farm kid, the type in which a host of his admirers likes him best. One respect in which the picture is unique is the absence of any connected story, just as in the Riley poem itself. It shows merely a procession of days, not necessarily in sequence, in a normal country boy's life. Ezra (Ray) fishes and swims, runs thorns in his feet, practices his prowess with a slung-shot to the discomfiture of his own hand rather than of the bird at which he aims; trades his tops and string for a candy heart, inscribed "I Love You," which he bestows upon the fair object of his heart's desire; steals apples from a temptingly convenient orchard, barely eluding the watchful farmer, and, unable to hold in permanent confinement the white mouse which he takes to school concealed beneath his shirt, is victim of a severe chastisement in which the teacher's ruler is the instrument of torture.

The verdict of the audience at the pre-view was that Joseph de Grasse had done masterly work in the direction, George Rizard in the photography, and Bernard McConville in the adaptation of the poem for use on the screen.

"Devil's Angel" Booked Big in Philadelphia

What is considered an unusual series of bookings was consummated by Jay Emanuel of the Royal Pictures, Inc., of Philadelphia, on "The Devil's Angel," starring Helen Gardner, which the Royal Company purchased for Philadelphia territory from the Clark-Cornelius Corporation who is distributing this subject on the state right market.

Mr. Emanuel succeed in booking for theatres during the first week he had the picture for a total rental of $2,500, announces the distributor. In view of the fact that this does not include as a first run one of the big Philadelphia theatres, it is believed that this is an unusual record for any picture. The first run of this production in the Philadelphia territory was played in a town of 20,000 population.

Mr. Rollo, secretary of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation states that the picture has sold more rapidly than any subject he has ever handled on the states right market.

Productions

Enumerated and described on the following pages

The Big O

Never so exquisitely beautiful—
Never so gorgeously gowned—
Never so romantically charming—

Clara Kimball Young Productions

THE first of the Big Five Clara Kimball Young Productions to be presented during 1921 is "HUSH" already released and setting a new standard in finer pictures for the New Year. It is another "hit" by Sada Cowan, whom you remember as author of "Why Change Your Wife."

The second of the Big Five Clara Kimball Young Productions will be "STRAIGHT FROM PARIS" another Sada Cowan story, which as the title suggests will be clever in the extreme, presenting Miss Young as a fascinating milliner from New York.

The third production will be "CHARGE IT" an absorbing tale of what happens to a woman who forgets the value of money.

The fourth production has for its working title—"TRY AND GET IT," a photodrama that will sparkle with those qualities that guarantee S. R. O. crowds.

The fifth production has for its working title—FASCINATING LUCILLE FROM MANHATTAN," a picturization of the high lights of N.Y.'s millionaire swells.

We advise exhibitors in every part of the country to sign up for these five big pictures for they will present Clara Kimball Young at the very zenith of her career.

Two Metro Companies to Go to North

Two Metro producing companies—one starring May Allison, the other Alice Lake—will venture into the regions of deep snow and icebergs within a short time for the shooting of big scenes for forthcoming productions.

"Big Game," Miss Allison's picture, requires a setting in the Canadian woods. Practically all of the supporting company participating in the Allison photoplay, including the technical staff and scenario writers, will take the trip to the snow country.

"The Woman Who Went Away," a thrilling tale of the Arctic ice fields, from the pen of John Fleming Wilson, will take Miss Lake and her company much farther North as icebergs, blizzards and at least one ocean wreck are required in the telling of it.

ON March 5, "While New York Sleeps," the Fox Film Corporation's big episodic spectacle of metropolitan life, will complete the sixth month of its run since release, and according to information from the Fox offices the tremendous success that greeted the drama just after its first showing has not abated; rather, it is declared to be still gaining in popular favor as it nears its half-year mark.

The Fox offices are predicting a full year's showing of the production. This is based on the fact that the demand has not begun to be filled, and exhibitors in remote sections of the country who have expressed a desire to play the attraction continue to write in for bookings, it is stated.

Endorse Accuracy of Sets

Mid-Victorian Settings Faithfully Reproduced, Say British Authors

"JUST like thousands of homes I've seen in the North of England," said W. Somerset Maugham.

"A perfect reproduction of the architecture and interior decoration of England in the Mid-Victorian period," agreed Edward Knoblock.

In such manner did the two British dramatists set the seal of their approval on the English settings of "Sacred and Profane Love," the Arnold Bennett novel and stage play in which Elsie Ferguson appeared on Broadway and which is now being translated into film at Los Angeles by Paramount under the direction of William D. Taylor. Miss Ferguson is starring.

"Every feature of the home of Carlotta and her aunt are absolute perfection," said Mr. Maugham, who is in Hollywood on a trip around the world. "Where the play could only show part of the interior—here we have the garden with its brick walls, green gate and knocker, hollyhocks, asters, forget-me-nots, etc., all in prim, carefully tended plots. In the rooms there are the quaint china slippers, pewter birds and knick-knacks of endless variety—all displayed on the red and black plush of the period."

"It's England in the heyday of its old-fashioned precise, delightful rusticity," chimed in Mr. Knoblock. "Every person of English birth will appreciate the great pains which have evidently been lavished to make this production absolutely true to type."

Mr. Maugham's praise is even more significant, being absolutely unprejudiced. The latter author came to the Paramount studio merely as a sightseer, being on his way around the world.

"In fact," he said, "I have never before seen a motion picture in the making and the wonderful completeness of the work is amazing to me."

Busy Outlook for Universal

Schedule for Coming Months Will Keep Units Constantly at Work

AS a result of President Carl Laemmle's recent visit to Universal City activities at the vast studios have taken on more vigorous life and production is not only at a high pitch now, but promises to continue at capacity for months to come, it recently was announced by Universal.

Priscilla Dean, who recently finished "Outside the Law," produced by Tod Browning, has begun on "False Colors," an adaptation by Lucien Hubbard and Doris Schroeder of a story by Edwina Levin. Stuart Paton is directing the production.

As soon as Harry Carey finishes his current feature, "If Only Jim," based on Philip V. Mighel's story, "Bruvver Jim's Baby," he will begin on "Everybody for Himself." It was written especially for the western star by George C. Hull. Jack Ford returns to Universal to produce this photoplay.

Frank Mayo, who is now engaged in filming "Colorado," adapted from the famous stage play by Augustus Thomas, will next appear in an original story of the snow country, "Blood Brother to the Pines," by J. G. Hawks.

Douglas Doty has written a story especially for Carmel Myers. It is called "The Dangerous Moment" and will be played by her as soon as she returns to the coast from a short vacation. When Edith Roberts has finished her present photoplay, "The Fire Cat," produced by Norman Dawn, she will appear in "Three at the Table," adapted from a magazine story by Bennett Cohen.

For the use of Gladys Walton, Universal has secured John Colton's fascinating comedy drama, "The Bobbed Squab." "The Girl and the Goose," a story by Emma Bell Clifton, has been secured as a vehicle for Eva Novak after she has finished her current feature, "Plain Folks," being produced by Leo McCarey.

Special 24 Sheet for Kerrigan Picture

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared for the exhibitors in conjunction with "The Coast of Opportunity" a twenty-four-sheet of special interest and drawing power.

What One Author Owes Nick Carter Tales

Arthur B. Reeves, writer of the Craig Kennedy stories, gives to the Carter tales credit for some of his earliest efforts in detective fiction. He wrote Arthur Tarshis, Pioneer's director of publicity and advertising, as follows:

"Do you know that all the great present day American writers of detective and mystery stories owe a great debt to Nick Carter? Mary Roberts Rinehart has been quoted as confessing that she derived her first inspiration from reading Nick Carter stories. I have heard scores of other writers make the same generous appreciation of the debt they owe our old friend Nicholas."

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, President of the Norma Talmadge Film Company, has obtained the services of Herbert Brenon to direct Norma in "The Passion Flower," and other productions, and to act in a supervisory capacity for future Norma Talmadge Productions.

"In extending my New Year's greetings to exhibitors and the public, it gives me exceptional satisfaction," says Mr. Schenck, "to make this announcement of Mr. Brenon's affiliation with me. In no other way could I give a better assurance of my earnestness in promising bigger and better productions for 1921, than ever before."

'Double Adventure" to Head Serial List

Accorded the honor of first place on Pathe's serial program for 1921, "Double Adventure," the stunt thriller starring Charles Hutchison, continues to take a leading place among the most active subjects booking at Pathe branches; and as the date of release, January 23, draws near increasing demand is reported to prevail among exhibitors long identified as serial showmen and those who formerly did not include the episode plays in their billings, declares a statement from the Pathe headquarters.

The scenario and editing department of Pathe has completed the titles for the episodes and the list of fifteen chapter titles is as follows: Episode One, "On the Trail of Fate;" Two, "The Harbor Bandits;" Three, "Hearts of Stone;" Four, "The Gun Runners;" Five, "The Rebel's Nest;" Six, "Trouble Trail;" Seven, "War in the Oil Fields;" Eight, "The Grill of Hate;" Nine, "The Black Whirlpool;" Ten, "The Devil's Bargain;" Eleven, "The Danger Ledge;" Twelve, "Hazzard Heights;" Thirteen, "By Air and Sea;" Fourteen, "The House in the Canyon;" Fifteen, "The Wages of Crime."

Views of French Loan Drive in Fox News

The first pictures to reach America showing the spectacular advertising campaign used by the French government and banks to put over France's Sixth National Loan are in Fox News, Volume 2, No. 25, the current issue. The French people adopted American advertising methods, and even improved on these in some directions.

Huge posters, designed by the country's most famous artists, met the eye on every street. Pretty girls, dressed in every sort of costume from crinoline to Hula Hula skirt, from poke bonnet to harem veil, paraded the boulevards. Fox News gives a comprehensive picture of the whole campaign, providing a feature of interest to all classes of theatre-goers.

Rothacker Dinner a Success

Optimism for Future Reflected in Speech of Watterson Rothacker

THE annual New Year's dinner of the Rothacker forces in Chicago is reported to have been a decided success. Old General Optimism was the guest of honor. The dinner, which was held at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, was attended by Chicago members of the Industrial Division and by the Chicago laboratory executives and their assistants. F. G. Conklin, manager of the Eastern Industrial Division, came from New York to be present.

Speeches being barred, there was no toastmaster but Watterson R. Rothacker volunteered to act as timekeeper to assure that when any one arose to say a few words he made it short and snappy to the limit of three minutes.

Mr. Rothacker set a good example by making his own talk short.

"Again we get together," said the pioneer in the practical pictures field, "and again we see new faces around the table. To me the most gratifying part of the business is the increase of my fellow workers and the pleasure of working side by side with my business associates. It was not so many years ago that only two plates would have been set at an annual dinner of the Rothacker organization.

"A number of us will be going to Los Angeles in a few weeks to attend the formal opening of our Coast laboratory. London will furnish the site for our third laboratory and the fourth plant in New York is no myth.

"The Chicago laboratory in 1920 set a real pace for future laboratories to keep up with. The Chicago plant turned out the largest footage in its history, while the quality of 1920 prints was such as to win the praise of our customers. Still we are not satisfied and intend in 1921 to raise the quality to an even higher plane. Our 1920 quality and service was made possible only by the loyalty and earnestness of my associates.

"At the dinner a year ago, we set a 1920 goal for the Industrial Division to strive for. That goal was actually exceeded and Industrial Division workers who can make such a record as that need have no fear of future conditions."

Special Pathe Review Issue

Diversity of Interesting Topics in Second Anniversary Number

THE PATHE NEWS recently celebrated its tenth anniversary as the foremost screen news medium and now the Pathe Review No. 86, released January 16, celebrates its second birthday as one of the foremost screen magazines, presenting scenic, educational, scientific, and industrial offerings. This anniversary number endeavors to give as widely diversified features as can be secured, presenting good entertainment of high box office value.

"Making Port Through the Ice Fields" is a vivid offering from Gothenburg, Sweden, showing how the great ocean liners make port through the ice fields. In the biting, terrible cold of the Far North winter a ship could make little headway without the powerful ice cutters, which make a path for the ship. The Pathe cameraman risked the experience of an icy bath and secured some really remarkable "shots" and "closeups" of these ice cutters at work.

An aquatic drama, "The Thug of the Under-Water World," is a Pathe color presentation showing the Dytiscus, the ferocious tiger of still pools, in battle array. "Two Problems for Science" shows the effect of vibration on sensitive plants, such as Ernest F. F. Chladni discovered in his experiments in 1787. "Humpty-Dumpty Together Again" is a humorous presentation augmented by clever photography showing how scrambled eggs can be "unscrambled" and restored to their shells.

Thrilling Scenes Mark "The Phantom Foe"

"Explanations are not always such thrilling affairs as the one occupying the greater portion of "Confession," the fourteenth chapter of Pathe's serial, "The Phantom Foe," in which Juanita Hansen stars with Warner Oland. The story here concerns itself with an exposition of the motives for the attacks upon the Dale family by Ezra Sealkirk.

The scenes, while expository almost entirely, have enough in the way of action to give them place beside the best offerings from the serial producers, it is declared by Pathe officials. Great prominence is won by Harry Semels, whose acting makes Ezra Sealkirk a realistically live and vital element of melodrama, it is stated.

William Russell Seen in a Dual Role

Advices from Fox headquarters state that William Russell's newest starring vehicle, "The Cheater Reformed," is receiving plenty of booking through the Fox exchanges. In "The Cheater Reformed," which was written by Jules G. Furthman and directed by Scott Dunlap, Russell enacts a dual role—twins, one of whom is rector of a fashionable church, and the other a professional crook. When the rector is killed in a railway accident, and the evil brother dons the clerical garb and assumes his brother's churchly office, some of the strangest and most unusual drama ever filmed is developed, states William Fox.

Clyde Cook Comedy Is Due January 9th

Fox Film Corporation announces that "All Wrong," a new Clyde Cook special comedy, is to be released January 9th. Cook appears as a discharged soldier who is endeavoring to run down a gang of "bootleggers" doing business on the Mexican border.

New Type of Chapter Play Is Promised

Forecasting the readjustment of production during 1921, William Duncan is making a chapter play that will fulfill the new demands of the public. "Fighting Fate," his new Vitagraph production, which will be released early in the new year, is said to be an entirely new form of screen entertainment. The production plan of the five and seven-reel features has been followed through each two-reel episode. Perfectly matched scenes, well worked out expensive sets, and thrills only where they logically belong as part of the story will be seen in the new play. The thrills do not necessarily close a chapter.

The chapter play that is really a continued story, the same as carried by the best magazines in fiction form, is always welcome, Mr. Duncan believes, and will grow in popularity the same as they have in the periodicals.

Edith Johnson, leading woman for Mr. Duncan in many plays, has been advanced to co-star with him in the forthcoming chapter play, "Fighting Fate," which is nearing completion at the Vitagraph studios.

Exhibitors Sign Up 100% Hodkins on Contracts

Scammon, a little mining town just outside of Pittsburgh, has the same confidence in Hodkinson that Jensen has, for a "100% Hodkinson" contract has just been closed there also.

Representatives report a most favorable reception of the "100% Hodkinson" plan, which permits the exhibitor to sign up for all Hodkinson releases in advance at a price based on the grade of the production.

"Loot of the Night" to Star Earle Williams

"Loot of the Night," by Frederick J. Jackson, has been purchased by Vitagraph as the next picture play for Earle Williams. It appeared in a popular magazine and the screen continuity was prepared by the author who wrote Mr. Williams' last story, "Diamonds Adrift," now awaiting release. The story is another action melodrama with many light comedy situations. Production will be started on "Loot of the Night" within a fortnight.

A David G. Fisher Production

"Outside the Law" Sent East

MR. CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that the first prints of "Outside the Law," the big new Tod Browning production starring Priscilla Dean, supported by Lon Chaney and a strong cast, have been received in Universal's New York office and soon will be shown on Broadway.

A pre-release showing of the film was arranged last week in the Superba theatre, Los Angeles, where the film took the town by storm, states Universal, breaking all records at that theatre, and causing more talk than any film shown in Los Angeles in many months, according to the Universal announcement.

It is Miss Dean's second big picture under the Universal banner and is said to be the most realistic underworld picture ever filmed. Lon Chaney's work in "Outside the Law" is far better than the best of his previous work, critics report, who have seen the picture.

The picture is described to be a gripping story of San Francisco's gangster world, with its feuds and its vengeances, its fears and its philosophies. It was written by Tod Browning himself, and the principal roles were written expresly for Priscilla Dean, Lon Chaney and the other players who appear in the picture.

It is in the strong climaxes of the action and in the strenuous realism of the fight scenes that Browning is said to have scored heavily with his new production. In one of these fights, an entire set was demolished, it is stated, and an actual film time of two weeks taken to get the desired "shots." On the screen, this fight lasts only several minutes. Its high light is a personal combat between Chaney and Wheeler Oakman which is reported to be more violent and thrilling than the combat between Oakman and Wallace Beery in "The Virgin of Stamboul," Tod Browning's former Universal-Jewel picture, starring Priscilla Dean.

Universal is planning a unique method of presenting this picture to Broadway. In the meanwhile, Universal is projecting a country-wide exploitation campaign, to precede the release of "Outside the Law" in the various key cities.

Harry Reichenbach and Joseph Mayer, well known exploitation experts, are busy developing ways to aid the exhibitor in packing his doors with the big Dean feature, says the Universal statement. Universal also announces the early appearance of one of the most pretentious campaign and press books ever issued for a Universal picture, and which will be devoted entirely to "Outside the Law." Much extra poster, window card and other material has been made up for this picture.

Among the players who take prominent parts with Miss Dean in this feature are E. A. Warren, Ralph Lewis, Melbourne MacDowell, Wilton Taylor, and a new child actor, little Stanley Goethals. The picture is in eight reels and was scenarized by Lucien Hubbard from Browning's story.

Feminine Appeal in Fox Film

Fashion Revue Expected to Prove Hit with Women

STATISTICS show that 70 per cent. of the motion picture patronage of the country is composed of women. Wise exhibitors recognize this and are always on the lookout for pictures having a distinctly feminine appeal, or those that are treated from an angle in which the woman interest is paramount. They figure that if a picture will entertain and arouse the interest of the mothers, sisters and sweethearts and draw them to the theatre, the husbands, brothers and suitors can be depended upon to follow, declares William Fox.

Outside of the home ties, most women's chief interest undoubtedly lies in dress. Therefore, a picture in which clothes is the theme with the home as a background cannot fail to reach out and attract the feminine theatre-goers. Such a picture is "Blind Wives," a Fox Film Corporation special production based on "My Lady's Dress," a play by Edward Knoblock, which scored a big success when it was produced on the New York speaking stage several season's ago.

The premiere of this newest Fox special was given at a trade and invitation showing on December 30 in New York City before an audience that completely filled the Broadhurst theatre. There were managers from New York City and exhibitors from out of town present, and they had an opportunity to judge exactly what appeal "Blind Wives" contained for their feminine patrons, as more than half of the audience was composed of women.

That the picture particularly pleased this portion of the audience was apparent by the applause that greeted the episodes. Early scenes are laid in a fashionable modiste's and here a fashion show is staged in which the models from Lucile's (Lady Duff Gordon), the famous international creator of women's dress, participated. The mannekins were attired in beautiful and luxurious gowns made especially for this production. The richness of the display, which fits naturally into the action of the story, caused a gasp, for it proved about the most elaborate revue of up-to-the minute gowns ever screened.

It was apparent to exhibitors present that Fox had reached out and caught the interest of the women at the very start, laying a foundation for word-of-mouth advertising that is to be reckoned with when box-office results are taken into consideration.

Following the fashion revue, the action of the drama quickened and the women were taken into corners of the world where the various elements that enter into the creation of "my lady's dress" are made or assembled. The story back of the artificial flowers proved a heart-reaching drama in itself; then the tragedy of the fur gatherer's home; the sacrifice of the silk maker, and the story of the mannekin, all were directed at women in particular—and they did not fail to respond to the dramatic appeal.

It was evidently the general opinion after the showing that "Blind Wives" is another strong box-office attraction, especially from the woman's angle, declares the Fox statement.

Accidents Attend the Filming of Serial

Joseph Rickson, playing the heavy in Vitagraph's "The Purple Riders," recently broke a leg and otherwise severely injured himself by falling fifty feet down the side of a cliff after a leap of several feet for a scene. He is now in a Los Angeles hospital. He is not the first of the company to meet with an accident. Joe Ryan, the star and director in this western serial, was hurt in a leap from a tree to the back of a running horse, and Elinor Field, the leading woman, was severely burned in a fire scene.

"The Sage Hen" Due Jan. 23

Gladys Brockwell Star of Harry Solter's Drama of Mother Love

HEADING the cast chosen by Edgar Lewis for his production of "The Sage Hen," which Pathe will release January 23rd Gladys Brockwell will make her first screen appearance in a character role as the central figure in Harry Solter's drama of mother love.

"The Sage Hen" is a drama laid in Arizona in the eighties and deals with the struggle of a woman against the shadows of a stormy past. The title of Sage Hen is given her by the ruling society of a small mining town. Her persistent stand against the curiosity-seeking men and women of the town arouses their ire, and, moved to violence against her, they accept an insignificant incident as grounds for driving her into the desert with her child.

On the way to the town on the other side of the great stretch of parched sand the woman is forced to give her child its one chance for escape from marauding Indians by strapping it to the back of a pet horse and starting the animal back toward the town. Her escape from the savages and the sacrifices she makes in her later life to bring happiness to her son, go to make up a play of moving sentiment which rests on the ever effective element of mother love.

The story is typically an Edgar Lewis play. Its characters are the hardy race engendered by the rough life and hardships of the old frontiers of this country. His setting is the mountainous and desert country that has served as the background for some of his greatest photodramas. In the cast with Miss Brockwell the following will appear: Wallace MacDonald, Lillian Rich, Alfred Allen, Helen Case, James Mason, Arthur Morrison and Richard Headrick.

Pearl White in Good Role

Picturesque Setting and Wealth of Action in "Mountain Women"

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces the forthcoming release of Pearl White in a stirring story of the Kentucky hills, called "The Mountain Woman." The story is an adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's famous novel, "A Pagan of the Hills." Charles Giblyn directed the production with an exceedingly high-class corps of players, states the announcement from the Fox headquarters.

The Fox people state that a genuine surprise is in store for Pearl White fans in this production, as the subject affords Miss White a characterization utterly unlike anything in which she has heretofore been seen. She enacts in this story the part of "Alexander" McGivens, known as "the gal in pants" or "the he-woman," her odd name being due to the fact that her father, with whom she lives alone in the Kentucky Cumberlands, was so disappointed at her not being born a boy that he named her Alexander and caused her to wear boy's clothes, rearing her just as he would a boy.

The Kentucky hills have been utilized so long by authors of stage and screen as a district given over to "moonshiners" that it may be a relief to find a film story localized there that does not stage at least one pitched battle between "them revenue gents" and the other faction of gents who spent their nights and week-ends experimenting with corn. In "The Mountain Woman" there is plenty of vigorous, pulsating action, together with an exceptionally beautiful love story, all told without having recourse to the "chemists of the hills."

The principal action revolves about the effort of "the gal in pants" to take charge of her father's affairs when he is laid low by an enemy's bullet. "The Gal" succeeds in getting her father's logs floated down the river to their destination and gets paid for them, only to be held up while returning home with the money. Owing to the fact that the girl has several suitors, there is plenty of sniping from behind trees, and primitive conflicts between the men anxious to win her favor. The action is terminated in one of the prettiest climaxes ever devised, it is stated.

New Hodkinson Service

Exhibitors Service Department Will Assist Hodkinson Showmen

IN extending its plan for improved direct service to exhibitors and through them to the public, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has organized a new department which becomes operative with the first of the year.

This is called the "Exhibitors Service Department," and its function is to cooperate with exhibitors in enabling them to meet and take the fullest advantage of the rapidly changing conditions in the industry which have developed during the closing weeks of 1920 and the beginning of 1921.

The planning of the program for 1921, as a result of many recent disturbances in the field of production and distribution, has become a serious problem for the exhibitor, it is believed, who, with a large investment to sustain, must more than ever before be guided by sound judgment and the ability to look clear and straight through the present conditions of confusion in the industry.

The New Year's Plan of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is a definite plan of selection made solely in the interest of exhibitors to provide the surest possible guide through the present disturbances. The plan is the direct application of the practice by which the Hodkinson organization, having no producing entanglements, selects without prejudice for the exhibitor the best creations of independent producing units. These selections are made from contracts with all sources; they have separated the wheat from the chaff, and they are combined and grouped under the name "Hodkinson Selected Pictures for 1921."

The first activity of the Exhibitors Service Department is to bring an immediate knowledge of these selections to the exhibitors; in order to create for him a solid basis and a backbone for his program for 1921; and to assure him of a guarantee and interest for his public in the productions shown at his theatre.

Famous Jockey Appears in Pathe Release

People who are heard now and then to inquire, "What has become of Tod Sloan?" will find themselves answered in a very interesting way by the picture screens which shortly will show Benjamin B. Hampton's production of "The Killer," adapted from Stewart Edward White's novel with the same title. "The Killer" is announced for release by Pathe on January 30. This will be Tod Sloan's first public reappearance of any significance since the great royal and aristocratic personages of the English turf turned "thumbs down" on him nearly a half-score of years ago.

National Interest in Rufus Steele Films

Educational reports that strong demands are coming from all sections of the country for the two-reel comedy dramas, with the industrial life of the nation as their background, which have been written and produced by Rufus E. Steele, Saturday Evening Post writer. The first of these pictures, in two reels, are "The Big Idea," which is released in December, and "The Kick Back," scheduled for January.

There have been many applications for these pictures from large employers and from various community organizations, but all of these have been declined for the present by Educational since the organization believes that theatre owners should have the benefit of their unusual patronage asset. It is promised that these pictures will appeal to every man in the community who works for wages and salaries and that they will be as fully appreciated by employers and all who are concerned with the industrial prosperity of the country.

Unionism or the open shop does not enter into the pictures, but they are aimed against Bolshevist unrest and un-Americanism.

The Goldwyn Policy for 1921

To Be Based on Success Attending 1920 Program

IN a statement just issued from the New York headquarters of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, the announcement is made that the guiding policy for its production activities during the year 1921 will be rooted in the principles found so successful during the past year. The Goldwyn statement follows:

"The success of the Goldwyn production policy of the past year has been tested at the box office and has determined the attitude on big pictures for the year 1921. During the new year the Goldwyn company is preparing to surpass the record of the last twelve months by turning out pictures that will merit long runs and be even more profitable to the exhibitor.

"Reports from Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges covering the rental record made by pictures released during the past year have been received at the home office and show that they have played to unusually large business. Many of the biggest productions on the fourth year list made such an impression at first run theatres in large cities that they are being booked for return engagements.

"The pictures that touch the high spots in the box office analysis of Goldwyn productions are 'Earthbound,' the Basil King masterpiece that scored a tremendous success at legitimate theatres in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles and other large cities before it was released to motion picture houses; 'Madame X,' the adaptation of the world-famous drama in which Pauline Frederick gives the most stirring emotional portrayal of her screen career; 'The Penalty,' Gouverneur Morris' gripping story in which Lon Chaney depicts the remarkable character of 'Blizzard'; Rupert Hughes' 'Scratch My Back,' which ranks as one of the sprightliest comedies of the year; Reginald Barker's production of Katherine Newlin Burt's 'The Branding Iron,' and Rex Beach's 'North Wind's Malice.'

"A number of other big pictures on Goldwyn's fourth year's list are just being placed on the market, consequently it is too soon to get estimates of their returns, but the reports compiled at the Goldwyn exchanges show unusually heavy advance bookings, largely attributed to the confidence inspired by the popularity of the productions already shown. Particular interest is being displayed in 'Godless Men,' a Reginald Barker all-star production based on "Black Pawl," Ben Ames Williams' story of the sea, and Betty Compson in 'Prisoners of Love."

"The confidence of the Goldwyn company in big productions, written by the most popular authors of the country and acted by all-star casts has been fully justified during the past year, and plans are being carried out to supply a still greater demand for productions of the same stamp during coming months.

"When Samuel Goldwyn arrived at the Culver City studios a few weeks ago to join the group of eminent authors already on the lot co-operating with the directors on the production of their own original stories, his first statement was, 'There is no longer any room for mediocre pictures.' This has been taken as the keynote for the production staff which tackles each script with the determination to turn it into a photoplay that will stand out as a distinctive achievement.

George Beban as himself and two scenes from his latest picture, "One Man in a Million," which will be distributed by Robertson-Cole

Robertson-Cole Closes Big Deal

To Distribute George Beban's "One Man in a Million"

IN the closing hours of 1920 Robertson-Cole closed one of the most important transactions of the motion picture year by signing a contract for the distribution of George Beban's special production, "One Man in a Million," which was written and directed by Mr. Beban, and which stars him in the most remarkable and original role of his entire career. Included in the contract is reported to be $100,000 in advance bookings in a score of American cities which will include the personal appearance of Mr. Beban.

Robertson-Cole executives signed the contract which gives the right of distribution to the company with Mr. Beban and with Irving M. Lesser. The latter represented Sol Lesser, who has been interested in Mr. Beban's screen ventures. With this picture Sol Lesser is leaving the field of production, and his brother, Irving, who signed the Robertson-Cole contract, henceforth will look after production work.

"I cannot express my satisfaction at having obtained distribution through Robertson-Cole," said Mr. Beban, after the contract was signed. "Above all I desire dignified and fair handling of this production which I consider the best thing that I have ever done. I feel certain that the Robertson-Cole organization is exactly the right one to do this. I have watched closely the type of picture Robertson-Cole is releasing, and have inquired into its plans for the immediate future. These searching looks into the future and present, together with my knowledge of the company's past have convinced me that my greatest work is in proper hands."

"One Man in a Million" will be released January 8, in Newark, N. J. After this it is booked solidly for four months. Meanwhile work on advertising material and accessories is being rushed by Robertson-Cole, in the expectation that a general release will be an event for early in the year. After a careful study of the production, Robertson-Cole executives have ordered the most complete and elaborate press book and exploitation campaign possible, and work is being rushed so that all theatres which book "One Man in a Million" will be amply prepared to advertise and exploit it to the utmost, it is announced.

The cities and theatres in which the Beban picture has been booked, and which will be supplied by Robertson-Cole, in addition to the thousands of other bookings which the distributing company will immediately start to get through its own organization are:

New Branford theatre, Fabian Interests, Newark, N. J.; Howard theatre, Lynch Interests, Atlanta: Orpheum theatre, Crescent Amusement Co., Nashville, Tenn.; Strand theatre, Memphis, Tenn.; Strand theatre, Colorado; Fred Levy, Levy, Louisville, Ky.; Circle theatre, Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; Metropolitan and Strand theatres, Cleveland (day and date) leading theatre controlled by Ascher Brothers, Milwaukee; Riviera and New Tivoli theatres, controlled by Balaban and Katz, Chicago; Circuit theatre, Ascher Brothers management, Chicago.

John H. Kunsky's Madison theatre, Detroit; State theatre, managed by Finkelstein and Ruben, Minneapolis; Capital theatre, Finkelstein and Ruben, St. Paul; Liberty theatre, controlled by Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle; Tivoli theatre, Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco; T. and D. theatre, Turner and Dahnken, Oakland; Kinema theatre, Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser, Los Angeles, and a leading theatre at San Diego.

Mr. Beban is supported by Helen Jerome Eddy, Irene Rich, George Beban, Jr., who is five years old; Lloyd Whitlock, and a number of others. The casting of "One Man in a Million" is regarded as perfect, as each actor fits his or her type exactly. All work toward one great end, that of telling an unusual story dramatically, amusingly and pathetically, the human element being stressed above all others.

From an exploitation angle Robertson-Cole feels "One Man in a Million" has never been surpassed, and its campaign now being rapidly laid out will take advantage of every angle to make the production one which will give each exhibitor opportunity to realize to the fullest extent, it is declared.

Strong Cast Selected for "Money Master"

The new policy of peopling the casts of forthcoming Paramount Pictures with several famous and capable celebrities is said to have been faithfully observed in the selection of the cast for George Melford's forthcoming production of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Money Master."

The cast, which has just been completed, offers as the star, Dorothy Dalton, as Carmen Dolores, supported by James Kirkwood, famous both as an actor and screen director, in the leading male role of Jean Jacques Barbille. Ann Forrest is next in line as Zoe Barbille, while Virginia Foucette is interpreted by Truly Shattuck, famous far and wide as a prima donna and comic opera star. Fille is played by no less a personage than Harry Duffield, and Alan Hale interprets the slightly heavy but very admirable character, Masson.

The remaining roles, each of them delightfully human and full of characteristic touches are played by Edward Sutherland, Charles Ogle, Fred Huntley, John Herdman and Lillian Leighton.

Al Christie Directing a Single Reeler

As evidence the attention that is being paid the single reel, Vanity Comedies, which are alternating in weekly release with the Gayety brand, Educational announced this week that Al Christie himself is directing "Hubby Behave," which will be released late in Januarv. Irene Dalton, Earl Rodney, Bessie De Litch, Henry Murdock, Harry Edwards and Frances Feeney are in the cast.

FIVE new productions are scheduled to get under way early in the new year at the Goldwyn Coast studios. They are Leroy Scott's first original screen story, "The Night Rose," in which Leatrice Joy will be featured under the direction of Wallace Worsley; "The Alibi," directed by Frank Lloyd, from the original screen story by Charles Kenyon; "An Unwilling Hero," adapted from O. Henry's "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," as a stellar vehicle for Will Rogers; "Made in Heaven," starring Tom Moore and directed by Victor Schertzinger; and Thompson Buchanan's stage play, "The Bridal Path," directed by E. Mason Hopper, with Richard Dix and Marcia Anon in important roles.

Good Stories a Pressing Need, He Says

Gilson Willets, Pathe's production manager now in New York, laments the dearth of good screen stories as the most depressing condition prevailing in the industry at the present time. He says:

"Picture production," he said, "is now engaged in cracking the hardest nut encountered in the whole course of its career. Only one element of prosperity is lacking, and that is the most vital element of all stories. Where are the stories? What is the matter with the authors? Publishers of books and producers of stage plays never held out to them anything like the inducements offered by the picture screen. Yet, they fail us, and at a time when we are most in need of their best efforts. Upon them rests the responsibility, for the present depression in the picture industry."

R. V. Anderson Marries Ruth Alexander

Two well known members of the motion picture industry were married on January 5. They are R. V. Anderson, one of the most successful men in the news film business and news sales manager of International Film Service in New York City, and Miss Ruth Alexander, one of the executives of the New York office of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises.

Dr. Stephen A. Wise performed the ceremony, which was held at the home of the bride's father, Bernard Alexander, in New York City. Immediately after the ceremony the young couple left for Los Angeles, where they will visit Universal City. Before returning east they will tour up and down the Pacific Coast and visit the coast offices of the Universal Film Exchanges. They then will make their home in New York.

Hampton Condemns "Sex Stuff"

Producer Writes Article for Magazine to Offset Reform

"THE PICTORIAL REVIEW" has initiated its program of "cleaning up the pictures" with a frank article by Producer Benjamin B. Hampton, entitled, "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies," in which that active creative force in the motion picture industry also does much to offset Blue Law propaganda by showing plainly that "the public is the real censor of motion pictures."

Having produced for Pathe distribution "The Money Changers" and "The Killer" and for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation "Desert Gold," "The Sagebrusher," "Riders of the Dawn," "The Spenders" and "The U. P. Trail," Mr. Hampton is able to write with settled conviction and authority. The story referred to will appear in the February issue of "The Pictorial Review."

"The Pictorial Review," having a circulation closely approaching 2,000,000, this issue will be read by approximately five times that number of persons, most of whom are, as a matter of course, regular patrons of motion picture theatres. These are the people who, as Mr. Hampton writes, are the real censors of the pictures. Not only will they be impressed by the force of this argument against reckless presentation of "sex stuff" but will be benefitted by the clear insight which he brings to bear on the industry's future. In order to exert the fullest influence for the advantage of its crusade, "The Pictorial Review" is fortifying this auspicious opening with a big campaign. The principal immediate object in view—it being of vital interest to the millions who make of motion picture shows their chief recreation—is to offset the current accumulating propaganda issued by organized "Blue Sunday" advocates. Accordingly, the publisher and editors are making appeals personally and by letters and circular matter to every available influence which the general public is accustomed to hold in respect. They direct attention to Mr. Hampton's disclosures in such phrases as the following:

"Here is an industry that in a few short years has become fifth in importance in the United States. The pictures ought to be beyond reproach. Unfortunately too many are not. There is something vitally wrong. What that something is, is fearlessly revealed by Benjamin B. Hampton, who is himself, president of four big motion picture companies and vice-president of a fifth. Some of the conditions he describes are nothing short of appalling. His article bristles with astounding information that has never been published before. And, most important of all, the author explains exactly how present conditions may be changed over night in your town."

Communications of this character have been sent in personal letters to 35,000 of the leading club women of the United States. Cards are mailed to 21,550 motion picture exhibitors in the United States and Canada, besides to every motion picture actor, actress, director, officer of organization, etc., in the country. All of these are asked to give their active co-operation for cleaning up the movies. To the club women, especially, the editor indicates the force that can be exerted in the right direction by their organizations.

To 50,000 priests and clergymen the editor of the Pictorial Review refers to their influence and responsibilities in the community and asks active help in remedying existing evils. More than 100,000 school teachers are circularized to the same effect.

In the April issue of the Pictorial Review Mr. Hampton will have a second article on the same general subject, which the magazine will advertise and exploit with the same thoroughness.

Release of "The Kid" Settled

Chaplin's Special to Be in First National's "Big Five"

DEFINITE information regarding the channel of release of Charles Chaplin's much contested special, "The Kid," is forthcoming this week in the announcement by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., that this feature will form one of the series of super attractions which that organization is to release as the "Big Five." There have been many conjectures as to the final disposition of the widely discussed picture and it has recently been generally accepted in the industry that First National had arranged for its release, but it was not until this week that definite announcement of the fact was given out by that company.

With the disposal of "The Kid" and the return of Mr. Chaplin to the Coast the way was cleared for the completion of the remaining four of the eight short reel comedies for the production of which that star was under contract to First National. The latter announces that work is now in hand at the Chaplin studio on the fifth of the eight comedies.

While the precise terms on which "The Kid" was secured by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., are not forthcoming, they are said to constitute a record. The company's statement regarding the plan on which it will be released is of special interest to exhibitors generally, and particularly to those already holding contracts for the original eight Chaplins.

"The Kid," being a special and entirely distinct and apart from the original eight short comedies already contracted for, the Associated First National statement sets forth, is not of course obligated for release under the same terms as the latter. It has been decided, however, by the Associated First National Board of Directors, in order to afford every benefit possible to those exhibitors who hold contracts for the original eight comedies, to give to such exhibitors first consideration in determining the conditions of release. "For exhibitors other than these," the statement adds, "the big Chaplin special will be available as one of the 'Big Five' grouped together for exhibition under the Special Season Plan now announced, or it may be booked separately on rental terms corresponding to the determined exhibition value the special will call for." Revised and recut, the print of "The Kid" is expected to reach New York this week.

The remaining four pictures of the original Chaplin series, the official statement continues, will be produced in that star's own studio in Los Angeles. While the comedian completed a lease with Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven some months ago giving them full use of the studio he reserved the right to resume work on his own productions in the plant at any time during the term of the lease. Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven are completing "The Girl in the Taxi" for Associated First National release at the studio at the present time, but the building is commodious enough so that neither the comedian or the De Havens will be handicapped in any way by working in the studio simultaneously.

"The Kid" is probably the most widely discussed feature picture which has ever come onto the market due to the conditions surrounding its production. It was reported that the comedian had sold the American rights to it for $1,000,000 and then an announcement was made that his contract with Associated First National Pictures prohibited the distribution of any production starring him except by First National.

The production itself is said to be the most ambitious ever attempted by the comedian.

"Number, Please" Wins Applause of Fans

"Holiday crowds paid tribute to Harold Lloyd in his latest Pathe comedy "Number, Please?" and with the emphatic endorsement capacity audiences supplies, demonstrated the high esteem in which this increasingly popular comedian is regarded," declares a statement from Pathe headquarters. The general release of the picture bore out the anticipations created for "Number, Please?" at such pre-release exhibitions as at the America theater, Denver, and the Howard, Atlanta, "where Lloyd's new vehicle received tumultuous applause from crowded auditoriums," reads the announcement.

Pioneer Release for U.B.O.

"The Barbarian" is Booked by Big Eastern Circuit; Heads 1921 List

COINCIDENT with the completion of plans for its releases during the first six months of the new year, word comes from the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation announcing the consummation of a deal which calls for the showing of Pioneer's first important release in the new year, the "Barbarian" on the entire U. B. O. Circuit including the Keith, Proctor and B. S. Moss theatres.

The "Barbarian," which feature stars Monroe Salisbury and his players, who include Jane Novak, the Cudahy children, Alan Hale, Barney Sherry, Lillian Leighton and others, has been given a booking of over 100 days in the first run houses on the big circuit and will have its premiere showing in the Broadway theatre, in the near future, where it will remain for one week or more, moving from there to every other big house on the list. The U. B. O. houses are located in all sections of Greater New York, New York State and Northern New Jersey.

Predicting that this successful initial booking of the "Barbarian" is but a fore-runner of other important deals with other features on the Pioneer list of attractions, officials of the Pioneer Film Corporation are jubilant over the outlook for business this year.

"We naturally feel proud of the fact that our newest release in 1921 has been selected by the U. B. O. officials for their circuit of high class theatres," said President A. E. Lefcourt of Pioneer. "The keen judgment of those who are responsible for the booking of pictures on the U. B. O. Circuit has done more to uplift the industry than a great many people imagine.

"The care exercised in the selection of pictures has brought the producers to a sense of the fullest realization that there must be more than a title to a picture and also more than a star—there has to be a human interest story and the story must be one that can be readily understood by man, woman and child."

Eddie Polo Is Cuba's Idol

Universal Serial Star Draws Big Crowds While Making New Serial

EDDIE POLO has taken Havana by storm, Universal reports. The serial star recently took a company to Cuba to film his next serial, "The Seal of Satan." Since his arrival there he has made personal appearances in many of the leading theatres on the island and causes a young riot each time he leaves his hotel, so popular is he with Cuban photoplay fans, Universal asserts.

Polo's first public appearance was at the Campoamor theatre, one of the best theatres in Havana. The mangement had to call out the police to handle the crowds that attended, only a fraction of which could get into the theatre.

Eddie's first experience with his horde of Havana admirers was almost as exciting as some of his serial stuff. He and his company had arranged to take a ride around the city, shortly after their arrival, but when they started to leave the Hotel Sevilla, where they were stopping, they were greeted by a struggling, fighting, cheering mob of more than two thousand of men and boys, anxious to catch a glimpse of their cinema hero.

Polo, besides being a doer of unusual and daring stunts for the camera, has gained fame as a circus acrobat and dare-devil, but he hesitated and decided not to force his way through the enthusiastic crowd. After a brief appearance and much hand-shaking, he went back into his hotel.

Answers Blue-Law Sponsor

Goldwyn Comments on Campaign of the Reformers for Sunday Closing

IN commenting on the campaign of the Lord's Day Alliance to prohibit the showing of motion pictures on Sunday, Samuel Goldwyn, president of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, suggested that it might also be wise to revise the old "blue laws," still on the statute books in some States, which prohibit a man from kissing his wife on the Sabbath.

"We have already gone far enough in taking away the people's Constitutional rights," said Mr. Goldwyn. "There is a decided tendency to deprive them of still more, and, unless we exert ourselves we will wake up some morning to find the Statue of Liberty being carted away by a bunch of fanatical reformers.

"Tell the critics of motion pictures," continued Mr. Goldwyn, "that I have watched the picture theatres take thousands of men out of the saloons, keep millions of young boys and girls off the streets, bring travelogues to myriads of mentally starved and bored people in small towns and out-of-the-way places, and I know that they have reduced and not increased crime.

"Did you ever see vice triumph in a moving picture? You never did; and for every sensational picture put out by the studios there are hundreds of sweet, simple stories showing good, clean home scenes and depicting the rise of worthy young men by virtue of hard work, honest service and clean living. That is not bad for the youth of the land.

"Opponents of motion pictures accuse us of exaggeration of playing up the morbid, of increasing juvenile crime. Very well. I wish to ask them what they would say if any moving picture company in the world should just once reproduce what they read in the headlines of their daily papers, not once, but every day?

"Of course, they charge the papers with playing up crime, as they charge us with the same thing. But the papers are printing actual occurrences, the acts of living men and women, far more sensational, infinitely more cruel, vastly lower in moral tone than anything ever yet produced on any screen."

Metro Feature in Demand

Metro Exchanges Report Very Heavy Bookings on "Love, Honor and Obey"

METRO reports from exchanges throughout the country an exceptionally strong current of demand for "Love, Honor and Obey," the S-L production, written for the screen by Eugene Walter, from a novel by Charles Neville Buck.

In some cases, the distributing organization announces, exchanges have been hard put to find prints to satisfy the booking dates of exhibitors, and in other instances the branch offices have had difficulty in maintaining the mechanical perfection of the film, so short a time did they have to overhaul it after each showing.

At the home offices of the Metro Company those responsible for the original selection of story and dramatist have expressed decided gratification but no great surprise at the success of "Love, Honor and Obey." To two main reasons is ascribed the phenomenal showing of the S-L production: the first that it had a matrimonial theme; the second, that the theme was presented with extraordinary power.

There is no more attractive subject, Metro contends, than a story of marriage. It has perhaps the widest appeal of any, ranking side by side in importance with young romance and strong melodrama in surety of interest. And "Love, Honor and Obey," taken originally from one of the most popular novels published in this country within a decade, "The Tyranny of Weakness," by Charles Neville Buck; and then given over to Eugene Walter, whom David Belasco pronounced the leading American playwright, for adaptation to the screen, was one of undeniable appeal and decisive punch.

The all-star cast is credited with a big share of the responsibility for its success. The line-up includes Wilda Bennett, Claire Whitney, Henry Harmon, Emma Dunn, Kenneth Harlan, George Cowl and E. T. Ratcliffe.

Feature, "Dead Men Tell No Tales" (Vitagraph).—Positively the best picture booked into this house this season. Business at opening was ordinary, but picked up until box office record for week was set. A great picture with plenty of thrills and the best bet this house has had in many a long day.

Exploitation.—Tie-ups with local store...

CHARLES HUTCHISON, Pathe serial star, now fully recovered from the injuries he received in a fall while performing for "Double Adventure," the serial in which Pathe will present him as star January 23rd, arrived in New York from Los Angeles, Monday, December 27th. Mr. Hutchison was accompanied by his wife.

The Pathe star's trip to New York is in the nature of a visit. He plans to remain in New York for two weeks and, according to present arrangements, then go to Florida to initiate a schedule of intensive physical training before commencing work on another serial. The star has had conferences with Mr. Paul Brunet and some of the other departmental heads in the Pathe Home Office, but no definite plans for the future have been made as yet.

Douglas Doty to Write for Realartists

"Motion pictures are attracting the very best literary talent of the present day period and even the most conservative writers are realizing the great possibilities of the screen as a medium of expression."

This sums up the opinion of Douglas Doty, who for years has been in closest touch with the world's best known writers. Mr. Doty has recently been engaged by Realart as scenarist at the West Coast studio.

For twenty years Mr. Doty has been active as an editor and writer. He served fifteen years as editor with the Century Publishing Company and Century Magazine, and in addition was associated editorially with Cosmopolitan and Harpers.

Pictograph Sales Drive Winning Contracts

That the educational film can be as entertaining as a story has long been known in motion picture circles; that it can be as popular with exhibitors has only recently been learned. As a result of a sales campaign conducted during the past few weeks, Goldwyn salesmen have found exhibitors who had not hitherto booked the Pictograph easy to convince of its merits, declares a statement from the Goldwyn headquarters. They found many exhibitors who had viewed some of the Pictographs at other theatres eager to contract for them, it is stated. The Pictographs are made at the rate of one a week at the Bray Studios in New York City.

Educational Gets News Reels

Acquires Kinograms and Gaumont; to Add Another

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., announced this week that it had signed contracts for the acquisition of the product of three separate news weeklies and that these would be combined in a single reel to be released twice weekly.

This agreement includes the acquisition of the forces making Kinograms and Gaumont Weekly releases, whose product will be combined in the first news reel to be available in theatres January 30. One month later another news product will be incorporated in the new offering, according to the announcement.

Every camera man employed by these three organizations and every important employe will be retained. The product of these three entire staffs will be available for the selections desired by Educational in its release, it is stated. According to the plans announced, the offering to exhibitors will represent the very cream of news service and a selection of product that is now possible only to the theatre who contracts for several services and makes his own choice of scenes.

"Kinograms" will be retained as the name of the bi-weekly service, since it has established such a high standard of quality and does not conflict with the name of any other producer. At the same time exhibitors will be reminded through the sub-titles that these news pictures represent the standard of Educational in recording the events of the day. The pictures will be subject to the same rigid rule of the production board which passes on all other releases through Educational Exchange.

It is announced that camera men are to be retained in fifty of the principal centers through the world, especially including the countries which are most prominent in world news. In addition to these staffs will be kept at various pivotal points so that photographers may be dispatched to and from the scene of special news incident without disturbing the normal routine. Still further, contracts have already been signed which will give the new Kinograms camera men exclusive pictures of several important expeditions and scheduled news features.

Coincident with the announcement of Educational's acquisition of these pictures came the news that contracts had been signed with the entire U. B. O-Keith circuit for the showing of Kinograms in every theatre on the circuit. This will not prevent, however, the general release of the pictures to all theatres and the wire announcements of the new service is reported to have already bought Educational numerous requests for the services from scores of theatres in every principal city of the country. This is true, although Educational first informed its various branches of the release of Kinograms only four days ago.

In recent announcements Educational has stressed the point that its product enabled it to supply theatres with every picture they needed "except the feature and the news weekly." The acquisition of Kinograms reduced the product for the full program now handled by its exchanges to the feature alone

Besides marking another distinct step forward in Educational's one and two reel service, the new contract marks the biggest combination of news weekly product in the industry's history.

"We have taken over three news service products," said Mr. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational, "because we believe that it furnished us an opportunity to put the Educational Standard into this field. We will have the product that has been heretofore released through three different companies and representing the work of unquestionably the greatest combination of camera men that has ever been presented to the exhibitor.

"Various propositions to acquire news service have been presented to us before, but we have hesitated to simply enter this field with a competing series of pictures and to give the exhibitor just one more that he would have to buy to include in his selection of the very best pictures of the day. With these three products there is little occasion for the exhibitor to go outside this single reel, twice weekly to be sure that he is covering every important event that his patrons want to see on the screen.

"This selective work will be done under our own direction. The staffs that have been supplying the three services will continue to send in their total amount of material and from this only the cream will be chosen."

Exhibitors Praise Fox Anti-Blue Law Film

Fox News has evidently hit the nail on the head with its anti-Blue Law picture in the current issue of the reel. Two of the foremost exhibitors of the country, Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres, New York, and Joseph Plunkett, managing director of the Strand, have sent enthusiastic letters to William Fox, congratulating him upon his enterprise.

They testify to the good work that Fox News is doing for exhibitors in giving publicity to the disastrous results that would surely follow any application of Blue Laws in America.

"I have used the reel of propaganda film against the Blue Laws almost in its entirety," writes Mr. Reisenfeld. "I can fully appreciate the effectiveness of this work and must congratulate you upon the splendid spirit shown in the preparation of this material."

Exhibitors Praise Hodkinson Releases

"Speaking of great pictures," writes J. L. Gibbs, of the Ambrose theatre, Gloucester, Ohio, to the Hodkinson organization, "I sure must compliment the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the wonderful success I have had with their productions. I found it especially so with 'Riders of the Dawn,' 'Desert Gold' and 'The Westerners.'"

The second letter comes from J. L. Foreman of the Palace theatre, Wellston, Ohio. "A short time ago," he writes, "I played your 'Desert Gold' to record breaking business in my house and without my additional exploitation stunts."

Winner of Educational's Competition

S. B. Brennecke, office manager of the New York City branch office of Educational Films, was announced this week as the winner of the competition for the largest volume of bookings during December. This competition was inaugurated to stimulate sales during what is regarded as the worst month in the year, and it is reported that its result was to bring the largest total amount of business in the history of the exchange.

New Jacksonville Service

Southern City to Photograph and Folio Locations for Producers

THE Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce intends to show the motion picture industry that Florida has more beautiful locations and greater variety than the producers ever dreamt this state had, according to work received from the Southern city. To do this costs a lot of money, but according to the Chamber of Commerce, the city government, banking interests, the merchants and every body else is behind the scheme, and they are willingly spending this money in order to show the producer the hearty cooperation offered by all classes of Jacksonville people.

Jacksonville, Florida, realizing its meritorious claims for making itself the third motion picture producing centre, due to its climate and scenic advantages and most of all its proximity to New York, a short distance of only 30 hours, is now picturizing with professional camera men hundreds and hundreds of beautiful locations. These still photographs will be taken all over this part of Florida and placed in folios. Each picture will be indexed showing the exact location and how to get there, also the time of day and the month the picture was taken.

"There will be no need in sending out your location man or holding your company over at a heavy expense and loss of time and then be disappointed because a suitable location could not be found, declares W. R. Carter, Chairman of the Motion Picture Committee, Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce. "You will find most any conceivable kind of location in these folios. Should your picture require dock scenes—here they are of different variety—or a desert, a beach, ferry boats, cotton fields, log cabins or millionaires' residences, seashore hotels or tourists' hotels, New England farmhouses or southern plantations, a wind mill or water, Nile River scenes, scenes with moss and plenty of palms or scenes without moss and palms suggesting northern settings, and ocean liner entering a dock or sailing out to sea, these photographs and many others too numerous to mention will all be in these folios properly indexed."

Mr. Carter, feels that this service which is furnished without cost to the motion picture producers will appeal as a practical proposition. Several copies will be on exhibition in New York for the convenience of producers, so that they can scenalize their story at their desk thereby saving a great deal of time and money.

Silas Seadler Marries Realart Secretary

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Silas F. Seadler of the publicity department of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, and Miss Dora A. Gelbin, secretary to Jay A. Gove, assistant general manager of Realart. The young couple were married on November 24, it is stated, and have cherished their secret ever since. On New Year's eve, when about to leave for a week's vacation, they announced that their outing was to be in reality a delayed bridal tour. Their many friends in and out of the industry have been extending them congratulations since the announcement of their marriage.

Christie Comedy Seen at Rialto Theatre

A reminder of the days when people took resolutions not to look upon the wine when it was red (unforbidden by Mr. Volstead) is being conveyed to the patrons of the Rialto theatre, New York, this week, where "Going Through the Rye," a Christie comedy, occupies a prominent place on the bill. Bobby Vernon is the featured player. Vera Steadman is also in the cast.

Attention Mr.Ira P.Stone,Manager

Gentlemen:

We had- the fortune to play "DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES", for one week,beginning Sunday December 12th, and are pleased to say that we broke the record. The title was a very good one, which permitted a lot of publicity which ordinarily could not be obtained. The picture itself was full of thrills and surprises, the action being of a superior kind, and the acting of a high order. The campaign you carried out was,indeed,very commendable, and if producers with the proper pictures would manipulate their features as you have done in this instance,it would prove a great advantage to the exhibitor.

I will be very glad to negotiate with you at any time you have a real feature, and I am able to use it at the Louisiana Theatre.

Yours very truly,

Arthur B.Leopold,

Manager,Louisiana Theatre.

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER'S proposal that Americanism films be shown in the steerage of immigrant ships won the instant approval of Chicago business men. Mr. Rothacker has received many assurances of support when it comes to putting the plan into effect.

The editor of a Chicago business magazine was one of the first to endorse the proposal.

"Mr. Rothacker is right," said the editor. "The time to plant seeds of Americanism in the minds of immigrants is before they reach this country. It is all right to show them films while they are at Ellis Island and after they are admitted to the country. But the psychological time is while they are still on the high seas. Thoughts given them then would make a much bigger and more lasting impression on their minds. The time to begin making them into desirable American citizens is before they set foot on American soil."

The indications are that Congress will put the lid on immigration for at least a year, which will give time to perfect plans so that when immigration starts again a projection machine can be put in the steerage of every ship bringing newcomers to this country.

The World in Review in Pathe News 104

The world in review is found in the December 29 release of Pathe News—Pathe News Number 104. In this issue of the Pathe News there are scenes of important events of world-wide importance in Germany, Ireland, Nova Scotia, and such widely separated points in the United States as Wisconsin, Florida, Washington, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire and Washington, D. C.

Great interest has been manifested at all theatres that have shown the reel so far, in scenes of President Ebert's visit to Heligoland.

The scenes from Ireland in this issue of Pathe News show Sinn Fein captives in the concentration camps maintained by the British forces. The camp is in Belfast and takes care of the "overflow" from the prisons.

Is Priority of Run Necessary?

John Woody Declares Reports Show It Unnecessary

IN a statement emanating from the New York headquarters of the Realart Pictures Corporation, the claim is made that the old theory that "one house cannot repeat on a picture without losing patronage" has been exploded. The claim is based on reports recently received from all sections of the country and concern especially neighborhood houses. These reports, according to the Realart statement, also show that an overwhelming majority of exhibitors in the same neighborhoods are using the thirty-six pictures released under the Realart Star Franchise system.

"Aside from presenting a record to be proud of this report indicates something that to me is highly significant," said John S. Woody, Realart's general manager. "It is, in effect, a refutation of the old theory of exhibitors that one house cannot profitably show productions already run by another house—that each must maintain its prestige by getting first run pictures.

"It seems now that the shrewder heads in the business have discovered something. They began to realize, long ago, that too much stress has been placed on the priority of run theory. They found too, that the disinclination to repeat a picture because it had been shown at other theatres in that neighborhood was not justified by box office receipts.

"Their reasoning was that if A ran a picture that B had already shown, A would lose business. That sounded reasonable enough, in theory, but it didn't seem to work out in practise. Then a number of exhibitors began by securing better class pictures, which had, however, been shown in their district before. They consulted their box office—and the priority of run theory faded away.

"There's a sound reason for that: Take, for instance, one section in Chicago. There we find six theatres; Realart pictures are shown in four of them. One house has 1,500 seats, another has 600, a third has 900, and the fourth 600. That's a total of 3,600 seats in theatres showing Realart productions.

"At first thought it seems impossible that these houses can show the same pictures and still keep up their patronage. But these theatres cover an area of perhaps three or four square miles and draw from possibly as many as 75,000 people. It's obvious, then, that with a limited number of seats each theatre has its own clientele. No three or even four of the houses can accommodate all of the picture patrons in that neighborhood.

"And so the progressive exhibitor finds it better to secure successful pictures that have been shown twice, or even oftener in his district rather than to select a first run production of less drawing power. There is no doubt that the advance publicity given a successful picture is of great help to the neighborhood exhibitor later when he books that picture for his theatre.

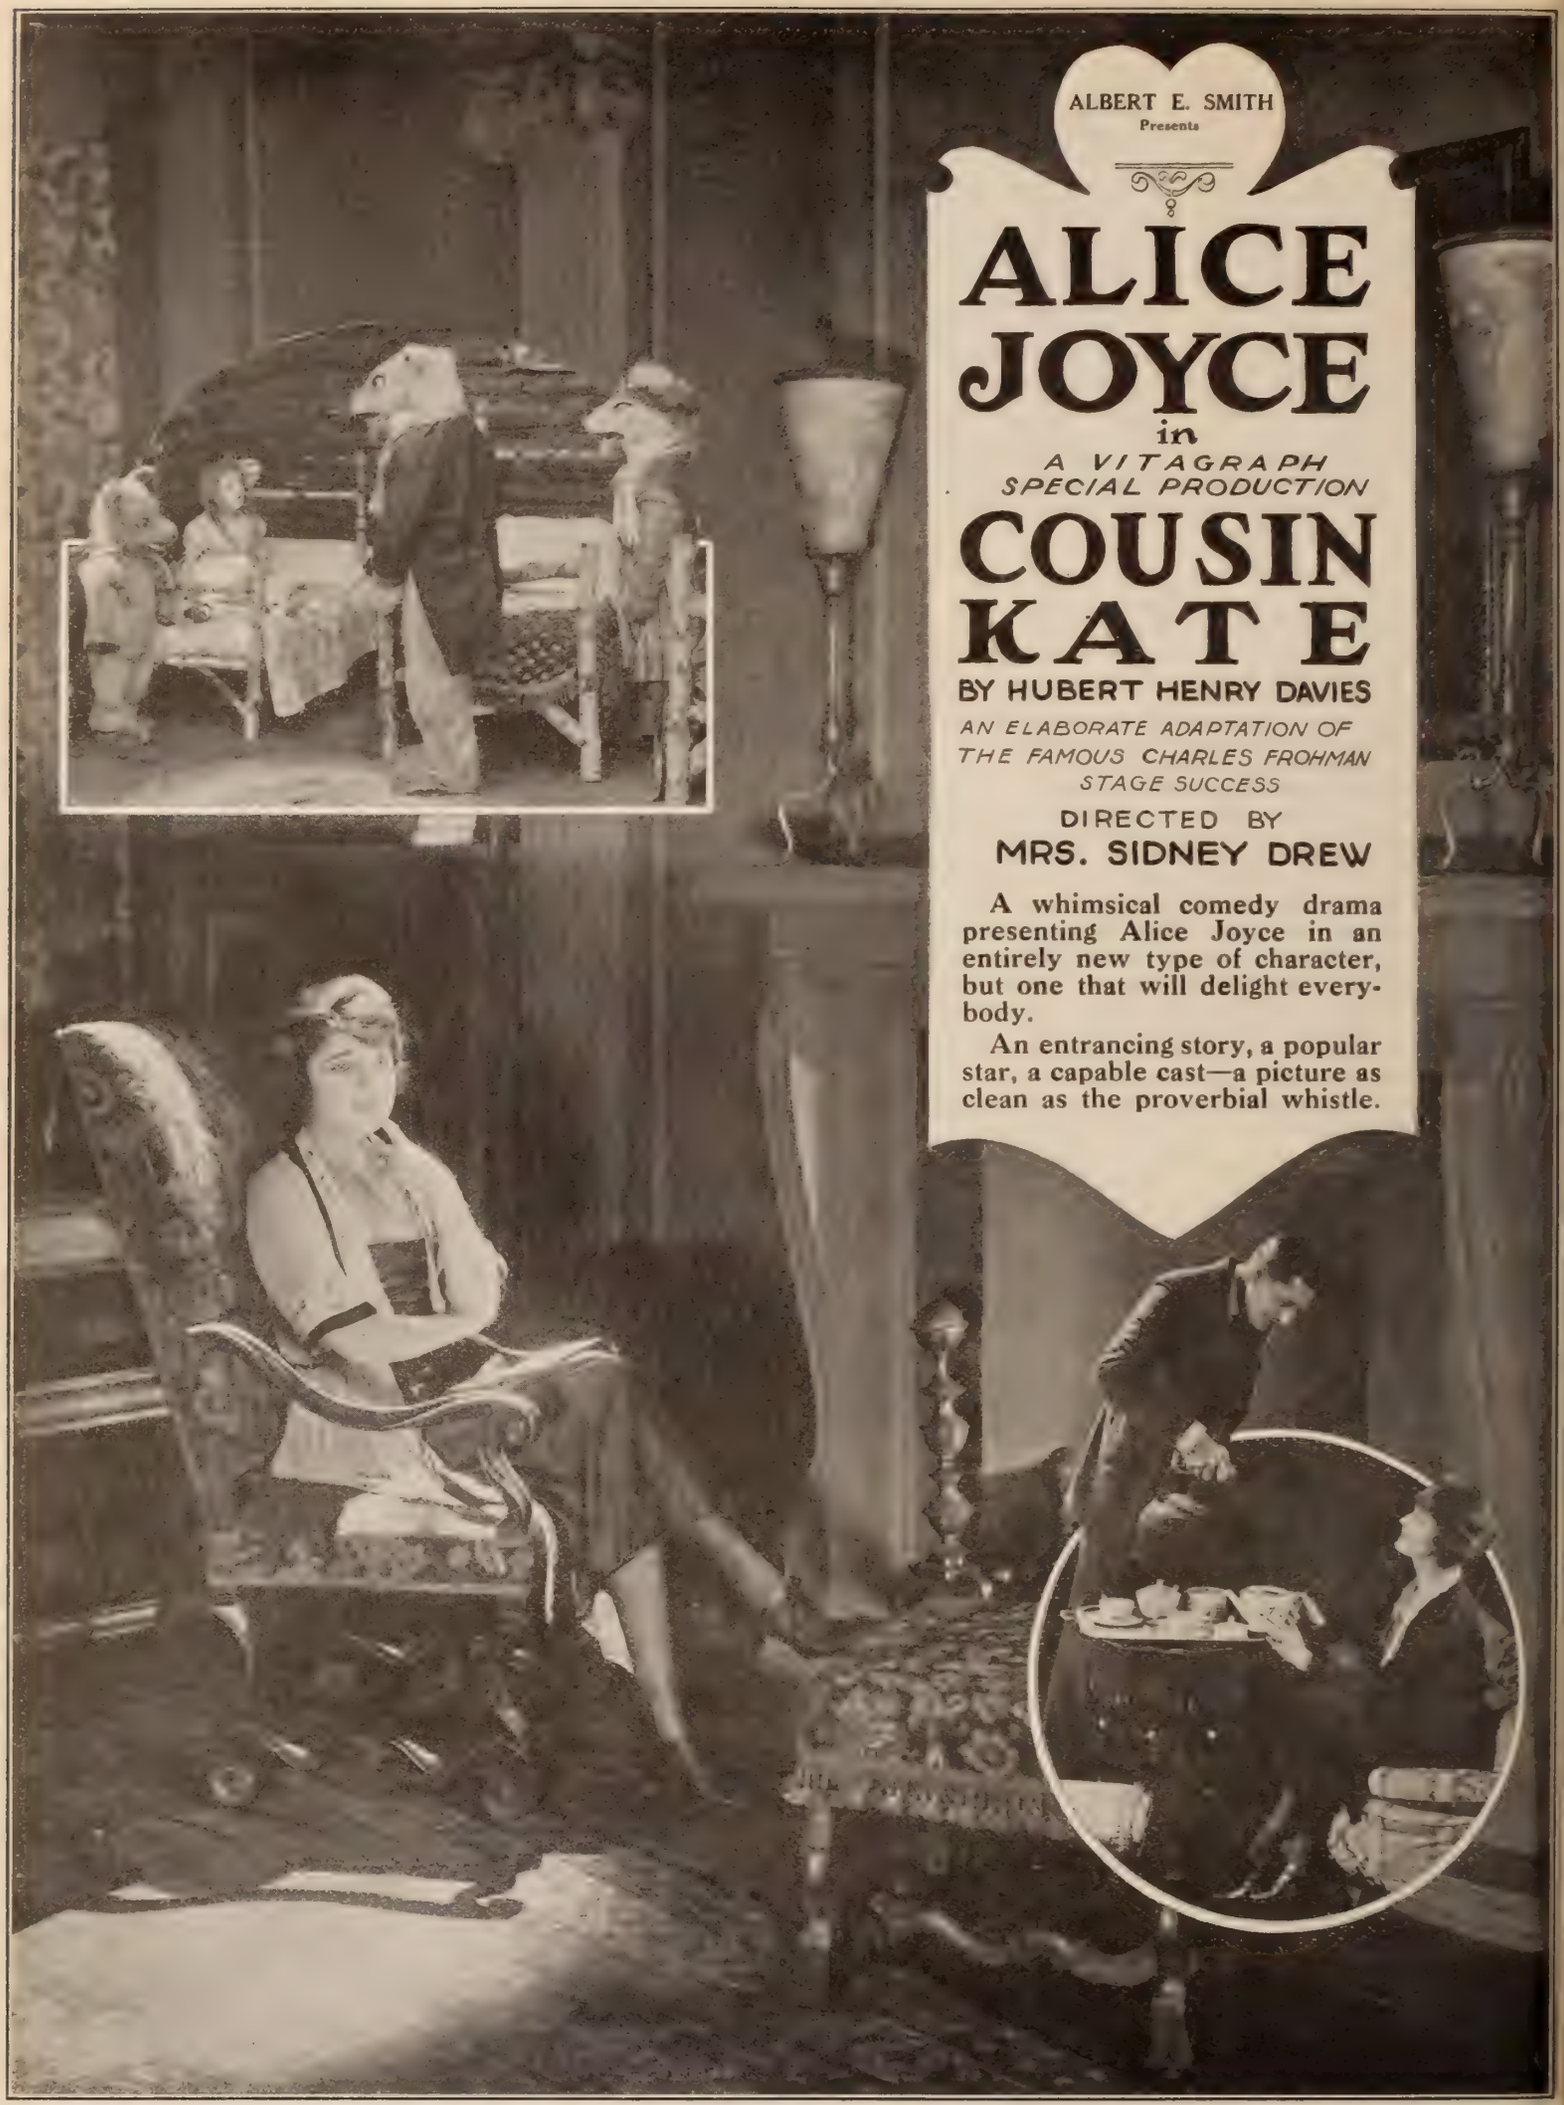
"But one point stands out prominently in these reports: Not only the big cities but the small towns are finding it profitable to use good pictures, regardless of previous showings. It proves to me that these exhibitors want strong pictures—productions they are confident will have a real box office value. And when they find pictures of this kind—whose value has already been demonstrated—they take them. They've discovered that first runs are not always the most desirable."

"Clean House from Within"

Hodkinson's Stand on Blue Laws is Proven Correct

W. W. HODKINSON, head of the corporation which bears his name, has placed himself definitely on record in regard to "Blue Laws." In passing it may be remarked whatever Mr. Hodkinson says may invariably be checked back and proven because it is always of sufficient interest to find place in the columns of the various publications. In an interview with Mr. Hodkinson on December 4, 1920, he spoke as follows:

"The proposers of the 'Blue Laws' are evidently threatening to close up everything on Sunday with the hope of effecting a compromise whereby the public will throw over Sunday amusements as a sacrifice to keep more drastic regulations from being adopted. Sunday baseball and motion pictures seem to me to be in the greatest danger."



"And therein," declares a statement from the Hodkinson headquarters, "did he once again prove his ability to strike right to the heart of a proposition. With an undimmed eye and with a mentality unaffected by any species of camouflage he placed a decisive finger on the very nub of the whole situation. He knew that in spite of all hectic talk concerning the Sabbath Day and what the various alliances proposed doing or rather making the great American public do on that day, that the main thought in the brains of the different gentlemen who headed the various organizations agitating for Sunday reform was not so much the proposed drastic regulations,—regulations which would act on but one day out of the week,—but that they were striking at one thing,—the motion picture, all the time.

"And realizing this he said in the same interview quoted above:

"'There is one sure way that motion pictures can be made immune from such attacks, that is for the industry to cleanse itself from within.'"

That Mr. Hodkinson was correct in everything that he said in this interview early in December has been proven time and time again since then—most recently by the Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, head of the International Reform Bureau.

According to a very recent issue of the New York Times, Dr. Crafts, speaking for his organization, said in part: "We are not out to destory the movies but to clean them up."

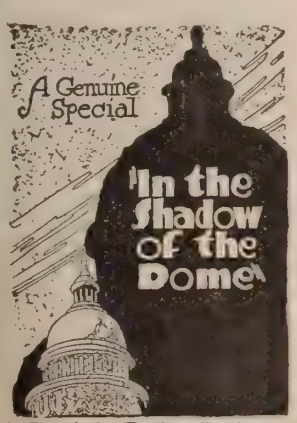
A whimsical comedy drama presenting Alice Joyce in an entirely new type of character, but one that will delight everybody.
An entrancing story, a popular star, a capable cast—a picture as clean as the proverbial whistle.

PICTURE theatres in Providence, R. I., and Atlanta, Ga., recently conducted "all-Metro weeks" for their audiences. The Rialto theatre, Providence, R. I., under the management of William J. Mahoney, showed as its feature attractions during the week of December 12th, Maurice Tourneur's "The Great Redeemer," "Nazimova in "Madame Peacock" and Buster Keaton's comedy, "The Scarecrow."



In Atlanta, Loew's Grand theatre showed during the week of December 6th, "The Saphead," by Winchell Smith, and Alice Lake in "Body and Soul." The Criterion gave a release showing of Buster Keaton's "Neighbors." At the Alamo theatre, No. 3, "The Price of Redemption," starring Bert Lytell, was featured. The Savoy theatre booked "The Chorus Girl's Romance," starring Viola Dana for December 6th, while May Allison in "Held in Trust" held the feature position on December 7th.

Reports to the Metro home office declare that all these houses experienced unusually good business with the Metro attractions.

"Scalpers" Are Busy at "Passion" Showing

The success which was accorded "Passion," starring Poli Negri, the continental actress, distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., came prominently to public notice during the showing at the New Branford theatre, at Newark, N. J. For the last seven days of its ten days' showing there, the theatre management was forced to employ special watchmen to guard against ticket speculators who had secured supplies of seats calling for reserve chairs in the balcony.

The production opened there on December 16 as the first attraction at the new theatre and the following Sunday when the theatre was doing turn-away business on the attraction the first complaint of "scalping" was received by the management. The New Branford reserved about 200 selected seats in the balcony and it was the tickets calling for the majority of these that the "scalpers" succeeded in getting.

Reviewers Hail Buster Keaton

Press Comments Are Highly Favorable in Character

METRO PICTURES CORPORATION announces that newspaper reviewers in many sections of the country have greeted the Buster Keaton comedies, released by Metro, with highly favorable comments on the amusing qualities of this series. Virginia Dale of the Chicago Daily Journal writes:

"Now comes Buster Keaton. Keaton was declared by Arbuckle to be the greatest potential two-reel comedy king. Exhibitors everywhere declare his comedies, when presented at their theatres, meet with almost unprecedented success. Many whose policy it is never to play a picture twice, have broken their rules in the case of Keaton. The perception of humor with the ability to portray it successfully, is a rare gift. Keaton has almost a clear field before him at this time."

Echoing the opinion of the reviewer of the Chicago Daily Journal regarding the laugh-provoking qualities of Keaton's work is a review in the Los Angeles Times on "The Saphead," the Winchell Smith comedy in which Mr. Keaton was co-starred with William H. Crane and which was the featured attraction at Tally's Los Angeles theatre. Grace Kingsley, the reviewer for the Times, paid a high encomium to Keaton's work as Bertie the Lamb, adding that he invested the part with "scores of really fine touches of kindly satire and pathos, as well as of nicely balanced comedy."

Henry Dougherty, Guy Price and May Markson, dramatic editors of the Express, Herald and Record respectively also are quoted as being vehement in their praise of Keaton, stating that the youngest star of filmdom "is destined to win a high place in the esteem of the picture goers."

Florence Lawrence, dramatic editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, in her review of the picture says: "Buster Keaton makes his bow to the cinema world in a seven-reeler, his debut in 'The Saphead' (Tally's) being so auspicious that the thoroughness of preparation for stardom is indicative of the fine traditions he is following in his acting. This Metro production presented by John L. Golden and Winchell Smith in conjunction with Marcus Loew is interesting for debut purposes, for it combines comedy, in which Mr. Keaton is so apt, while it also provides little tragic notes that makes it a strong play.

"While the medium throughout has its farce side, this element is in leash, kept so by the young comedian who gains his climaxes by the serio-comic attitude he maintains in the most amusing situations. Hence the cleverness of it all, for the interrupted marriage ceremony and the buffoonery of the stock exchange scene are without parallel.

Newspapers that carried prominent advertising displays were the Los Angeles Times, which featured the Buster Keaton comedy, "Convict 13," on the front page of the Sunday edition, while it showed at the Rialto theatre in Los Angeles; while the American theatre of Denver, Colorado, carried a quarter-page advertisement of Buster Keaton in "The Scarecrow."

In conjunction with the showing of Bert Lytell in "The Price of Redemption" at Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, the manager of the Hippodrome gave a special showing of the Buster Keaton comedy, "The Scarecrow," which was announced as "held over by demand," and advertised in a specially prepared cut by the theatre's own artist, as such.

Business First for Moreno

Completes "Three Sevens" Before Going to Honolulu on Vacation

ANTONIO MORENO will leave shortly after the first of the year for the Hawaiian Islands, to enjoy his only vacation in three years of uninterrupted picture production. Tony had hoped that before he started "Three Sevens" he would at least find time to take a trip to Mexico City in response to invitations from leading citizens and high officials. But so great was the demand to see this pictureque star in feature productions that Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, was compelled to deny Tony the vacation until he had completed "Three Sevens." He plans to sail from San Francisco on January 5 for Honolulu.

Director Chester Bennett has faithfully interpreted the psychology of the story in his screen version. While prison reform makes up a large part of the theme, there is nothing morbid in the picture and light flashes of comedy relieve the intense dramatic situations, declares a statement from the Vitagraph headquarters.

The supporting cast of "Three Sevens" is a strong one. Jean Calhoun and Beatrice Burnham appear opposite the star. The principal men in the cast are all exceptionally well known and include Emmett King, Bull Montana, Edwin J. Brady, Hector V. Sarno, De Witt C. Jennings, Bobby Mack, Jeffery Webb and Starke Patterson. Virginia Nightingale also has an important role.

ABOUT PLAYERS

A new American beauty has bloomed. Hope Hampton. Miss Hampton has been singled out by the eminent English artist-photographer, E. O. Hoppe, as one of America's four most beautiful women. She will pose for Mr. Hoppe and her picture be among those of America's and Europe's four most beautiful women which will be on exhibit at a Fifth avenue art gallery the latter part of February. Miss Hampton is the youthful star who is seen at the Rialto theatre, New York, the week of January 2 in the Maurice Tourneur production, "The Bait." Her latest completed production is "Passion's Penalty."

It is not the fortune of the average person to read a story, like it, imagine just how he or she would portray the role liked best, and then be engaged as a feature player to interpret precisely that role. Such is the case of Anna Q. Nilsson, who is now completing the role of Ember, in "Temple Dusk," the forthcoming George D. Baker Production, now being made at Metro's New York studios. "Portraying the role of Ember before the camera has been a delightful experience for me," enthuses Miss Nilsson. "I am only sorry that it is now soon to end with the pictures completion. But in doing it, I feel I have come to know a new person, made a new friend—that of 'Ember,' the girl, in 'Temple Dusk.'"

Bert Lytell, the popular young star of Metro's forthcoming production, "A Message from Mars," rapidly nearing completion, was noted in his stage work for possessing the quickest "study" of anyone in the various stock companies to which he at one time or another belonged, according to a recent statement by Mr. Lytell himself. This meant that it took the young Metro star less time to learn a part than anyone else in the company.

"In those days," Mr. Lytell said recently, "I would commence studying a part as soon as I had learned another and was either rehearsing or playing it, for it was our custom to put on a different play every week. This is the familiar repertoire work to which almost every actor with a stage career behind him has at some time or other performed. And while we were playing one production, I would at once start learning the part of the play for the week following, so that when the time came for rehearsals for the new play I would be "letter-perfect" in the role.

I would pace up and down with the typewritten part containing the "sides" of the role in my hand, and I would estimate afterward that I'd walk easily ten miles in an afternoon. I began, as a rule, on Monday, and by Thursday I would have the part almost completely, and I am proud to say that I never forgot my lines.

This facility of memory has stood Mr. Lytell in excellent stead before the camera, where his quickness to grasp the meaning and purpose of a scene, as well as to carry in his memory a well-defined sense of the play's continuity has made the young Metro star a particularly facile subject for direction on the silversheet.

Recruited from the ranks of "extras" and "atmosphere," as the result of sheer ability, Miss Lorraine Harding has come to the fore as an actress of rare attainments in record time. Her versatility in the portrayal of widely-divergent roles has earned for her name of "the girl with a thousand faces"—and the phrase aptly and concisely sums up the charming young lady's screen attributes.

Maitland Leroy Osborne, well known writer and novelist, commenting upon one of Miss Harding's recent delineations on the screen, praised the young lady's work in glowing terms. Writing in a current number of the National Magazine, Mr. Osborne said:

"Miss Harding possesses in fullest degree the genius that consists in the capacity for taking pains, and endows each character that she portrays with the similitude of naturalness that bespeaks the highest art. Humor, pathos, the entire range of human emotions are convincingly depicted in her character interpretations before the camera. . . . And so she lives vicariously the life of each character, and thinks, and feels, as well as looks the part, which invests the filmed record of her mimicry with the heart throbs of actuality."

An oft quoted yarn about scenario editors has been effectively disproved by Stella G. S. Perry, the novelist whose recent book, "Palmetto," published by Frederick F. Stokes, has so speedily become one of this year's best sellers.

Having heard that only persons with an established reputation in the film world could sell scenarios, Mrs. Perry determined to see whether she could not sell her first motion picture story on its merits alone. So she signed the nom de plume of Carol Stone. Under this unknown assumed name she had immediate success. It is now an open secret that "A Modern Diana" purchased by Joseph M. Schenck for Norma Talmadge, though signed and sold as by "Carol Stone," is really the work of Stella G. S. Perry. Mrs. Perry is the author of several children's books, as well as the novel, "Palmetto," but "A Modern Diana" is her first motion picture scenario.

Forrest Stanley, matinee idol and hero of many picture plays, will be seen opposite May Allison in "Big Game," Metro production. In the part of the frail New England youth who goes into the Northern woods to regain his health, Mr. Stanley will have a part especially fitted for him and one that will call for genuine ability.

Mr. Stanley has just completed one of the leading parts in Cecil De Mille's most recent productions. Previous to that he played opposite Alice Lake in "The Misfit Wife," one of the little star's latest Metro releases.

"Bobby" Agnew, remembered for his commendable work in "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," with Billie Burke, is engaged in playing opposite Norma Talmadge in "The Passion Flower." Mr. Agnew is well and favorably known for his screen work.

Florence Evelyn Martin, long identified as leading woman in Guy Empey productions, will be among the leading players seen in "Scrambled Wives," a First National release.

Gaston Glass completed his work in "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," some weeks since, and is spending additional time in Canada making personal appearance, his popularity having reached throughout the Dominion, in recognition of his work in "Humoresque" and in "The World and His Wife."

In "Just Pals," Helen Ferguson, leading woman with Buck Jones, depleted her wardrobe to the extent that she is rebuilding it with fundamentals, previous to receiving her wardrobe list for her next picture.

Edward Cecil, well known to the patrons of the silent drama, and famous throughout the country for his vivid portrayals of "heavy" types, was selected to play an important part in the production of "Big Game," in which May Allison is starring.

Mr. Cecil is a prominent member of Metro's stock company at the West Coast studios. He has played in several of the company's recent special productions, among which are "Blackmail," starring Viola Dana; "Cinderella's Twin," also starring Miss Dana and "The Price of Redemption," in which Bert Lytell starred.

In "Big Game" Mr. Cecil will enact a role that he is well adapted to play, and one that offers him every opportunity to display his versatility. He will appear as Jean St. Jean, a Canadian fur trapper and hunter, one of the most important roles in the production.

ABOUT DIRECTORS

founded on Sir Gilbert Parker's novel "The Money Master," is as yet uncompleted, it is rapidly taking shape under the combined efforts of the author and director Melford, at the Lasky studios.

"'The Money Master,'" stated Sir Gilbert, "is an intensely dramatic and exciting study of the events in the life of Monsieur Jean Jacques Barbille, an egotist who by his cheap philosophy nearly destroys his career, and of Carmen, his wife, who, born in Spain, does not fit into the life of Quebec.

"I confidently believe that the character, Jean Jacques Barbille is a man whom all will love, in spite of his shortcomings," the author ventured, and with Dorothy Dalton as Carmen Dolores and James Kirkwood as Jean, a picture much worth while is anticipated.

The part of Dolores is one of the most striking ever assigned Dorothy Dalton, so 'tis said, and one expected to suit her to the last degree.

Others in Mr. Melford's cast include Ann Forrest, Fred Huntley, Charles Ogle, Edward Sutherland, Harry Duffield, John Hardman, Alan Hale, Truly Shattuck and Lillian Leighton.

The first Chet Withey production, starring Constance Talmadge, "The Man From Toronto," is complete. Mr. Withey, therefore, is busily engaged upon preliminary work upon the second Chet Withey production with Miss Constance—"The Butterfly in Harness."

"Earthbound," which will be recalled, was directed by T. Hayes Hunter, "has set Europe afire," writes S. F. Jacobs, American representative of Lord Nordcliffe's motion picture magazines, adding that Basil King's story, by film route, has caused a tremendous sensation. "It brought hundreds of people who had never before patronized the silent drama to the cinema theatres," was included in Mr. Jacobs' statement concerning the Goldwyn product, which worthy praise is due Mr. Hunter for his masterpiece.

Tod Browning spent eight weeks on the story "Outside the Law," and eleven weeks cutting and titling the picture, which runs exactly 104 minutes. Therefore, every minute of actual screen time represents at least sixteen hours and more often thirty-two hours—work by Mr. Browning and his producing staff. Nevertheless, Mr. Browning was called upon to listen to remarks by a detective sergeant in Los Angeles who, among other things said that "nowadays the comedy is a farce!"

"That's a 'Stern' remark," said Tod Browning, director. But, not being acquainted with the illustrous "Abe"—the detective sergeant concluded that as a comedian, Browning was possibly a better director.

Rupert Hughes was just about to protest when he heard E. Mason Hopper, director and John J. Mescall, camera man for his picture, "Dangerous Curve Ahead!" say that he wrote "wicked scenarios." When he discovered that they did not mean immoral, but only difficult scenarios, that was another matter. Mr. Hughes, who is spending all his waking hours just now at the

"America First," says George B. Seitz

"NATURE is nature, the world over; atmosphere is necessarily confined to countries and peoples. But it can be realistically injected into that part of nature duplicating the typography of the country housing certain peoples. For this reason, I firmly believe it is possible to continue making pictures with foreign locales here in America and not necessarily bundling up an entire cast and taking every one over to the other side, should the picture call for scenes in foreign climes."

So says George B. Seitz, producer, author, director, and actor, in refuting the argument—one gaining in adherents—that a time will come when the big photoplay productions will be made abroad. Mr. Seitz, following a journey over-seas, returned from Spain, where most of the important scenes for his big Pathe feature, "Rogues and Romance," starring June Caprice and George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot, were made.

"Much is being said these days about making pictures where the setting calls for them," said Mr. Seitz. "I agree with this argument in moderation. I necessarily do, since I made parts of 'Rogues and Romance' in Spain. But I found, from this experiment, and because this was about my first experience in foreign 'shooting,' it is more or less of an experiment, that there is a something about the foreign atmosphere that does not make excellent photography possible. You have, no doubt, noticed this in weekly news reels. The pictures seem rather foggy. Why? Climatic conditions.

"In fact, a rousing good argument against taking pictures abroad could be expounded. Not to have the facilities with which to take pictures is a tremendous drawback and powerful pronaganda against putting the ocean between 'what you have in the hand and the beautiful promise of what is in the bush.'

"If I were to go to the head of a foreign cinema concern and express my desire to produce a picture, I am sure some of my ideas and plans would be regarded erratic and fanatic. The possibilities which our directors have discovered and combined in a photoplay have not yet imbedded themselves in the mind of the foreign producer.

"I'm not talking against the producer of the other side. But I do want to get across the fact that without proper facilities, even the setting falls flat. Why abandon a sure thing for an elusive 'might be'? Here in America I can find precisely the setting I want for my productions. All that is necessary is a willingness to expend time in geographical pursuits. My trip to Spain with the 'Rogues and Romance' company was interesting. I am not precisely displeased with the result, but I certainly can't go into rhapsodies over it.

"We were the first film outfit to ever take scenes in Southern Spain. Being something of a novelty, we received wonderful treatment from the populace. The government placed everything at our disposal, except in a few instances, and we were treated very kindly.

"But as for confining myself to Europe for a photoplay production, I say no. There is nothing over there that we cannot duplicate here. True, we secured many picturesque settings in Algeciras, but look at our own beautiful scenes along the Palisades and the Hudson River! Scenery that has never been included in productions. Over on the other side, we secured scenes in the Ancient Alhambra in Granada, and also the beautiful Generelifa, the summer palace of former Moorish princes, but we could have made replicas. We secured 'shots' of an old fortress, and some very beautiful scenes in Northern Africa, but are there not similar scenes in our country, as yet untouched?

"In fact," concluded Mr. Seitz, "there are still many beautiful locations in the United States which are net yet familiar to the film fans and which lend themselves admirably to foreign settings. The atmosphere, the director and his technical director can inject. If we want foreign atmosphere, we can get our photographs and turn the whole thing over to our architects, carpenters, and scenic artists. For instance, in Tarifa there was a public square; I wanted to stage a revolution there; the permit could not be secured. We took photographs and made a replica of the entire square for our revolution here in the United States.

"Yes, indeed, I for one am firmly convinced that it is possible to continue making pictures with foreign locales here in America with realistic and splendid results."

And George B. Seitz, producer, author, director and actor in many successful Seitz serials and features knows whereof he speaks.

Why Beban Spent Year on One Picture

WHEN George Beban decided to be an independent producer and with the nucleus of "One Man in a Million," his latest film, in mind, the fact that he would be engaged for a solid year in producing that picture never occurred to him.

Mr. Beban wanted to create a film product that would appeal to everybody and still maintain a strong box office hold. In his new and about to be released picture, this star has woven throughout its scenes all of the elements that are necessary to make a universal appeal and still managed to keep it in the "clean picture" class.

For instance, the star solicited the aid of children, dogs, parrots, and even spiders. Did you every try to make a spider turn a somersault? Or try to get along nicely with several hundred strange dogs? Or try your hand in handling forty or fifty young kiddies at once? George Beban not only tried one of the above mentioned, but all three. He succeeded. But it took him just one solid year to do it.

When you mention children to Beban, he sighs. When one stops to think of the weeks spent by the star in the endeavor to teach dozens of little folk what to do in various scenes, it is little wonder he sighs. Mr. Beban claims a child cannot be ruled—that they must be natural—humored at all times—their temperment must be played upon—and he spoke freely with reference to his own boy, "Bob White," who is seen in his picture, stating that in many instances, when a scene would just about be filmed—when everybody was keyed to high pitch, Bob would suddenly take it into his head to hammer some nails. Perchance the entire day would be wasted but when Bob Beban finally enacted the scene, he did so naturally.

It took Beban several weeks before all of the dogs he uses in the "One Man in a Million" picture knew him and respected his authority. It also took several applications of peroxide on the star's face before he convinced these dogs that their feet could slip but their teeth must stand intact. Mr. Beban carries a life scar on his cheek as a memento from one little Boston terrior who, in a gleeful moment jumped toward him, catching his cheek between his outspread fangs.

And spiders. Possibly the quickest specimen of bug that crawls is a spider. George Beban spent a solid month in obtaining realistic scenes in a cellar during which a spider was the chief object. Hundreds of feet of film were cranked on this bug. When the scene is flashed on the screen it will show possibly five or six feet.

Mr. Beban had occasion to use a scrawny feather fluffed parrot as a foil throughout the entire picture. "Bo-bo" is the bird's name and he is truly a remarkable speciment. But in one scene two thousand feet of film was used before the star obtained the desired effect—which will occupy possibly ten or twelve feet when the picture is seen.

Titles are another factor that Beban is a stickler for. Cognizant of the fact that the screen has developed lip readers, Beban made sure that each word used by the players meshed with the words in the title. The star claims that every title flashed on the screen is in perfect accord with the movement of the speaker's lips.

When items such as above mentioned are taken into consideration, it is easily explained that equally as much time can be consumed in the production of a natural, quiet, human natured story as for D. W. Griffith to make a super-production along "Way Down East" and "Birth of a Nation" lines.

Helen Jerome Eddy, Irene Rich, and George Beban, Jr., are featured with the star in "One Man in a Million."

Goldwyn studio cooperating in the screening of his picture, has many original ideas. That is why the man who holds the megaphone and the one who turns the crank of the camera, assert that his pictures are "wicked." Original ideas are often difficult to execute. In "Dangerous Curve Ahead!" for instance some of the scenes called for six exposures.

Time was, and that not so long ago, when it was revolutionary to have a double exposure. Yet Mr. Hughes blithely asks to have six exposures—and gets them, of course. But to accomplish his desire, "all the skill of science and patience of Job are needed," says the studio staff.

Al J. Kelley, who has served as an assistant director in companies including Viola Dana in leading feminine roles for four years, has been elevated to the rank of full fledged director for the next picture under Metro banner in which Miss Dana will star.

"Jennie Lind" will be the initial production of a new organization of which James Young will be Director General. Associated with him in the production end are Frank J. Hampton and Dick L'Estrange.

Special Setting for a Single-Reeler

More than forty special presentations have been accorded regular single reel scenic releases by principal theatres through the country within the past thirty days, according to an announcement by Educational. One of the latest of these pictures to get unusual attention from exhibitors has been "The Quaint Isle of Marken," a Holland scenic which has been featured on many programs. Recently the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, used a special setting showing Dutch windmills and including a dance by two little girls as a prelude."

Holds an Audience Test Before Releasing

George D. Baker's ideas on the relations that should exist between the director and the exhibitor are interesting. Mr. Baker declares:

"A director's successes can only be in ratio to the successes of the exhibitor who books his pictures. An exhibitor with an investment of one hundred thousand to one million dollars in his theatre property should not be subjected to the risk of running a feature which has not received the acid test of audience approval before it is released. It has been proven to me that after I complete the direction and assembling of my productions they can still be greatly improved upon by the aid of an audience test.

"Therefore, I am making it an invariable rule that all George D. Baker productions are shown before a theatre audience, preferably in a small town house, before they are released. My assistant and myself attend this test showing, and carefully note the likes and dislikes of the audience to the various sequences of the story. After the film has been run we compare notes and carefully eliminate the scenes which do not appeal to the typical theatre patron.

UNIVERSAL

William Bodine has been engaged to direct a new series of comedy productions for Universal. Franklin will write the stories, and Scott Darline will take care of the scripts. All these men were formerly with the Christie forces for many months.

Art Acord will be starred in a new Universal serial now being written by Ford Beebe. Albert Russell will direct.

Announcement is made of the change in four titles. "Cinderella Jane," in which Carmel Myers has been starred under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, has been changed to "The Mad Marriage." "The Millionaire Kid," starring Gladys Walker under the direction of Harry Harris, has been changed to "Rich Girl, Poor Girl." "Hidden Fires," starring Edith Roberts under Norman Dawn's direction, has been changed to "The Fire Cat." "Plain Folks," in which Eva Novak is starred under the direction of Lee McCarey, has been changed to "Society Secrets." All these subjects are now being edited.

Rollin Sturgeon will direct Gladys Walton in "The Bobbed Squab." Florence Turner has been borrowed from Metro for a part in this production.

Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" troupe is expected to arrive from the big Monte Cristo settings at Monterey next week.

William Worthington is beginning production work this week on "Three at the Table," written by Bennett Cohen and starring Edith Roberts. Casson Ferguson will play opposite Miss Roberts in this production.

Jack Ford returns to Universal from Fox to direct Henry Carey and is preparing the script of "Everybody for Himself."

The productions which are being completed this week are: "If Only Jim," starring Harry Carey under the direction of Jacques Jaccard; and "Colorado," starring Frank Mayo under Reeves Eason's direction.

Harry Burns, formerly of the Chester Snookey Comedies staff, has been engaged by Universal to direct a series in which Joe Martin, the orang-outang, will be featured.

Harry Brown, Universal's chief electrician, has been elected president of the Society of Electrical Illuminating Engineers.

FOX

The cast for the all-star special, "Clung," directed by Emmett J. Flynn, includes Rosemary Theby, Jack Fielding, William V. Monge, George Siegman and Charles Clary. This is a drama with an Oriental background.

Millard Webb is starting production work this week on the first Harold Goodwin starring feature, adapted from Charles Dickens's "Oliver Twist."

J. Gordon Edwards is engaged on the last scenes for "The Queen of Sheba."

Subjects being completed this week are: "While the Devil Laughs," starring Louise Lovely; "Bare Fists," starring William Russell; "Fighting Back," starring Buck Jones, and "The Blushing Bride" starring Eileen Percy.

GOLDWYN

The Goldwyn organization is completing seven productions this week. Six others are prepared and in readiness for the directors to begin work. Reginald Barker is now completing "Snow Blind," and will next make "The Old Nest" from Rupert Hughes' novel. The continuity has been prepared by the author himself.

Lon Chaney has been engaged to play an important role in "The Night Rose," by Leroy Scott. Others in the cast are Leatrice Joy, John Bowers and Edith Chapman.

"The Alibi," an original screen play by Charles Kenyon, to be directed by Frank Lloyd, will present House Peters in the leading role. Irene Rich will appear opposite Mr. Peters. Sidney Ainsworth and De Witt Jennings will also be seen in the cast.

Helen Chadwick is on her way to New York to play opposite Tom Moore in the new Hurlburt story, "Made in Heaven."

E. Mason Hopper will direct the screen version of the Thompson Buchanan stage play, "The Bridal Path." Richard Ricks has been engaged to play the lead.

The Reginald Barker troupe is now engaged on the final scenes at Truckee for "Snow Blind." "Snow Blindness" was the working title for this production, but it will be released under the title of "Snow Blind."

The release title, "Don't Neglect Your Wife," has been given to "Noblesse Oblige," the original screen play written by Gertrude Atherton and directed by Wallace Worsley.

VITAGRAPH

"Loot of the Night," written by Frederick Jackson, has been selected as the next stellar vehicle for Earle Williams. David Smith will be the director. Elinor Faire will play opposite Mr. Williams.

William Duncan and Edith Johnson will have completed the Vitagraph serial, "Fighting Fate," by February 1. Mr. Duncan claims that fifteen episodes constitutes the new type of continued photoplay which is free from illogical sequences and built on the same methods followed in making a feature production. He has spent the week at Chadsworth, Cal., for exteriors. Next week he will blow up a houseboat at Balboa harbor.

Antonio Moreno is now completing "Three Sevens." Chester Bennett is the director. Moreno leaves the Coast for a month's vacation which he will spend in Mexico City.

Larry Semon is now making final scenes for "The Hick."

Owing to the fact that Joe Rickson, the "heavy," is incapacitated from a broken leg, the serial company, engaged in filming "Purple Riders," is at present doing interior scenes.

METRO

The complete cast for Viola Dana's stellar vehicle, "Homestuff," includes Tom Gallery, Josephine Crowell, Nelson McDowell, Priscilla Bonner, Robert Chandler, Aileen Manning and Philip Sleeman. Albert J. Kelley is the director.

Garreth Hughes has returned to the Metro studio, having completed work in "Sentimental Tommy," made at the Famous Players' Eastern studio. A starring vehicle is now being selected for Hughes.

Five productions now in the making are "Home Stuff," starring Viola Dana, under the direction of Albert Kelley; "Uncharted Seas," starring Alice Lake, under the direction of Wesley Ruggles; "Big Game," starring May Allison, under the direction of Dallas Fitzgerald; "Camille," starring Nazimova, under Ray Smallwood's direction, and "What's the Matter with Marriage," featuring an all-star cast which includes Milton Sills, Ora Carewe and Nigel Barrie. Philip Rosen is the director of the last named production.

HERE AND THERE

"Heart of the Open Range," a five-reel Western, featuring Milburn Moranti with an all-star cast, will be distributed by the Forward Film Distributors. Sample prints are being shipped this week. Two other similar subjects which are nearing completion will be shipped shortly.

Tom Santschi, who is recovering from an operation for appendicitis, will resume work this week in his seventh two-reel Western for Pathe, entitled "The Sage Brush Musketeer," which is being made by the Cyrus J. Williams Productions.

A company is also making a series of two-reel child pictures which will be known as "The Adventures of Bill and Bob." They will be made under the direction of Robert Bradbury and will feature the Bradbury twins.

Five acres of land on Melrose avenue, Hollywood, adjoining the Brunton Studio, have been purchased by the Oliver Morosco Productions for a studio. A site adjoining this is a twenty acre tract which will, it was announced today, be known as Moroscoville. It will be made the Greenwich Village of Los Angeles. Morosco will build a theatre on this tract.

Charles Christie leaves this week for a tour of the South, visiting Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta. The report that the Christie plant would be closed for the month of January is erroneous. Two companies will begin on Vanity Comedies this week with Al Christie and Scott Sidney directing.

Pauline Stark will leave for New York Wednesday to play the title role in "Salvation Nell," a Whitman Bennett production. She will stop at the Commodore.

Ruth Roland leaves for the East this week to complete arrangements for a new serial for Pathe.

Jackie Coogan is able to resume work in "Peck's Bad Boy," under the direction of Nate Watt at the Brunton Studios.

Tod Browning is more or less of a philosopher, which is keeping right on the top of the fence with one's statements. We say the above because Tod points out that the Eighteenth Amendment made it possible to spend $100,000 on a feature film. Then he adds if Sour Sundays become a reality it will knock off more than that amount, which is a statement all wool and a yard wide and belongs to the fact instead of fiction class.

The first New Year's resolutions to reach Kokum's sanctum read as follows:

Buster Keaton—"I resolve that I will not drink any more, for reasons known to every American and Mr. Volstead. I promise not to produce Hamlet. I resolve that I will not invent any more excuses to refrain from work—for I have enough already. I resolve not to buy any $25,000 automobiles, and my bank account will make me keep this resolution."

Eddie Cline—"My New Year's resolutions are not to wear any puttees and other raiments of directors, and my reason is that I look funny enough now."

Lou Anger—"I resolve to allow Buster Keaton and Eddie Cline have their own way in the production of comedies—provided they agree with me. If they turn out a good picture I resolve to assume responsibility; if they turn out a bad one it will be their own fault."

Vignola Company Now in Bahama Islands

Cabled advices received in New York this week announce the safe arrival at Nassau, Bahama Islands, of Robert G. Vignola and his company. Mr. Vignola, accompanied by a large staff of technical assistants and players, is in the southern islands for the purpose of filming exterior scenes for Donn Byrne's story, "Redemption Cove," which he is making as a special production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount. The party left New York on December 28 arriving at Miami, Fla., on December 30 from whence they left the same day for Nassau, arriving at the Bahama capital late on the afternoon of December 31, or just in time to celebrate the advent of the New Year in more liberal surroundings than those at home.

In addition to Mr. Vignola, the party includes Phil Carle, assistant director; Russell Mathias, assistant director; Al Ligouri, chief cinematographer, a staff of cameramen and technical experts, and E. K. Lincoln, and Seena Owen, who played the male and female leads respectively. While only two players were taken along Mr. Vignola will make use of a large staff of technical assistants because of the nature of the scenes to be taken which require a great deal of "behind the scenes" work.

Dorothy Gish Marriage True Film Romance

Lasky Studio Is Ready for 1921

THE holidays over, the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studio has settled down to a new year of activity in the production of Paramount pictures. According to plans already perfected, the season just ahead will be one of the busiest ever experienced by the studio at Hollywood.

Not only will there be a large number of companies at work but the importance of the productions will entail an immense amount of preparation in each case, including scenic investiture and costuming, special lighting and so on.

The writers who have been engaged to write expressly for Paramount, have added a decidedly unique literary flavor to the studio. Sir Gilbert Parker, Edward Knoblock, Elinor Glyn, Avery Hopwood, Elmer Harris and others of note and international fame now make the studio their "stamping ground."

The recently announced policy of big stars gathered in single productions has met with the instant favor of the public as well as those involved—a source of distinct gratification to Adolph Zukor, president of the organization, and to Jesse L. Lasky, its first vice president and others.

The influx of the Eastern Paramount stars to the Coast has resulted in a schedule which means that every inch of stage space will be occupied in the months to come and that everybody will be working at high tension.

January and February will undoubtedly be two of the busiest months of the entire history of the Lasky studio, and the prospects point to a continuation of this activity during the remainder of the year 1921. At the present time a number of very important productions are under way, and these will be augmented by the addition of the new companies starting from week to week. Elsie Ferguson, Paramount star, in William D. Taylor's production of Arnold Bennett's "Sacred and Profane Love," has reached an important stage of the picture which was adapted by Julia Crawford Ivers from the stage play.

Cecil B. De Mille in his all-star super-production, "Five Kisses," based on Arthur Schnitzler's "Affairs of Anatol," occupies one of the largest sets that has been built at the Lasky studio in many months and which shows an enormous cabaret scene wherein some of the important action transpires.

William De Mille having returned from New York after a brief visit, is preparing to start work on a new and original photoplay by Edward Knoblock, concerning which announcements will be made in the near future. He will start work some time this month.

About the tenth of the month George Melford will begin his Paramount production from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Money Master."

The Paramount heavyweight fun-maker, Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle, back in Hollywood after a pleasure trip to Europe, is scheduled to begin work the nineteenth under the direction of James Cruze in "Three Miles Out."

Approximately on February 7 Frank Urson will commence work as director of Wallace Reid in a picture titled, "Watch My Smoke."

February seven has been set also for the starting date for Elinor Glyn's "The Great Moment," in which Gloria Swanson will star for Paramount, directed by Sam Wood.

Broadhurst Audiences Hail Johnnie Walker

The personal appearance of Mrs. Carr in connection with the showing of "Over the Hill" now running at the Broadhurst Theatre, was such a success that William Fox decided the visitors to "Over the Hill" should also have an opportunity of seeing Johnnie Walker in the flesh. Johnnie's appearance in person was a happy idea, judging from the ovation that is tendered this young player at every appearance.

His recent playing of Santa Claus to two hundred crippled children, guests of the Fox management, was just another of these happy human incidents that have been so closely tied up with the "Over the Hill" record breaking run.

More Authors for Goldwyn

Katherine Burt, Alice Duer Miller and Rita Weiman Go to West Coast

THREE prominent women novelists have signed contracts with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to write motion-picture scenarios. They are Katherine Newlin Burt, Alice Duer Miller and Rita Weiman. Mrs. Burt has already arrived at Goldwyn's West Coast studios at Culver City, Cal., to study the technique of the motion picture before attempting her first scenarios; Miss Weiman will arrive there within a few days and Mrs. Miller is expected a little later.

Signing up these three women as members of the Goldwyn staff of writers, which already include more than three dozen of the most prominent American authors, is in line with the Goldwyn policy to get the country's authors interested in the scenario as an original form of writing so that the creative principle underlying all story-telling may find itself at home in this new method of artistic expression.

Two photoplays from novels by Mrs. Burt have already been made by Goldwyn, both being Reginald Barker Productions. "The Branding Iron" was the first and it was one of the mid-season's big dramatic hits. Mr. Barker is now completing the photography on a picturization of Mrs. Burt's new novel, "Snowblind," now running serially in the Red Book Magazine.

Alice Duer Miller is a New Yorker by birth and most of her writings have dealt with life in that city. Her first screen writings for Goldwyn will in all likelihood be an original scenario, as will Mrs. Burt's. Mrs. Miller makes her home in New York City. Among her more popular novels have been "The Modern Obstacle," "Calderon's Prisoner," "Less Than Kin," "The Charm School." "Ladies Must Live" and "Are Women People?" In addition to being an author of note, Mrs. Miller is also prominent as a worker for woman's suffrage.

Rita Weiman has written "The Watch Dog," "The Co-Respondent," "The Beauty" and "The Acquittal" for the stage.

Pioneer Will Release "Idle Hands" Soon

With special outdoor advertising campaign announcing the coming release, by the Pioneer Film Corporation, of "Idle Hands," starring Gail Kane, preparations are being completed for the release of this Park & Whiteside special production within the next thirty days.

1920 Sport Highlights in International

A comprehensive resume of the outstanding sporting events of the year 1920 are included in International News No. 91, just released by Universal.

Among them are shots showing the Cleveland baseball team winning the world's series, and "Babe" Ruth, the record slugger of baldom. There also are pictures of William T. Tilden, world's tennis champion, in action; pictures of Chick Evans, national amateur golf champion; F. K. Foss, making his famous pole vault record of 13 feet 1 inch; as well as pictures of the yacht Resolute defeating Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock, for the America's Cup, and of Man O' War beating his speediest rival, Sir Barton, in one of the greatest turf classics of the age.

Katterjohn to Scenarize Glyn Story

The writing of the scenario of Elinor Glyn's first original story for Paramount, "The Great Moment," in which Gloria Swanson is to star under the direction of Sam Wood, has been entrusted to Monte M. Katterjohn, author of such well-known photoplays as "Carmen of the Klondike," "Madam Who," "Puppy Love," "The Man From Funeral Range," "The Clodhopper," etc.

Elinor Glyn is said to live up to her reputation for striking titles in "The Great Moment." Her books such as "Three Weeks," "His Hour," etc., have all had an allusion to time and "The Great Moment" follows the procedure, intensifying the period, however, to the shorest space of time.

"Gidap Napoleon" New Capitol Comedy

"Gidap Napoleon" is the title of the newest Capitol Comedy which is now ready for distribution through the Goldwyn organization. The comedy is from the pen of Kingsley Benedict.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to September 25, 1920.

"Clever twists make interesting crook story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased." "Story little impossible but business was big. Some fine double exposures in this and picture one of his best." "An entertaining feature which drew well." "Great in story and in production. Wally Reid always has good following and great stories. Went over big." "Better than average business." "An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done." "Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and 'Always Audacious' pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week." "Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run." "Drew large crowds and met with the favor of home-going audiences." "A good production having entertaining story. Box-office receipts good."

ARE ALL MEN ALIKE? (METRO) MAY ALLISON ..... NOV. 6
"Rather inconsequental for feature length."—M. P. News.

BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS ..... DEC. 11
"Mediocre picture on a hackneyed theme."—M. P. News.

BEGGAR IN PURPLE, A (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

"Novel story given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent—100 per cent. entertainment. Has every requisite feature for the most critical movie fan. Went big all week. A great box-office attraction." "Played at two theatres here and each seemed to do a big business." "One theatre considered it such a success that it held it over for a second week." "Splendid production which was well liked by my patrons. Sure-fire box-office attraction." "Very good picture playing to good business. Held for second week." "Undoubtedly one of the best and most successful pictures of the year. Played to exceptionally big business for seven days." "Interesting picture and well put on which appealed to both men and women patrons. Did more than average business for a week." "Doing good business second week. Everyone agrees it's the kind of picture to hold the attention spellbound." One of the best pictures of the year. Went big all week. "A good picture and box-office attraction which has been held for a second week at the highest class theatre in the city." "With the aid of exploitation, including a prologue, this picture went over big and brought good business."

BEWARE OF THE BRIDE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY ..... OCT. 30
"This would look better as a two-reel slapstick."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Favorably received and good program picture. Average business three days."

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE ..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.

BLACKMAIL (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... OCT. 16
"Viola Dana gives color to familiar story."—M. P. News.

BODY AND SOUL (METRO) ALICE LAKE ..... OCT. 23
"Story of dual personality fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BRANDING IRON, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Story of primitive passions is rather overdone."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture. Fair box-office results." "Brought a normal business, something unusual for pre-Christmas days."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH ..... NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BRUTE MASTER, THE (HODKINSON) HOBART BOSWORTH .... NOV.
"Hobart Bosworth scores in vigorous story of the sea."—M. P. News.

CHALLENGE OF THE LAW, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL .... OCT.
"Russell at his best; a real entertaining drama."—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID ..... JAN.
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business."

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... JAN.
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.

"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape."

CLOTHES (METRO) OLIVE TELL ..... OCT.
"Talky picture made from stage satire."—M. P. News.

"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.

CRADLE OF COURAGE, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WILLIAM S. HART ..... OCT.
"Has plenty of action and should please."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleasing picture but we had about average business." "Well up to the average of Wm. S. Hart's pictures and should be a good drawing card at all theatres where he is popular. We did excellent business with this picture for one week." "The combination of a popular star and a good picture, and the result is good business." "Out of Hart's line, should be kept in the Western type." "Carried picture seven days. My custom is two changes weekly." "Attracted large audiences but failed to meet with the approval usually accorded the cowboy." "Fine picture, played to big business." "A different Hart picture, but none-the-less vigorous than his Western productions. Pleased his admirers and also those who do not care for Hart as a rule. Big business." "A fine Hart picture. Excellent returns."

CURTAIN (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD ..... OCT.
"Lifelike story suffers from mechanical development."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to exceptional business. Katherine MacDonald appears to be growing more popular." "Katherine MacDonald gave entire satisfaction. Picture well produced. Splendid supporting cast. Business very good." "It's by far the best acting Katherine MacDonald

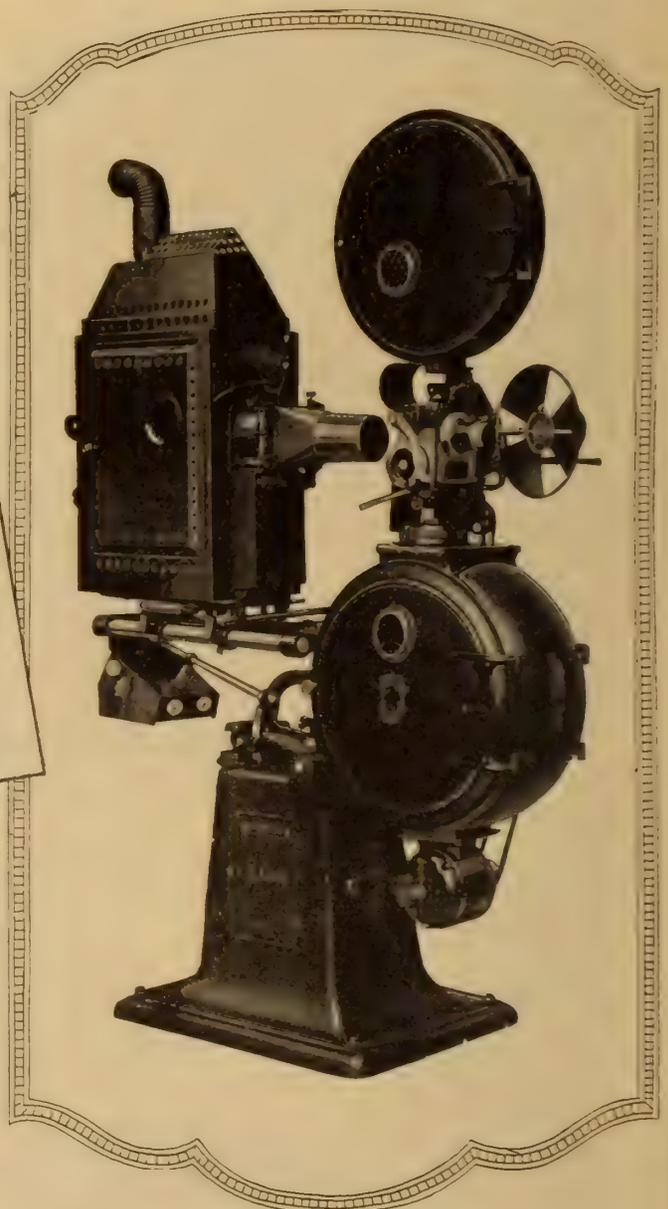
Gentlemen:

We wish to take this opportunity of letting you know the wonderful way in which your Motiograph machine stood a terrific heat test in a film fire that we recently had in our booth.



The heat was so intense that it melted all soldered connections, in all glass inclosed ammeter and voltmeter we had in the booth, and destroyed insulation on practically all wiring in the booth. However, outside of being smoked and the painting practically all cooked off, the Motiograph machine, was as good as ever.

After undergoing this firey ordeal, and after being cleaned up, the machine projected as usual a steady picture.

The fire did not occur in the machine, but in the rewinding bench, a few feet away. The writer has never known a fire to occur in a Motiograph, and we do not believe that any other machine but the Motiograph could have stood this intense heat.

Yours very truly,

Tracy L. Page

How and When the Isolated Power Plant Should Be Used

Twelve Questions and Answers That Will Help You Decide

By A. G. Cruikshank, Editor Farm-Light and Power

EVERY so often I am asked just how the isolated electric light outfit works out with motion picture production. The great difficulty in this field the isolated plant industry is the failure prospective motion picture house owners to understand the technical requirements of the moving picture lamp, etc., and the ability of the isolated plant to meet those requirements.

The operator generally knows more about what his machine needs to operate successfully than the owner. There are a great many so-called "farm light and power" plants operating moving picture houses throughout the United States successfully. The traveling show has to depend on some such means of obtaining the necessary electric current.

Below I endeavor to ask and answer the questions that must be answered before the motion picture producer and the isolated electric light plant manufacturer or salesman can do business. These questions and answers, I think, will do a great deal to clear up the subject and bring both sides to a better understanding of just what is needed and just what must be delivered.

Here are the questions and answers:

Answer—Yes.

2nd Question—Satisfactorily and economically?

Answer—Yes.

3rd Question—How?

Answer—By the use of the 20 Ampere, 28-30 volt, 600 watt, Mazda "C" Projector Lamp, or the 30 Ampere, 30 volt, 900 watt, Mazda "C" Projector Lamp.

4th Question—What equipment is necessary?

(2) A special Prismatic Lens.

(3) A spherical mirror or reflector.

(4) A housing for the above.

(5) A current regulating device.

5th Question—Where can I secure this equipment?

Answer—All of the progressive Motion Picture Projection Machine Manufacturers now build machines with this special equipment as a part of their stock apparatus.

6th Question—Could I use my present machine?

Answer—Yes. By the use of an Adapter.

7th Question—Where can I get the "Mazda" 28-30 volt projector Lamps and this Universal Adapter?

Answer—The Mazda "C." 28-30 volt Projector Lamps are made by the National Lamp Works, the Edison Lamp Works and the Westinghouse Lamp Co., and are sold by most all of ture stores.

The Sheck Universal Adapter is made by the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, Cleveland, Ohio.

8th Question—What information will I have to supply the manufacturers of this apparatus in order to secure the equipment that is best suited to my needs?

Answer—Complete information covering the following items must be given before they can make any definite recommendations:

(1) State what Type Plant is in use or what type is contemplated.

(2) Amperes used at Arc.

(3) Current supply at Arc—A.C. or D.C. and voltage.

(4) Control apparatus at present in use.

(5) Make and Model of present Projection Machine.

(6) Equivalent focus of present Projection Lens. (Give in inches if possible.)

(7) Diameter of free opening of Projection Lens.

(8) Length of throw from screen to Projection Lens.

(10) Size of screen.

(11) Kind and description of screen.

(12) Size of projection lens used—No. 1, ¼ size, or No. 2, ½ size.

N. B.—The more information you give the manufacturers the better able their engineers will be to recommend suitable equipment for your requirements. Very often it is found when complete data is given that it is possible to use a wider aperture lens with the Mazda Lamp and secure increased screen illumination at a reduced current cost to you.

There are now two sizes of the Mazda 28-30 volt Projector Lamps used, 20 ampere, 600 watt; and the 30 ampere, 30 volt, 900 watt. Why use a 900 watt if a 600 watt lamp will give you satisfactory service?

9th Question—What are the advantages of using the isolated electric plant with the Mazda Projector Lamp for Motion Picture Projection?

Answer—1st—More healthful—eliminates all carbon gases and carbon dust, which is especially harmful for operators confined in small booths.

2nd—Eliminates sputter and noise which is a prominent feature where the A.C. Arc is used. Eliminates flicker on the 25 and 40 cycle A.C.

3rd—Eliminates flicker and Arc travel where A.C. Arc is used.

4th—Only have to focus once. Allows operator more time to devote to care of apparatus and the picture on the screen.

5th—The screen is evenly illuminated at all times, no "ghosts," colored or dark areas, as are found with arc projection.

6th—The Mazda 20 ampere, 28-30 volt, 600 watt lamp will displace a 40 to 60 ampere A.C. carbon Arc where the length of throw does not exceed 80 feet and the width of the picture 12 feet on a plain mat screen.

7th—On a metallic or high reflecting screen, higher screen brilliancy is possible and a satisfactory 15 ft. picture up to 75 feet can be secured.

8th—Where the 25 to 30 ampere A.C. Arc has been used with a rectifier, the Mazda 600 watt lamp is conjunction with a metallic screen and a No. 2 or ½ size Projection Lens will give a brilliant 14 ft. wide picture at 80 ft. throw.

9th—Produces approximately the same intensity of illumination as the 25 to 30 ampere D.C. carbon arc for a picture 13 ft. wide at 90 ft. throw.

10th—Do not compare the "Mazda" 20 ampere, 28-30 volt, 600 watt lamp with a 40 ampere D.C. arc, as we do not claim equal illumination. The new 30 ampere 28-30 volt, 900 watt Mazda Projector Lamp when used with a reflecting screen will compare with a 40 ampere D.C. Arc.

400 watt 28-30 volt Mazda Lamp	10	60
600 " 28-30 " " "	12	80
900 " 28-30 " " "	16	100

11th—"Mazda" Projection produces a soft lighted picture. The carbon Arc a more harsh picture.

14th—Easier on the eyes of the people looking at the pictures. Reduces eye strain; hence, patrons will come to the theatre oftener. Less fire hazard, no open flame to ignite the film.

15th—The simplicity of operation gives the operator more time to watch the operating mechanism and to improve the projection of the picture.

16th—Rated average life of lamp is 100 hours.

17th—Two lamps may be focused ready to install in the lamp housing so that when one lamp burns out the new or second lamp can be quickly put into place.

10th Question—What is the cost of operating an Isolated Electric Motion Picture Plant?

Answer—1st, Figuring that you will occasionally use the full output of electrical current produced by the isolated Plant, we will use our maximum figures.

If gasolene costs 36c per gallon and the Plant produces 1,000 watts per hour and consumes one gallon of gasolene in four hours, the cost per 1,000 watts is 9c, or current costs 9c per unit.

2nd, We will use this figure also for the car-

Winter Garder Architect Planned to Make all Seats Good

Solves Problem by Placing all Seats on One Inclined Floor

THE Winter Garden Theatre, Seattle's newest photoplay amusement house, has made its formal bow to the public.

This beautiful theatre, on Third Avenue, just north of Pike Street, has been in the course of construction for the past ten months. New ideas combed from theatres all over the country have been taken advantage of in the construction of The Winter Garden. The management states that the comfort and safety of patrons is guaranteed by many novel departures. The ceiling is high and broad, insuring ample air space, giving a pleasing effect to the eye and allowing the utmost in musical features.

The screen upon which the picture features will be projected is of a special non-reflecting construction which also gives a perspective to the photoplay scenes.

The battery of projecting machines is located at nearly right angles to the screen. These are of the latest type as are the stereopticon and spotlight lenses.

The heating and lighting power plants are away from the building thus insuring safety. Washed air, which is changed every few minutes, guarantees proper humidity preventing throat irritation, so common in many auditoriums.

A Hope Jones organ has been installed. The Hope Jones is the individual idea of Hope Jones, the world renowned organ architect, now deceased.

An elaborate marquise graces the front of the theatre, surmounted by a $5,000 electric sign which contains 2,500 individual lights.

Specially selected motion picture feature productions from the country's best producers are guaranteed by The Winter Garden management. These will be supplemented by comedy plays from filmdom's best comedians and art travelogues and the snappiest of news films.

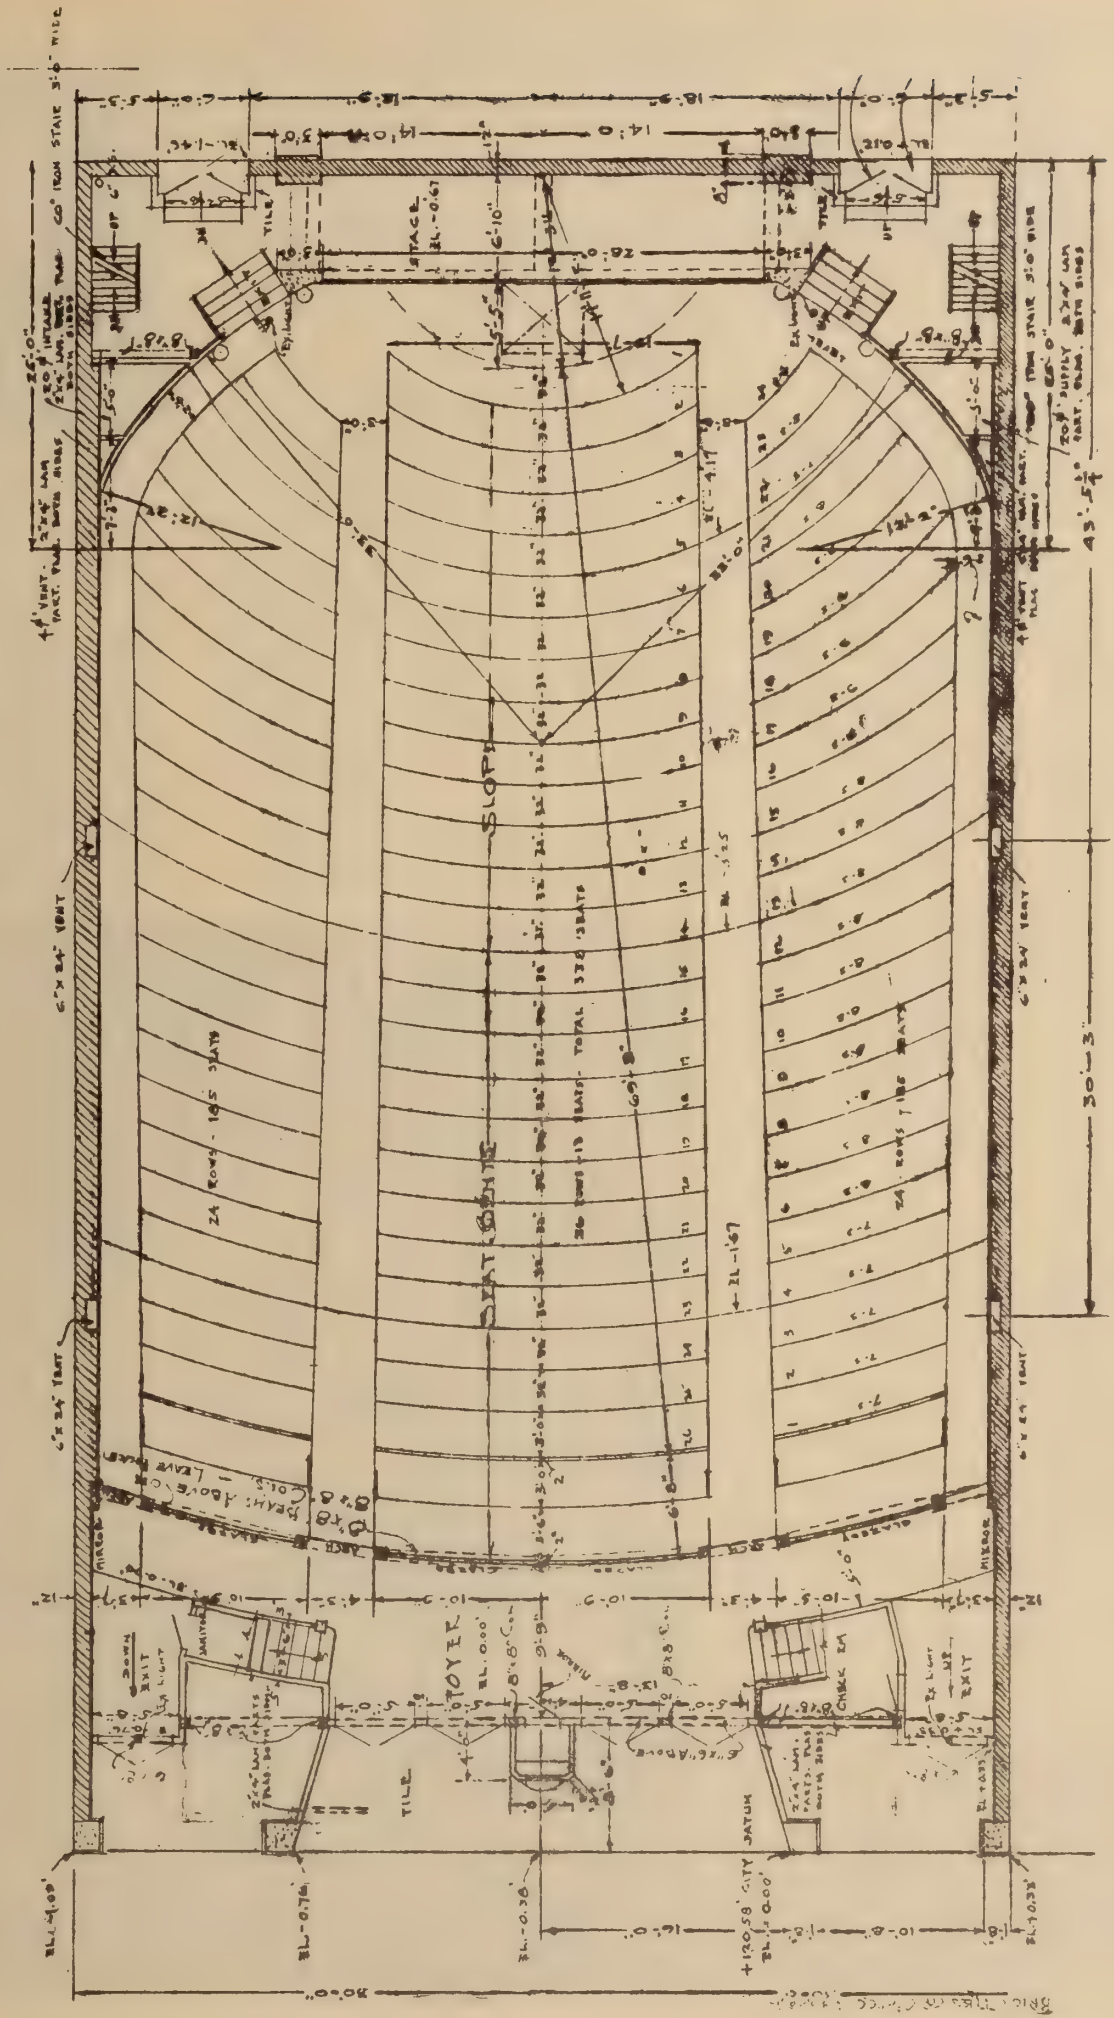
The Winter Garden Theatre is owned by the Progressive Company, composed entirely of Seattle persons, of which James Q. Clemmer is president, Edwin F. James is secretary and George De C. Myers treasurer are the principal stockholders. The theatre will be under the personal attention of Mr. Clemmer and Mr. James, with Mr. James as resident manager. All these men are well known, and well liked in Seattle and surrounding territory. Mr. Clemmer, known as "Jim," is president-manager of "Clemmer's" popular movie. "Jim" Clemmer because of his popularity is always called on, whenever some big city affair is to be held, to help out and he does. It seems odd that the two other principals, "Ed" James and "Georgie" Myers are the same kind, but this is one reason why, or rather three reasons why the "Winter Garden" will pay.

Facade of Winter Garden Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Mr. F. H. Fowler, the architect, says, "Within the last decade the motion picture has grown in popularity from a small beginning, until today it rivals the so-called legitimate play. This condition is particularly true on the Pacific Coast, where the motion picture has attained its greatest popularity.

The modern motion picture theatre has developed rapidly from a small hall with movable chairs to the great auditorium of today, in which no expense has been spared to provide a maximum of comfort and convenience for the audience.

There is a tendency at present to construct motion picture theatres having a moderate seating capacity and in which every seat is arranged to afford a good view of the screen. Seats from which only a poor or distorted view of the picture can be had have no place in an up-to-date auditorium.



In the design of the Winter Garden Theatre an effort has been made to obtain a maximum of "best view" seats, and to eliminate the poor seats. In every large auditorium there are a greater percentage of poor seats than in a medium-sized theatre. Good view lines mean satisfied patrons.

In the Winter Garden Theatre all seats are on the inclined floor in the main auditorium, the balcony being reserved for ladies' rest rooms, men's smoking rooms, lavatories and office space.

bons used in arc machines, but it must be remembered that in the arc machines there is an occasional extra added expense for the arc lamp parts, carbon, jaws, etc.

Also an item not to be overlooked is that with the Mazda Lamp there is practically no lens expense owing to the special prismatic lens being made of high heat resisting glass. While there is an occasional extra added expense for Plano Lenses in the arc machines

Winter Garden Full of Innovations

The fresh warm air enters the auditorium through a large grill in the ceiling. The foul air is removed at the floor level of the auditorium through wall ducts. The downward flow of fresh air comes in contact with the heads of the audience first, thus insuring the freshest air for breathing purposes. In summer the air is pre-cooled instead of heated.

In the Winter Garden Theatre the indirect system of lighting has been chosen for the reason that it produces a soft and subdued lighting effect and gives a more even diffusion of the light without any glare. Satisfactory lighting conditions add much to the effect of the decorative scheme and to the comfort of the patrons.

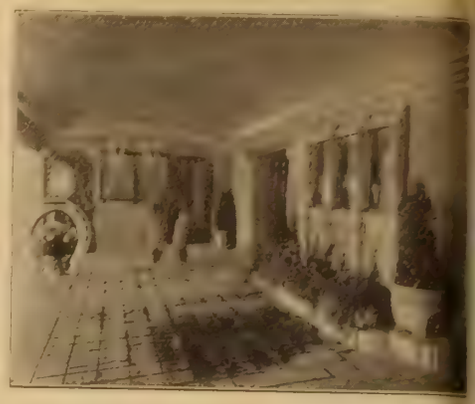
A large pipe organ located above the stage and directly behind the grill work in the ceiling cove will furnish the latest music. The location and arrangement of the big organ is such as to deliver a large volume of sound high above the audience. This installation is calculated to have excellent acoustic results in any part of the auditorium.

Among the many innovations to be found in the new Winter Garden Theatre are two special retiring rooms on the mezzanine floor, from which view of the photoplay may be had through plate glass partitions.

One of these parlors, the one on the right of the foyer, is exclusively for the women patrons. It immediately adjoins the spacious rest rooms and is furnished with cozy sofas and telephones and furnishes a view of the audiences as well as the screen. These seats are not specially priced, but are accessible to all.

The parlor on the left of the foyer is given over exclusively to the men and will be used as a smoking room. As in the women's parlor, there will be telephones and cozy seats. The special ventilation takes care of the smoke and the parlor is separated from the main theatre room by plate glass, through which the smokers will view the projected pictures.

An especially attractive view of the hand-painted walls and murals is to be had from these two special rooms. A maid will be in attendance in the ladies' parlor.



The latest developments in theatre seating in this country have been introduced in Seattle in the seating equipment of the new Winter Garden Theatre. During the last few years there has been a marked advance in design, comfort and luxuriousness of motion picture theatre seats.

All of the seats in the Winter Garden Theatre were furnished and installed by the Northwest School Furniture Company, representing the American Seating Company of New York and Chicago.

It is pointed out by the local distributors that the Winter Garden seats were designed for comfort primarily, while at the same time they follow correct architectural lines as carried out in the interior design of the theatre. All seats are equipped with full coil springs, heavily padded and upholstered. The finish throughout is in soft gray, harmonizing with the interior decorative scheme.

Steam is furnished from an outside power plant, so there is no fire of any kind in the building. This steam after entering the building passes through large coils under the stage and is forced by fan up to the roof of the building and discharges into the theatre through the large grill in the center of the ceiling. Direct radiation is furnished for the offices, rest rooms and store at the front of the building.

Probably no other phase of the construction of a modern theatre is more important than that of adequate heating and ventilation, assuring uniform radiation of heat and constantly revitalized air.

Lobby of Mission theatre, Los Angeles

Not the least attractive feature of t Winter Garden Theatre is the artistic i terior decorating. The walls are done a mottled effect in creams and brown, r lieved by a series of very artistic oil lan scapes, all of which were handpainted a local artist.

The most advanced model Simplex pr jector has been installed in absolutely fi proof quarters, assuring patrons of t Winter Garden Theatre the "last wor in projection. "Kismet," which intr duced the theatre, afforded a splendid t of the projection facilities of the theat

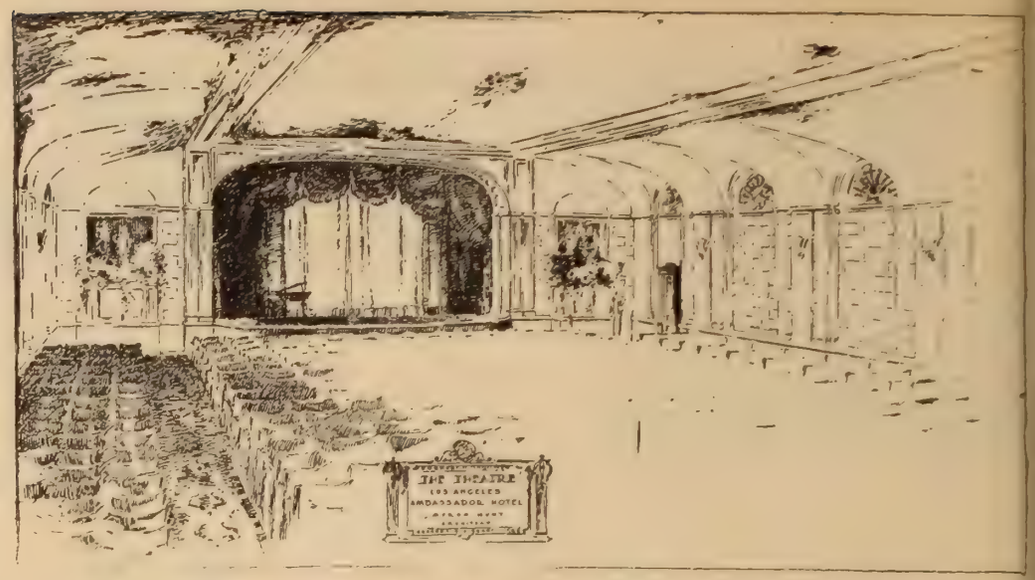
Green Bay to Have New Theatre

A NEW motion picture theatre is now in the first stages of construction in Green Bay, Wis., under the direction of Saxe Amusement Company of Milwaukee. The theatre will cost approximately $50,000 when completed. It is expected that the opening performances will be March 1, 1921.



In building the new Green Bay theatre, the Saxe company brings the fifth motion picture house to Green Bay. The new theatre is being built on the site formerly occupied by the Royal theatre, which was destroyed by fire last spring.

The contract for the erection of the new Saxe house, which has not been named as yet, has been awarded to the H. J. Selmer company, prominent Wisconsin theatre builders. The design for the structure was drawn up by H. W. Carr, architect. According to the plans, the theatre will be 44 by 160 feet. It will be a one-story building, and all of the seats will be placed on the messanine floor. It is estimated that the seating capacity of the new house will be in the proximity of 1,000. A large foyer and outer lobby, as well as rest rooms, are planned, and all of the features used in the Milwaukee owned Saxe houses will be incorporated in the New Green Bay theatre.

E. C. Bostick, a member of the Saxe managerial forces and former manager of the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, is personally supervising the work in Green Bay. According to Mr Bostick, the new theatre will receive the benefit of the metropolitan innovations which the Saxe company is using in Milwaukee at the Strand, Alhambra and Princess theatres, which they own. A thirty-five piece orchestra will be brought to Green Bay for all special presentations. The full Milwaukee Strand and Alhambra orchestras will be sent to this city regularly to entertain. Edward J. Weisfeldt, manager of the Strand theatre in Milwaukee and originator of the prologue idea in the Milwaukee theatres, will spend two days a week in Green Bay in arranging prologues, song numbers and specialties here.

Advices from Milwaukee state that the new Saxe theatre in Green Bay will be built along the same lines on which the new Milwaukee Saxe theatre, the Gargoyle, is being built. Ornate outer accouterments will be used to enhance the beauty of the new cinema palace, and no money will be spared in exploitation of pictures. The lobby will be arranged to permit lavish exploitation. Members of the Saxe amusement advertising force will visit Green Bay each week to write the advertisements and arrange the publicity and exploitation for the theatre.

First-run Associated First National pictures will be shown at the new Green Bay theatre. The Saxe amusement company holds a First National franchise for the Milwaukee territory, and these features exclusively will be shown. Short subjects, including news weekly and comedies, will also be on the program, as well as the orchestral presentations, prologues and specialty numbers.

The architect draws a sketch of the theatre auditorium which is to be a part of the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles

A Model of Beauty and Construction

THE beautiful new Loew's State theatre, Memphis, Tenn., opened to the public on October 7th, is a model of construction as well as beauty. The State theatre was built at a reputed cost of $1,000,000 and is said to be the largest in the South. It is located in the very heart of the shopping district, and easily accessible from every car point in Memphis and outlying districts.

The lobby, facing Main street, leads through two grand staircases to the mezzanine floor and into a wide, sweeping orchestra floor and balcony, giving a roomy, airy effect and an instant relief vastly different to the crowded, close conditions of so many Southern theatres.

The color scheme is gray finished with gold, with beautiful tapestries and hangings to match. The decorative art work has attracted unusual attention, for many months were consumed in their completion throughout the lobby, the foyer and main mezzanine. Lighting fixtures of a three-color arrangement, very soft and soothing in effect, blend harmoniously with the subdued yet dignified background, giving an indirect illumination.

There is a beautifully appointed ladies' room, and a pretty little lounging room where one may meet friends, write a note, or just rest and wait until there are good seats available. Blowers located under the floor first wash the air before it is driven into the auditorium through ducts, it is then circulated through the playhouse by side and wall propellers, and then sucked up and out of the building by means of huge air drives situated at the ceiling line. A modern vacuum system insures perfect sanitation at all times.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

The Incadescent Lamp for Stereopticon Service

Information Compiled by H. F. Barnes Lighting Service Department

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easily understandable language.

Field for Stereopticon Lamps

The Mazda "C" lamp has practically a monopoly on the stereopticon field. In days gone by, without the aid of a simply operated, portable, light weight stereopticon, the average lecturer or entertainer had limited means of demonstrating detailed points to his audience. Today, instead of a long description, he says, "To illustrate what I mean," presses a button. and, if his slides have been well chosen, he can convey precisely what is in his mind to the minds of his listeners.

Nature in all her marvelous colorings, detailed manufacturing in all the varied industries, in fact, anything of which a photograph or drawing can be made is a fit subject for the screen through the aid of a stereopticon machine.

Time was when large cumbersome drawings, blue prints, to which references must be made, were filed away in drawers or cabinets and necessitated much bother and inconvenience when they were to be taken out. Today the drawing can be put into slide form and thrown upon a screen, and viewed by a much larger number of persons with more ease and comfort.

In fact, practically all visual instruction and its allied arts are dependent upon a light source of high brilliancy and as such the stereopticon type of lamp fulfills the need for a large part of the field.

History of Development

The use of an illuminant to project the image of a cutout or a transparency is centuries old. The most successful light source prior to the introduction of the highly concentrated Mazda lamp and the one which is still in use with many kinds of apparatus, was the carbon arc. The arc came into existence about 1800.

The arc was of course limited to places where electric current was available, and so both the lime and the acetylene flame were extensively used, especially by traveling lecturers. As electric current became more universal, the use of the carbon arc spread. But there was still felt a need for an illuminant which could be operated by anyone—i.e., did not require a special operator—a lamp of low amperage, and of such a voltage that it would be tapped out directly from any lighting socket.

The beginning of the incandescent lamp dates back to October 21, 1879, when Thomas A. Edison made his first successful lamp. The filament was made of paper—a carbon filament. It was not until slightly over a decade ago, however, that the tungsten filament was brought out and not until several years after that until a coiled concentrated filament was introduced, thus giving a lamp applicable to stereopticon work. The first coiled concentrated filaments operated in a vacuum. The present filaments operate in an inert gas and the lamp is known as a Mazda "C." The vacuum lamp is a Mazda "B" lamp. (A semi-concentrated carbon lamp was introduced prior to this, but on account of its low efficiency could not be used, except for very small pictures.)

The ordinary Mazda vacuum lamps, such as are in our homes, would not be applicable for projection. As will be shown later, a concentrated light source of high brilliancy, i.e., high candle-power is needed. So the field of projection remained practically untouched until a concentrated highly efficient light source was produced.

Principal Parts of a Stereopticon Lantern

The component parts of a stereopticon lantern are first, the light source, which generally consists of a stereopticon lamp and a mirror placed behind the lamp; a condensing lens, composed of one or more lenses; an accurately ground projection lens; the housing, flexible bellows, and a slide carrier.

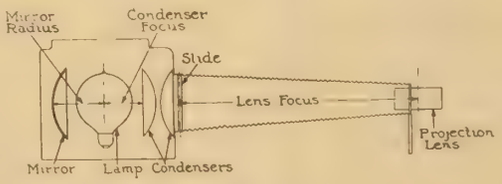

Fig. 1

The Principal Parts of a Stereopticon Lantern: Mirror, Lamp, Condenser, Slide and Slide Carrier, Projection Lens. Notice the housing which covers up the light source, and the bellows which encloses the light beam from the slide to the projection lens

The mirror is placed behind the lamp to catch the rays of light in that direction and redirect them toward the condenser, so that they will pass through the slide, thence through the projection lens and subsequently on to the screen.

The condenser is so called, since it bends or condenses the rays of light falling upon it from the lamp, so that after passing through the slide they will enter the projection lens. The distance it is placed in front of the lamp is determined mainly by its combined back focus. As will be explained later the lamp filament is very rarely placed at the exact focus of the condenser.

Showing by Photograph the Principal Parts of a Stereopticon Lantern; Mirror, a 400-Watt Lamp, the Condenser System and Projection Lens

The projection lens, which is placed at a distance in front of the slide, approximately, corresponding to its focus, gathers the rays of light coming through the slide and projects them upon the screen. Thus any image or picture at the position the slide occupies is duplicated and enlarged on the screen.

A housing, usually of sheet metal, is placed around the lamp, mirror and condenser to shield the lamp from the eye and keep the room dark.

Again, since the distance from the slide (which is directly in front of the condenser) is relatively long (varying according to the focus of the lens) and therefore, since there may be possibility of stray light from the slide or condenser, a flexible housing or bellows, as it is known, must be used to enclose the light beam as it passes from the slide to the projection lens. This bellows must be flexible, that is capable of being shortened or lengthened, since the distance from the slide to the projection lens varies according to the distance from the slide to the screen.

For example, in a very small room, the distance from the slide to projection lens may be at its maximum; in a longer hall with a long throw this distance will be considerably shortened.

A double slide carrier, placed as before indicated serves to hold one slide at a time in position in front of the condenser. While one slide is being shown another slide can be slipped into the empty section of the slide carrier and when ready the second slide takes the place of the first,—the first slide can then be removed and the third slide put into its place, etc.

Theory of Projection as Applied to Stereopticon Machines

The Condensing Lens

Projected light has to do with light rays that are accurately controlled, either by the aid of a lens or of a polished reflecting surface. An ordinary reflector in which house or industrial lights are placed, is not considered a device for projecting light. It, of course, controls the light to a more or less rough degree.

Shutters for A C.

F. J., No. 1094: Which is the best shutter for a. c.? I have a two-wing shutter and there is a flicker.

Reply: The two-wing shutter is considered best for a. c. If you have a bad flicker you should examine the shutter blades to see if they are correctly proportioned. Perhaps by widening or narrowing the flicker blade (providing the cut-off blade has been rightly designed) you will be able to reduce the trouble.

A. Frederickson: What is the exact reason for the use of the two-wing shutter in place of the triple wing when using alternating current?

Reply: This can be answered by means of simple mathematics.

Suppose the machine to be running at normal speed of 1 turn per second, which means 1 foot of film or 16 frames passing by the aperture during that same time.

With a three-wing shutter, the screen goes dark 3 times for each frame, or 48 times a second.

Now if a. c. is used it is probably 60-cycle current, that is the current becomes zero two times 60 or 120 times a second. At each of these points the arc, while it does not cease entirely is greatly dimmed. Thus we have a shutter which interferes completely with screen illumination 48 times a second and a light source attempting to do the same thing 120 times a second.

From the foregoing you can see that if the machine were to be run at normal speed at all times and the generator at the power house kept up to speed so that the frequency was unvarying there would seldom be trouble from flicker, at least from synchronism. Only once in five seconds would there be complete synchronism between between shutter and current frequency. Although this condition might give the effect of a slowly moving wave, it probably would not occur often enough to be disagreeable or injurious to the eyes.

So much for operation under normal conditions. Due to variations in voltage (which would affect the speed of a motor-driven machine), and in frequency, normal operation is seldom possible. Frequency will often drop to 59 or rise to 61, perhaps for an instant only or perhaps for a considerable period. Voltage varies on the best of supply lines.

Now suppose that the frequency is maintained constant and the machine speed is increased due either to the nature of picture shown or to the need for more rapid action. Instead of a foot a second, the speed is increased 25 per cent or the same as 20 frames a second. With our three-wing shutter there would be 3 x 20 or 60 periods of darkness per second.

Since our frequency is 60, you can see that the current alterations and shutter are in exact time. What would happen under these conditions will be left to your imagination.

From the foregoing you can readily see that if the wings of the shutter are reduced in number by one, the danger of synchronism (or stroboscopic effect) is eliminated as at no time under a wide range of operating conditions would the dark periods caused by the blades coincide with the zero points of the current.

With a two-wing shutter you are very apt to get a certain amount of flicker unless the machine is overspeeded.

T. & D. Projectors Feature in Newspaper

It's a rare treat to listen to an outsider describe a motion picture projector especially if the writer of the description happens to be a newspaper man who takes his facts and clothes them in fanciful language. Listen to this clipping from the Stockton (Cal.) Daily Independent:

> Machines with souls.
> Such are the two new motion picture projectors recently installed at the T. & D. theatre in Stockton. When motion pictures first proved their popularity with American audiences the layman was heard to refer to what the "operator does" with a "He does it with a crank."
> Automatic features make the machines almost self-operative, the attendants simply "loading" the film magazines and maintaining the apparatus. When the layman watches one of the machines, his natural conclusion is that the masters of mechanics have breathed almost a breath of life into the contrivances of steel. Practically all of the most marked inventions of the last five years in the motion picture projector field are said to be incorporated in the two Powers Camerographs, Type E, installed at the Stockton photoplay house.
> Equipped with roller pin intermittent movements, the machines assure steady, clear pictures without flicker or cause for eye strain, bringing out every little detail as developed into the films. The machines are equipped with Peerless arc controls, elements of the souls, which maintain a perfect arc at all times, thereby eliminating the objectionable shadows and colored light which so often appears at the bottom of the screens.
> Another feature is that which affords protection from fire. In case the portion of the film being used is inflamed an automatic knife severs the strip and drops a door over the entrance to the magazine, saving the sheet remaining on the reels.

DeBrie Cameras Equipped with Automatic Dissolving Shutters Arrive from France

This Feature is But One of Many Found on Latest Model of This Popular Camera

THERE is no reason why that statement of the cameraman, "If the DeBrie only had an automatic dissolving shutter it would give the other studio cameras a run for their money," should be heard again. The DeBrie factories in France, which were closed down insofar as the camera output was concerned, by the war, have not been lying idle since the beginning of 1920 and while rumors of an interesting nature were seeping through to this country nothing of particular definiteness was heard until of a sudden a new model DeBrie was shipped across. Adolph Senner, manager of the motion picture department of Herbert & Huesgen, New York City, was the first to call the Editor's attention to the new equipment, and his cameras he believed were the first to arrive in this country. An examination of them brought out several new features besides the shutter.

The DeBrie with front lifted. Notice ground glass in temporary position in aperture

But first a few words about the DeBrie automatic dissolving shutter. It has been designed to fade out in 3½ feet and accomplishes this whatever the shutter opening, be it the maximum of 170° or the minimum. Furthermore after each fadeout it locks automatically. The lack of a shutter of this type has long been the DeBrie's greatest drawback at least as far as its use in regular studio production is concerned.

The second feature is the focussing device by which it is now possible to focus directly onto a ground glass. This is done by perforating the film and sliding a ground glass in position behind the perforation. This feature in conjunction with the new mask box allows the operator to place his mask in the exact position he desires it to occupy and to check up the location with exactness.

With this latest model three lenses are supplied in a quick changing mount which will take any size lens up to 10". The changing of a lens is rapid—a rod is slid slightly to one side, a bayonet catch turned slightly and the lens is free.

One other feature that will be appreciated by the cameraman who abhors the metric scale is the footage recorder, which registers in good American feet instead of the Continental meters. This change was made for the sole purpose of meeting the demands of the American market and as such will find the favor of American cinematographers.

Users of the older DeBries will remember how the elevated front was held in place and prevented from suddenly dropping by some homemade catch or even a length of cord. In the new model this makeshift has been made unnecessary by a special catch which seizes and holds the front when the latter is lifted to position.

Crank side of DeBrie

Realizing that these cameras will find application in all countries and in all sorts of climates they have been constructed throughout of 5 ply teak wood.

With all these additional features and improvements the camera has not been increased either in size or in weight. It weighs complete—without tripod—just 17 pounds.

Mr. Sennor concluded his demonstration with the statement that other things of an interesting nature to cameramen were on their way to America. Notice of them will be found in the NEWS as they appear.

Special Devices to Photograph Aurora Borealis

By use of special camera devices, it is planned to picture night scenes in the ice fields of the Pacific Ocean such as never before have been attempted. Under the personal supervision of Mr. Wilson and George Elwood Jenks, who prepared the scenario for Metro's "The Woman Who Went Away"—both veterans of the far Canadian woods—it is planned to reproduce scenic effects that will include giant icebergs, limitless ice fields, a ship wreck and the aurora borealis.

Tinted film and a modification of color photography will be used in obtaining beautiful photographic effects. Much of the action of the picture occurs in the ice fields, thus giving an opportunity for original direction and bizarre camera effects.

Wesley Ruggles, who is directing the new special feature, has striven for the unique, both in the handling of his players and the big interior and exterior settings that will serve as a background for the story. As a result, the ficient unto itself; but in the case of the varied program, the prologue seeks to establish a state of mind in advance of the picture. That's what it is supposed to do, but only the good saints above can figure out what most of the prologues are accomplishing in this direction. You may remember in a recent issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS I directly touched upon this opportunity of the prologue to "channelize" the minds of the audience, and concentrate it upon some theme of the story, some kind of emotion, etc.

The second and perhaps the more noticeable secret is the use of the character theme.

The third secret is the way in which ideas, emotions or words can be accentuated and intensified by music. Thus the high society spirit may be contrasted in a very decided way with the simple country scenes—by the music quite as much as by the pictures. In the overdrawn bits, the music can be just as much a burlesque. Oftentimes the orchestra outdoes the actors in its delineation of an idea. What cannot be registered by the film (little shades of meaning) are clearly defined by the instruments. One may dovetail seeing with hearing. If some inventor succeeds in synchronizing a phonograph to speak with the screen, the result will not be as satisfying as the Wagner method. Did you ever for one moment think that the plain people in the audience care for the words the actor speaks. All they want is to get the idea when the idea registers, the auditor translates it into his own kind of phraseology and verbiage.

So I say, meet Richard Wagner.

He sits there in his big chair, writing on his opera, "Parsifal." On his head lolls the velvet cap, falling over to one side. The spectacles are set firmly on the firm nose. The forehead rises high and intellectual. The hair is bushy—at the back; a little suggestion of beard is on the side of his face. The cleft chin is forward and prominent, stubborn, obstinate. How I get the impression I don't know, but something about the face makes me think of an old seaman, who has known the roughest tides. The eyes are deep and heavy lines are on the forehead from frowning and thought, with high hills drawn over the eyes. The cheeks are marked ferociously. The mouth—it is always seeming to say, "No quarter." An old captain, at Gloucester, I knew looked exactly like him. But there is an indolence about his clothes which suggest the very opposite. Soft collar, rich cravat, velvet jacket, slippers, a scent of perfume.

The room in which he sits is hung with heavy draperies, the floors are covered with thick rugs. The whole place is adorned with something that depicts the voluptuary at his worst.

As he sits writing his music, the lips going tighter, the jaws are working incessantly, grinding, grinding. He is a little man, but you don't realize it, so straight does he hold himself. He passes a theme and pauses a moment. As he awaits his inspiration he rubs his hands against a silk cloth, doing it with evident physical pleasure.

The Music Forum

Dear Sir:

I think that a conference along the lines you suggest, is a splendid idea, and whoever is responsible for conceiving it and undertaking to bring it to pass, deserves the hearty thanks of all concerned.

Will bring the matter to the attention of the members at our next meeting, and at this time feel perfectly safe of assuring you of our hearty cooperation in the purpose of this conference.

Very truly yours,
E. C. MILLS,
Chairman, Executive Board,
Music Publishers' Protective Association,
New York City.

My Dear Mr. I:

I have just started a series of articles in my music column in the NEWARK LEDGER on "Music in the Movies." I am going to write an article every Sunday on some phase of the subject.

PHILIP GORDON,
Newark, N. J.

Dear Mr. I:

I want to take advantage of your columns so that we can welcome into our ranks, Gordon Reid, production manager of the New Branford Theatre, Newark, N. J.

I believe that it is fitting that we who are interested in the advancement of music in picture theatres should do everything within our power to aid men like Mr. Reid, in setting them up as an example of successful showmanship, that others may follow.

This week Mr. Reid presented a prologue for "Passion," which to my mind is an incomparable prologue for this picture, from the three angles of light, music and action.

I want those of us whose cause is your cause—Music for the Masses—to welcome to our ranks, on behalf of our soon to be organized conference—Gordon Reid and the men who are making his achievements possible by their vision and sound business ethics—the Fabian of New Jersey, who own the Branford and several other theatres. A wonderful combination in a wonderful theatre.

HYMAN S. KRAFT,
New York Concert League.

Motion Picture News:

It is with great interest that I read your insertion that appear in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS regarding the Improvement of Motion Picture Music.

Your idea of a Music Picture Conference is great and will no doubt mark a new era toward the advancement of Better Music in the Motion Picture Theatre especially throughout the South. I will consider it quite an honor to participate at your conference, and you can rest assured of my cooperation in every way. I will certainly be in the Big City, January 24 without fail.

LYNWOOD M. WILLIAMSON,
Director of Music,
Rialto and Rivoli Theatres,
Columbia, S.

Gregory Lectures Cameramen on Fillers

THE Motion Picture Photographers Association of 220 West 42nd Street, Candler Building, an organization composed of the foremost studio cameramen in the East, have just established themselves with the aim to raise the standard of the Art of Photography in motion pictures. Last Wednesday evening, Mr. Carl L. Gregory, the well known motion picture photographer, writer and instructor, gave a lecture in the meeting rooms of the organization, on Filter and Color Screens used in Cinematography. Almost all the members attended and as the lecture was well up to date with the latest apparatus on view to test out, the members well appreciated the talk as it was highly instructive. No doubt the knowledge gained by the members present will be the means of putting forth some new ideas into forthcoming productions that have been hitherto unknown.

The rapid strides in camera construction and improvement and the ultimate result, better photography, have all been through the earnest endeavors of the cinematographer to reach out for new ideas and attain something new and novel and pleasing to the eye and to meet the demand of the public for better pictures.

The Association holds members of only the highest order as to ability and character and membership is only through invitation.

Ned Van Buren is president; George Peters, vice president; Edward Wynard, second vice president; Larry Williams, treasurer; Harry Keepers, secretary; J. C. Bitzer, recording secretary, and Walter Arthur, representative. The board of governors consists of such well known cameramen as Oliver Marsh, Horace Plimpton, Charles Downs, Paul Allen, Hal Sintzenich, Al Liguori, Ernest Haller and Carl L. Gregory. Among the prominent members are William Bitzer of the Griffith studios, and Fred Chaston also of the Griffith studios. Max Schneider, well feature photographer.

"BLIND WIVES"
(Fox)

Another Episodic Picture of Certain Appeal

WHATEVER success the Fox production "While New York Sleeps" enjoyed throughout the country should be duplicated by "Blind Wives." For this production is modeled along the same lines. It is enacted by Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott and Harry Sothern, the memorable trio of "While New York Sleeps," and it is built up of a series of episodes, each one distinct by itself. Unlike its predecessor, however, which had three episodes, "Blind Wives" has five, which are connected by the main theme—a theme adapted from Edward Knoblock's play "My Lady's Dress."

The audience appeal is varied and certain, for there is an elaborate fashion show to start off with; pathos is the keynote of the second playlet; sex appeal is dominant in the third; heart interest fills the fourth; and melodrama, vigorous and climactic, marks the fifth and last.

The picture begins by depicting the extravagant wife who "does not dress to live, but who lives to dress." She is apparently about to sell her honor for the newest creation when she sees in a dream the tragedies caused by the making of her piece of finery. Then comes the little cripple of the slums who makes the paper flowers. We see the depth of her despair when she sacrifices her golden hair and disappears in order that her sister may be married. The history of the sable fur that graced my lady's dress follows. It shows the Russian trapper, and his slow-minded, sordid wife, who is unfaithful to him. The story of the silk is told by a real human tale of the French weavers. Lastly there is a story of the manikin who is forced to kill her employer, the modiste, to save her honor.

Entertainment is present throughout, but as a piece of logic, it is all decidedly unconvincing. The foreword, from Ruskin, preaches against silks and lace, but how silks and lace can be blamed for the girl's crooked back, or the Russian wife's unfaithfulness, or the French weaver's fondness for his bottle, is rather hard to see. But logic is secondary in the box office.

The work of Miss Taylor, MacDermott and Sothern is splendid. Their ability is accentuated by the fact that they are seen in such widely different parts. Miss Taylor's characterizations are remarkable. It is hard to believe that the luxury-loving American wife, and the dull-witted, passionate Russian are the same girl. MacDermott is best as the French weaver. Sothern has fewer opportunities. Director Charles Brabin deserves a great deal of credit. His series of closeups in the taxicab are impressive and clever, but he failed to bring out soon enough the fact that the girl of the slums was a cripple. Some of the titles are clever satire. The fact that two different men play the modiste is extremely noticeable, however. The photography is only average.

We have only one fault to find with "Blind Wives"—it has one episode too many. An excess of even good short stories will grow tiresome, and the same is true of too many screen playlets at one setting.—Length, 6,376 feet.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A special treat is in store for the patrons of the ———— theatre on ————, when the feature attraction will be "Blind Wives," the William Fox special production, which is destined to be one of the most talked of pictures of the year.

Mr. Fox had the honor of creating a new type of photoplay in "While New York Sleeps." Breaking away from the stereotyped form of screen entertainment, he presented a series of distinct episodes joined togther into one perfect superproduction. He has duplicated and added to his success in "Blind Wives." Enacted by the same cast, Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott and Harry Sothern, his latest production is going to surpass "While New York Sleeps,"

"THE SILVER LINING"
(Metro)

Interesting Crook Play Brings Jewel Carmen Back to the Screen

ONE expects something quite daring from Roland West since witnessing his stage play, "The Unknown Purple," and his contribution to the screen here, "The Silver Lining," may be said to be novel and out of the ordinary run of crook pictures. He calls attention to the fact in his advertising matter that the offering is founded upon facts. Not taking any credit away from him on this point it must be said that the story has been seen before, although with marked variations.

If "The Silver Lining" contained an ordinary story, the fact that it reintroduces Jewel Carmen to picturegoers again after a long absence, would be sufficient foundation to attract them. This young woman has learned a great deal of expression since her first days of stardom. She fits her role like the proverbial glove fits the hand and her pantomime is always effective. The shading of her portrayal—the jumping from grave to gay—the delightful mannerisms—these are certain to bring her back quickly in public favor. Mr. West tells his story in narrative form, the theme of which is based upon the regeneration of a girl's soul. He places considerable stress upon the fact that a criminal is made no more from environment than from the forces of heredity. A trick of fate is used to emphasize his argument.

Two girls of an orphan asylum are adopted—one by a family of wealth and refinement—the other by a family steeped in sin and squalor. Thus the heroine is depicted as never having a chance. Not realizing the sinfulness of her crimes she has no scruples about her conduct until a young man interests her through his book. He is detailing a story, the leading character of which might have stepped from "The Angel's" shoes. He is endeavoring to find a plan of regeneration when the force of his logic is brought vividly home to the girl. There is a counter-conflict which isn't concerned with human nature, but with a lovers' quarrel. The hero has responded to the attractive crook because his sweetheart had provoked him. The latter is the other orphan child. This looks like coincidence. But facts are sometimes stranger than fiction. In all "The Silver Lining" is well told, carries the utmost in suspense, is well charged with surprises and good incident and is very capably acted. There is a twist and turn in nearly every part of the footage, and though the outcome is anticipated such a course does not rob it of its moving quality. The picture bears the stamp of rich detail and colorful backgrounds and considerable money has been expended. It should interest every picturegoer who sees it.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Silver Lining," a Metro production, starring Jewel Carmen, is a picture filled with surprises which shows in an extremely novel and entertainiing manner the adventures of a feminine crook who in her battle with love and law has some wonderful experiences. The picture comes to the ———— theatre next ————. The plot deals with the theory of heredity and proves that there are exceptions to every rule of life. The story is said to be based upon actual experiences.

Miss Carmen plays the part of "The Angel," who is adopted as an orphan by a family of crooks and taught the ways of crime. There is proof here that heredity doesn't figure so much as environment. The beautiful crook co-operates with a confidence man and has no pangs of conscience until she meets the author of a book, the leading character of which, is a feminine crook. "The Angel" falls in love with him and finds regeneration. The picture carries a series of highly exciting incidents which always measure out action and suspense.

PROGRAM READER

Something unique in the line of picture plays will be presented at the ———— theatre next ———— when "The Silver Lining" is shown with Jewel Carmen as the star. The novel manner in which this gripping story, founded upon real life, is presented, is certain to arouse the interest of every type of picturegoer. "The Silver Lining" is a story which deals with the widely divergent careers of two girls, one brought up as a crook and the other as a society girl. As the lovely crook whose winsome ways prove a ready foil to her victims, Miss Carmen gives a wonderfully attractive portrayal. Her support is of the all-star brand and is entirely competent. "The Silver Lining" is written and directed by Roland West, a playwright of distinction.

CATCH LINES

Is a thief a victim of heredity or is his life of crime due to environment? This question is argued in the exciting melodrama, "The Silver Lining."

GIRL IN THE WEB, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET ..... JULY 8
"A splendid production from all angles."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"A good story. It drew well. Two days to average business." "Fair. Don't think Blanche Sweet belongs in these silly namby-pamby roles. She is one of the best emotional actresses on the screen—but wasted in drivel like this. Box-office only fair."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON..... DEC. 1
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY ..... JAN.
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week."

"Good production given rather illogical story."—M. P. News.

GOOD REFERENCES (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE ..... OCT. 1
"Stars popularity may get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought crowded houses as do all Talmadge pictures, either Constance or Norma." "Above the ordinary Constance Talmadge productions, and was well patronized." "Pleases star's followers. Opened to excellent business."

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST..... DEC.
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A poor picture. Average box-office receipts."

"Star gives splendid portrayal of mis-led girl."—M. P. News.

HALF A CHANCE (JESSE D. HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST) OCT. 9
"Well acted and directed, but development suffers."—M. P. News.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART ..... OCT. 9
"Favorite formula given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—'Regarded this as just a fair picture and drew average houses." "The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business." "This picture pleased. Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card."

HEADIN' HOME (YANKEE-KESSEL & BAUMAN-STATE RIGHTS) BABE RUTH ..... OCT.
"Babe Ruth makes debut and scores a hit."—M. P. News.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST..... DEC. 1

"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.

"Civil war romance looks good as a picture."—M. P. News.

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run." "Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses, which were pretty well crowded." "Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out." "An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week." "One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house."

HELP WANTED—MALE (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET ..... OCT.
"Too light and vapid for a five-reeler."—M. P. News.

"THE SPENDERS"
(Hampton-Hodkinson)

Quite Interesting Picture Made From Best Seller

HARRY LEON WILSON'S celebrated story of frenzied finance, "The Spenders," has reached the screen with not many of its entertaining highlights absent. Indeed, Benjamin Hampton has achieved quite an interesting picture from the colorful tale, though it must be said in all fairness that the yarn is more satisfactory in the original. For one thing the characterization is painted better in the book. The contrasts are brought out vividly. In the picture the director has emphasized the plot, which carrying so much detail, is enough to excite the imagination. In pointing its conflict, its melodramatic incident, the humor is not so abundant either. But it carries enough of that precious element to give it balance.

"The Spenders" must have made quite a difficult story to translate into terms of the screen because of its abundant details, its characterization and its vivid and picturesque dialogue and descriptive matter. Those in charge certainly deserve praise for incorporating the gist of the story and giving it to players who know the meaning of interpretation. Particularly successful is Joseph Dowling in the part of the humorous uncle who puts it over Wall Street by playing exactly contrary to Hoyle. This sterling actor shows here that he is fully competent to enact roles of a humorous character despite the fact that his "miracle man" will linger in the memory for its pathos. There are romances here, the principle one carried on by Niles Welch and Claire Adams, and it forms the chief conflict of the action.

This conflict finds emphasis through the villainy of a Wall Street wolf, played by Robert McKim in his customary suave and finished manner. The story is told principally against interiors and for a wordy tale the picture can never be called tiresome. The humor is gained from the uncle's breezy manner and style of speech as well as from his conflict with his nephew. Since this story has been read by the masses, doubtless its obviousness will be reflected upon more than one countenance, yet it contains enough adventure—enough romance—enough color to make its second reading highly satisfactory. The lighting is not entirely praiseworthy. "The Spenders" is not the "knockout" that the book was, but it should go well almost everywhere.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A screen version of Harry Leon Wilson"s famous story, "The Spenders," will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— and ———— . This tale is excellent material for adaptation since it carries a number of valuable ingredients. Many consider it the author's greatest work. A story of frenzied finance and romance, it established Mr. Wilson as a recognized figure in the fiction world. As a picture it may be said to be equally as entertaining. An all-star cast has been selected to interpret the colorful characters and the crisp and sparkling plot—a cast that includes such names as Claire Adams, Joseph Dowling, Niles Welch and Robert McKim.

It is a story of Wall Street and how a party of Westerners come to New York to play the money market. It takes up in amusing detail how the youth of the party is fleeced by one of the "Wolves" of the street and how his grandfather shows the method of being successful by playing the market exactly contrary to Hoyle. The picture builds in interesting episodes which always hold the attention. The direction of Jack Conway is praiseworthy and the offering may be said to be on a par with the other Benjamin Hampton productions.

PROGRAM READER

Harry Leon Wilson's famous story has been adapted to the screen and under its original title will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— . Patrons are certain to find in the offering rich entertainment for the book was a sure winner. The film version follows the narrative in all its colorful details. A cast of all-star proportions has been selected to interpret the feature. With such names as Joseph Dowling, Niles Welch, Claire Adams, and Robert McKim lending expression, screengoers are certain to find worthy interpretation, "The Spenders" is a lively tale of frenzied finance and offers an appealing romance in the bargain. Remember.. At the ———— next ———— .

SUGGESTIONS

Here is an author who is well known to the American fiction public. His stories have always been in wide demand. So play up the fact that his best seller—the finest story he ever fashioned has been adapted to the screen. Bring out that it is equally as entertaining via the silver sheet as between the covers of a book. Tell that it is produced by Benjamin B. Hampton, the man responsible for "The Sagebrusher," "Riders of the Dawn,"' etc. Tell that it is a lively tale of Wall Street—a tale of frenzied finance and an excellent vein of romance. By all means play up the cast. Each and every one of the principal quartette is well known. Bill it as a most interesting comedy-drama. Use the covers of the book for a facsimile page for the papers.

CATCH LINES

He came from the West to fleece the moneyed lambs of Wall Street. But he didn't know how to play the game. See "The Spenders."

Remember Harry Leon Wilson's story, "The Spenders?" It comes to the ———— theatre as a picture. Don't miss it. Fully as entertaining.

"THE LURE OF CROONING WATER"
(Stoll-Pathe)

Interesting Exposition of Eternal Triangle

STOLL'S latest importation from England is based upon a somewhat orthodox representation of the eternal triangle, considering its theme. But the sponsors, taking into account that an old story can be refurbished with proper treatment, have contributed a picture which is effective for its dramatic exposition. The title sounds like an Indian love lyric and might be passed up by the disinterested passer-by. But he would do well to pay admission to the theatre which shows "The Lure of Crooning Water." He will see an effective argument for the home, told in scenes which are cumulative in action and suspense and which are forcefully interpreted by players equipped with genuine talent. There is no posing here.

Guy Newall, who plays the part of the trespasser against his own home, gives a remarkably finished performance. It is a difficult role, but he endows it with realities and humanities which might well be copied by more than one American actor. He is ideal for the part of the "young diamond in the rough" who is lured into an adventure with a gay charmer, and disillusioned to discover that he has danced and must pay the piper and returns home sadder and wiser. The detailing sounds conventional, but in the development the director has utilized the value of surprise. His climax is really startling and shows the farmer confessing his wrong to his wife. The sincerity of the man wins sympathy. Not so successful has the director been with the character of the adventuress. In order to extract sympathy for her, he has resorted to the "cut-back" of her life, showing her a victim of circumstances. Oppressed on all sides by men she is determined to make the sex suffer.

This bit of action is sort of anti-climactic and really has no place in molding the dramatic scenes together. The return of the disillusioned man is also mighty effective. There is no stressing of the sentiment, although some directors would have sweetened it with saccharine. The heart throb is there because it has its place. The other woman also returns to make amends and her entrance is also rich in dramatic force. A violent scene is anticipated, but is avoided by the voice of a child. The introduction of the other suitors at the shrine of the charmer eliminates the obviousness to some extent. The picture is well titled and the scenes admirably arranged and the composition of them achieved in an artistic manner. "The Lure of Crooning Water" is solid entertainment and deserves recognition.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An engrossing story of a young countryman's surrender to the wiles of a beautiful actress who visited his farm and of his pursuit of the fascinating adventuress, only to return to his wife and children a wiser man, is told in "The Lure of Crooning Water," the Stoll picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— featuring Ivy Duke and Guy Newall. This eternal triangle play is vividly presented in scenes which hold the spectator through their tense action and the notes of pathos and heart interest and the manner of their excellent interpretation.

It moves with cumulative dramatic intensity from one startling episode to another and finishes in a climax of compelling strength. The players are chosen from the English stage and include the beautiful and talented Ivy Duke, considered one of the most attractive women in England, and Guy Newall, a recognized actor whose magnetism and dramatic skill are evidenced in every interpretation. The picture moves without a flaw and points a moral which is highly effective. The director has staged the picture in attractive backgrounds, many of the exteriors representing English country life. The offering is splendidly photographed.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre will be afforded the opportunity to witness a thrilling love drama in "The Lure of Crooning Water," a Stoll picture which presents an English company headed by the beautiful and talented Ivy Duke and the forceful Guy Newall. It is a love story replete with deep human interest and characterized by novel situations, some of these being of exceptional dramatic intensity. The eternal triangle is disclosed in a novel manner so that the denouement is never guessed. How the young farmer is intrigued by a wily adventuress and leaves his wife and children—how disillusionment comes to him—how he returns sadder and wiser is told in a manner which excites attention from start to finish. Don't miss this entertaining picture.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the theme and bring out that it points an excellent moral. Since the cast is not well known in this country don't concentrate upon it. But you can tell that Ivy Duke is recognized in England as one of its most beautiful and talented actresses. Play up the fact that the eternal triangle composes the theme but don't give away the plot beyond a bare outline. Simply dwell upon its dramatic ingredients, telling that the patrons are assured of gripping entertainment—entertainment which moves and fascinates through the compositions of scenes and the fine acting. Bring out that it is a powerful play with a beautiful setting.

HONEYMOON RANCH (BERT LUBIN-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Old time western full of real cowboys and has action galore."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to standing room. Strong posters pulled in crowds. Allene Ray pleasing as star. Picture very well received. Best Western shown here for long time. Patrons asked for others like it. Full of action and suspense and the kind that draws crowds back to see more of the same kind."

HONOR BOUND (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO ..... NOV. 13
"Frank Mayo has good material in this one."

HOUSE OF WHISPERS, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... OCT. 2
"Kerrigan has another interesting mystery story."—M. P. News.

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ... JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

IDOLS OF CLAY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MAE MURRAY .... NOV. 27
"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew 13,000 paid admissions the day it opened. A wonderful drawing card." "Opening week equalled 'On with the Dance.' Held for second week. Picture makes 'em talk." "Went over big. Certainly a sure fire production, both as to entertainment and box office value." "Big business second week. Thrilling. Gorgeous sets and sensational title are big attractions." "A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business." "Opened up extra big and continued so during week run." "This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title." "Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week."

"Very good entertainment in this complicated story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good audience picture. Its many leading love themes are apt to be confusing but it opened very big." "Good productions, which brought the crowds." "A rather complicated theme which kept up the suspense until the end. However, a bit too melodramatic in spots."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal."

"Rather obvious, but fairly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also." "Disappointing after seeing '23½ Hours Leave.' Fair business." "Very bad for the star and weak story. Business was poor." "Picture started big, slumped, and then ended big. But on the whole it's a lemon." "A usual Doug. MacLean and Doris May production which did the business. Both of these actors have been very popular in this city since appearing in '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES ..... NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.

KISMET (ROBERTSON-COLE) OTIS SKINNER ..... NOV. 6
"Otis Skinner gives superb performance in lavish production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advanced prices." "Opened fine and improved daily. Wonderful acting on part of Otis Skinner. Marvelous sets."

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST ..... DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week."

LEOPARD WOMAN, THE (ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS) ..... OCT. 16
"Melodramatic romance adapted from adventure story."—M. P. News.

"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy."

"Not above the average."—M. P. News.

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH .. DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LITTLE GREY MOUSE, THE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY ..... NOV. 13
"New star's first picture mildly interesting."—M. P. News.

LITTLE MISS REBELLION (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT) DOROTHY GISH ..... OCT. 1
"Dorothy Gish scores in story filled with hokum."—M. P. News.

LOVE (J. PARKER READ, JR.-ASSO. PRODUCERS) LOUISE GLAUM ..... DEC. 11
"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses."

LOVE'S FLAME (FIDELITY PICTURES CO.) THOS. J. CARRIGAN-VIVIENNE OSBORNE ..... OCT. 16
"Story has distinctive appeal."—M. P. News.

MAD LOVE (VICTOR KREMER PRODUCTION) LINA CAVALIERI ..... NOV. 6
"Average production stars Cavalieri."—M. P. News.

MADAME PEACOCK (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... OCT. 16
"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity."

MADAM X (GOLDWYN) PAULINE FREDERICK ..... OCT. 9
"Tremendous drama faultlessly acted and skillfully produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to very poor business; competition to circus and Fair as well. But has built steadily up etver since. Business, total, very good. A fine picture—a classic." "Not up to the standard of Nazimova pictures. There are moments in the picture that do not ring true. However, Nazimova followers seemed satisfied." "An average production. Box office returns fair." "Despite the fact that most persons who saw it seemed to like it, it didn't reach expectations. Crowds were only average all week, and my report is only 'fair.'" "Pleased immensely. Star at her best. Went big all week."

"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big box-office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture." "Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked." "Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

MARRIAGE PIT, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO ..... OCT. 16
"Interesting story of big business and feminine pride."—M. P News.

"Melodrama of interesting quality."—M. P. News.

"THE CHEATER REFORMED"
(Fox)

William Russell Has An Entertaining Crook Picture Here

PERHAPS the crime wave abroad in the land has affected the screen, judging from the epidemic of crook plays. Since most of them spell good entertainment there is no reason for exhibitors to feel alarmed. They will bring money in rather than take it away. Here is William Russell's latest, "The Cheater Reformed," which may be characterized as one of this star's best attractions. Jules Furthman has contributed a story which is strong in its spiritual force and which contains some rattling good incident. While the star plays a dual role—that of twin brothers—the illogical character is quite eliminated.

It is hardly reasonable to believe that a wife could not identify the masquerader since no two voices are alike—even with twins. But there is so much crisp action, so much suspense, so much vitality and vigor to the sequences that the flaws of characterization never become dominant. The spiritual quality finds its expression in the masquerading of the crook brother. His twin, a rector in a fashionable church, is killed in a train wreck. To escape the minions of the law, the criminal who is severely injured is lugged home where he recuperates and finds happy communion and strength in the personality of his brother's wife. The suspense is appreciated through the conflict engendered by the wicked "pillar" of the church who believes that he has the prison record of the deceased pastor. Of course his evidence is correct concerning the crook and it is to the latter's advantage to secure the papers. So he resorts to his old-time safe-breaking tactics, and his place as the rector is established.

His regeneration comes about through a daring and, what might be called, colossal fraud. He puts on his ministerial wardrobe and preaches one of his brother's sermons. The fire and persuasion of his address causes not only a remarkable feeling upon the part of his congregation, but stimulates him into a desire to find redemption. When his crooked pal, who is given the job of sexton, informs him that the chimes have sounded, that the bells have been tolled by unseen hands, he believes that to be a sign from heaven. In due time a confession is offered to the woman who has learned, ad interim, that he is a masquerader. But since love is also a factor she responds by showing faith in his regeneration. The star acquits himself splendidly in the double role and gives a forcefulness to the interpretation which enhances the picture's punch. Seena Owen as the wife, Sam De Grasse as the "heavy," and Jack Brammall as the crooked pal furnish excellent support.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Jordan McCall, Alias "Lefty" Jordan.....William Russell
Dr. Luther McCall, Rector.....William Russell
Carol McCall, his wife.....Seena Owen
"Buster" Dorsey, "Lefty's" pal.....Jack Brammall
Thomas Edinburgh, financier.....Sam De Grasse
Mrs. Edinburgh, his wife.....Ruth King

Story and Scenario by Jules Furthman.
Directed by Scott Dunlap.
Photographed by Clyde De Vinna.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A strange case of dual identity—or rather merged identity—is portrayed in William Russell's newest Fox picture, "The Cheater Reformed," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— and ————. The star is said to give the most unusual portrayal of his career in a double role—that of a respected clergyman and a notorious yeggman, twin brothers. Through a chain of events the crook assumes the brother's' position and, although still a crook at heart, preaches a sermon in his brother's church.

However there is a stigma attached to his name. A financier, eager to win the affections of the dead dominie's wife, holds a trump card which would ruin the masquerader's reputation. He has the prison record of the convict. The latter employs his old time "safe-breaking" skill in recovering the precious evidence and his brother's wife shows her affection by offering him her heart. The crook sees the light by the strokes of the chapel bell, rung by unseen hands. This colossal fraud is told in a most interesting way. Players who give good account of themselves are Jack Brammall and Sam De Grasse. Jules Furthman wrote the story while Scott Dunlap directed.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre have something interesting to look forward to when William Russell"s newest Fox picture, "The Cheater Reformed," comes next ———— and ————. Don't imagine that the title gives away the story. It doesnt. Before the audience can catch its breath it finds itself in the midst of the most exciting sort of dramatic entanglement. Imagine a crook taking advantage of his brother's' death to assume the latter's position as rector of a fashionable church. And no one suspects the colossal fraud—not even the clergyman's widow. That's something to think about. Make no mistake. "The Cheater Reformed" is SOME picture and is Russell's finest achievement.

SUGGESTIONS

There is quite an idea in this story which should be tested in a mysterious fashion. It might be advisable to arouse the public's curiosity. So get them interested by telling them a small inkling of the plot. Bring out that the star appears in a dual role. You can go further and state that it is his finest picture and not make a misstatement either. Play up the daring theme by pointed teasers asking your patrons what they would do under similar circumstances. Bring forth that the picture carries a strong spiritual note. Send out circular letters asking leading questions of your feminine patrons. Bill it as a novel picture—a most unusual picture—one strong in dramatic intensity.

CATCH LINES

What would you do if you found the man you believed to be your husband was a fraud? See "The Cheater Reformed."

"THE BAIT"
(Paramount-Artcraft)

Rather Hectic But Fairly Interesting

THIS story of a feminine crook who is used as a "bait" to catch various suckers, but who capitulates eventually and finds redemption through love, cannot be considered as highly original. In fact it is fashioned from familiar ingredients which bring forth the obviousness to a degree, although it contains enough excitement to compel one's attention. Maurice Tourneur is always dependable with his climaxes. Patrons are assured of good action and suspense. But it seems to us he is better equipped to deal with subjects of more picturesque calibre. A master of photography, he should be given stories which take him to the big outdoors.

"The Bait" carries too much villainy, for there is scarcely a moment of sweetness and light. And the character of the figure represented in the title is unduly orthodox. It's the familiar tale of the innocent girl whose innocence is so predominant that she becomes a ready prey to criminal vultures. She accepts their plans and cultivates them without thinking that the well known strings are attached. Her conscience finds an awakening when she responds to the right man. His unconscious influence causes her to flee her environment and denounce herself. Such a hero is always magnanimous and so the romance comes into its own. The major part of the action has to do with several novel ways of attempting blackmail. The crime wave is surely abroad. Still these scenes carry a good flavor of suspense.

There is a good thrill attached to the incident which shows the girl making her escape from the patrol wagon and a likely shiver is sent up and down the spine in the scene which depicts her rescue from a group of performing lions. The beasts find freedom when the front of the cage is loosened. Naturally, the rescuer is the hero. Some originality has been expended in giving the characters titles which fit their personalities. Such a figure as the girl defies logic because she is not a victim of her environment. And it is strange to see such a disciple of innocence abroad. Miss Hampton will be the dominating factor in making the picture appreciated. She acts with quiet dignity and effective poise and her facial expressions indicate that she knows something of emotional pantomime. Her supporting company is competent enough.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Joan Grainger.....Hope Hampton
John Warren, the Fish.....Harry Woodward
Bennett Barton, the Fisherman.....Jack McDonald
John Gordon, the Game Warden.....James Gordon
Dolly, the Hooked.....Rae Ebberly
Simpson, the Bait-catcher.....Joe Singleton
Madeline, the Minnow.....Poupee Andriot
Jimmy, the Bullfish.....Dan Crimmins, Jr.

By Sidney Toler.
Scenario by Jack Gilbert.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Love interest and melodrama are the dominant factors in Maurice Tourneur's new Paramount production, "The Bait," which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Hope Hampton as the star. The offering unfolds the story of Joan Grainger, a pretty shop-girl who is picked out by Bennett Barton, a master-crook, as his pawn in a game to blackmail Warren, a young millionaire. With the aid of his assistant, Simpson, Barton, "frames" Joan and, after rescuing her on the way to jail, poses as her protector. A chance meeting with Warren at the Folies Bergere leads to a love affair between the millionaire and Hope.

Later, learning of Barton's true character, she tries to throw off his influence and, in a series of melodramatic scenes, is finally able to thwart him and win happiness. "The Bait" is charged with tense action and an exciting vein of suspense. But its melodrama is well counter-balanced with a note of heart interest. Miss Hampton covers herself with glory as the beautiful crook who wins redemption through love and others who contribute noteworthy performances are Jack McDonald, Harry Woodward, Joe Singleton and James Gordon. Mr. Toureur's direction is praiseworthy.

PROGRAM READER

Hope Hampton, considered one of the most beautiful women identified with the screen, is coming to the ———— theatre next ———— in "The Bait," adapted from Sidney Toler's play and directed by Maurice Tourneur. The fact that Miss Hampton appears in a Tourneur production is sufficient guarantee of its excellence. The play is marked for its dominant notes of heart interest and melodramatic adventure and pilots the characters through scenes which are certain to appeal to every class of patron. It's a picture of a girl crook who wins redemption. How she finds this regeneration is excellently brought out by the director. "The Bait" is rich entertainment and should not be missed by ———— patrons.

SUGGESTIONS

Tell that it has tense moments. Play up its adventurous line of action. Bring forth in effective arguments that Hope Hampton is a beautiful woman and endowed with considerable talent. Tell that the picture is based upon Sidney Toler's play, "The Tiger Lady." By all means use the name of the director. A Tourneur production is certain to interest every class of audience. His name is sufficient guarantee of excellence as the trade-mark on a well known brand of merchandise. Bill it as a big, romantic melodrama, packed with thrills and love interest. The various fan magazines have exploited Miss Hampton to the utmost the past year. So you are not gambling with an unknown personality. Use catch lines but treat them in a mysterious fashion. Use superlatives after the first letters of "The Bait" spelled in vertical fashion.

CATCH LINES

"The Bait"—a thrilling tale of a girl, a crook and a millionaire. See the beautiful Hope Hampton in "The Bait."

The methods of crooks in big cities to win victims at any cost are vividly told in "The Bait," the Hope Hampton picture appearing at the ———— theatre.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

Lots of action. The big scenes, especially those in which the animals participated, made a big hit." "Not up to some of the other Curwood stories but was liked. Average business." "ood business on this picture, which seemed to please." "Splendid picture which did big business for us although it played the week of Christmas." "A good picture with some excellent scenic effects and an interesting story."

NORTH WIND'S MALICE, THE (REX BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 30
"Probably the best Beach picture yet produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not much. Did fair business." "Good picture of the cold Northwest which did excellent business for two weeks, having been held over a second week on account of the large crowds it drew the first seven days." "A very good picture, to very good business considering the fact that is the week before Christmas."

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE.....NOV. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard, although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box-office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

OH, LADY, LADY (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....JAN. 1
"Rather light but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture. Bebe Daniels has become very popular here in her short career as a star. This picture has lost nothing; it is transition to the movies."

OLD FASHIONED BOY, AN (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY .....NOV. 13
"Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard." "Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business." "Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and whirls like he was crazy. Only fair business." "Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual." "A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)" "One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it." "An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box-office attraction, however."

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN (HOLUBAR-UNIVERSAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS .....OCT. 16
"Absorbing story well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fair production bringing average box-office returns." "This picture had little comment either favorable or otherwise. Box-office returns say production is fair." "Am playing it for a second week in a town where 'Humoresque' played only one week. One of the best attractions I have played this season." "Dorothy Phillips does some of the best work of her career in this picture, which is interesting and handsomely produced. Did splendid business at this theatre." "Just completed second and very successful week. I make a practice of one week runs, or even three days, but this picture played to two weeks' capacity business." "A poor attraction, very little to redeem it. Business far below normal." "Established a new record for our box office and received more favorable comments than any picture even played." "Capacity business all the week. Picture pleased all." "Broke all records. Turned them away Sunday."

PAGAN LOVE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4

PASSION (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 23
"German picture is spectacular; wonderfully acted."—M. P. News.

PASSION'S PLAYGROUND (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD .....OCT. 16
"An artificial story holds it back."—M. P. News.

PEACEFUL VALLEY (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY..OCT. 23
"Humorous incident, rustic settings and Charles Ray—enough."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Registered a big hit. A real Ray triumph. Audiences applaud enthusiastically." "Very good week. Ray always sure of big business. This considered much better than '45 Minutes from Broadway.'" "Charles Ray in any story is enough to pack this house. In 'Peaceful Valley' he is cast in a role that his admirers want to see him in. The picture attracted capacity houses for a seven-day run." "Did very well. Picture entertaining and box-office results good." "A pleasing feature which took well in my theatre. As to box-office value it is a pretty good bet." "An improvement over "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." but not his best by any means. Usual business."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1) .....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

PENALTY, THE (GOLDWYN-EMINENT AUTHORS) SPECIAL CAST .....NOV. 27
"Great vehicle for Lon Chaney, but falls short in many ways."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture, although some women were shocked at the idea of Lon Chaney with legs cut off." "Very good. Chaney's work is wonderful. Average business four days." "Wonderful story and very fine acting on Chaney's part. Good business." "A great picture. It went over exceedingly well. Was well liked, and brought big box-office returns."

PINK TIGHTS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....SEPT. 25
"Slight story, but entertaining incident, in circus picture." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Turned them away at night." "The boiled down opinions on this picture is 'Old Stuff.'"

PLUNGER, THE (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....NOV. 20
"Story of frenzied finance makes ordinary picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a surprise. First time Walsh has been tried out for a week here. Even in the week before Christmas it drew."

POLLY WITH A PAST (METRO) INA CLAIRE.....DEC. 18
"Ina Claire's rare artistry makes her a welcome screen figure."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair. The picture is entertaining but lacks pep."

PRAIRIE TRAILS (FOX) TOM MIX.....JAN. 1
"Trivial story, senseless action and a few good thrills."—M. P. News.

PREY, THE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....OCT. 9
"Alice Joyce has highly involved story here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Patrons did not like this one. Two days to average and poor business." "One of the best Alice Joyce subjects this year. Did unusually well at the box-office." "Average production, nothing out of ordinary. Business fair."

PRICE OF REDEMPTION, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL.....OCT. 1
"Lytell has hectic melodrama and acting opportunity here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big houses first two days. Rest of week fair." "Fine picture which brought good box-office receipts." "A splendid picture. Thrilling. Fine acting. By far the best work Bert Lytell has done." "Had a big opening and average crowds during the rest of week. Fair as a picture." "Good both as to entertaining value and box-office results." "Bert Lytell is good drawing star. Poor title hindered his possibilities of doing good business. Subject was only fair."

RISKY BUSINESS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....DEC. 4
"Good combination makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

'BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS'
(Goldwyn)

Fine Production Given Famous Stage Comedy

IN theatres catering to intelligent audiences, this adaptation of Graham Moffat's quaint comedy, with its gentle ridicule of Scotch thrift and Scotch conventions, ought to provide excellent entertainment and prove a pleasant diversion from the ordinary picture.

If "Bunty Pulls the Strings" doesn't please, certainly no fault can be found with the producer, unless it be that the story as a plot doesn't amount to much.

The cast which Director Barker has secured is perfect, even to the unimportant roles.

The selection of exteriors or rather the building of exteriors is a revelation in detail and correct atmosphere. The incident provided is excellent, with many a good, clean comedy bit, captioned by clever titles, some from the original play.

Acting honors and opportunity in the various roles are pretty equally divided. Leatrice Joy is a very charming and convincing "Bunty." Russell Simpson, sterling character man that he is, makes the straight laced old Churchman a real personage, while Raymond Hatton in the comedy role of "Weelum" is ideal. Others who have good parts and play them well are Josephine Crowell, Cullen Landis and Casson Ferguson.

The story of "Bunty" provides an opportunity to hook-up with the much talked of "blue law" movement, and this angle should not be overlooked in billing the picture. Another exploitation angle is to be found in the cast which is labelled all star and lives up to the claim. Mention of exploitation is made because we believe that this is a picture which will not sell itself, but properly advertised should attract a great many people who are not numbered among the so called fans.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

THE CAST

Bunty ..... Leatrice Joy
Tammas Biggar ..... Russell Simpson
Weelum ..... Raymond Hatton
Rab ..... Cullen Landis
Jeemy ..... Casson Ferguson
Susie Simpson ..... Josephine Crowell
Eelen Dunlop ..... Edythe Chapman
Minister ..... Rowland Rushton
Mrs. Drummond ..... Georgia Woodthorpe
Maggie ..... Sadie Gordon
Beadle ..... Otto Hoffman

Directed by Reginald Barker. From the play by Graham Moffat. Adapted by J. G. Hawkes.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The picture adaptation of the famous comedy of Scotch life, "Bunty Pulls the Strings'" with its quaint characters and pleasing story comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement beginning ————.

For real humor and fine characterizations "Bunty" is a masterpiece. A truly all star cast as been secured the many fine parts. Leatrice Joy is "Bunty" while her straight laced old Scotch father is Russell Simpson. Others who have prominent roles are Raymond Hatton, Cullen Landis, Casson Ferguson and Josephine Crowell, acknowledged to be America's best character "heavy" woman.

The wealth of detail and the atmosphere of "Bunty" will prove a revelation. Nothing quite like this picture has ever been done. It is like a trip to Scotland with each character in the picture a personage of real importance. Many of the original lines of the play have been used as titles and the laughs that are provided by both titles and incident are many. "Bunty" is also a fine visual example of what "blue laws" mean to a community. Poor Cullen Landis couldn't even whistle on Sunday and "Tammas" was horrified when the "widdie" opened up the windows on Sabbath morning and let the sun shine in.

PROGRAM READER

Who has not heard of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," that quaint Scotch stage comedy that ridiculed in a gentle and humorous sort of way Scotch thrift, Scotch conventions and Scotch "blue laws."

"Bunty" has been adapted to the screen by Reginald Barker with a truly all-star cast of players, that includes Cullen Landis, Russell Simpson, Raymond Hatton, Josephine Crowell, Casson Ferguson and Leatrice Joy and will be the feature attraction at this theatre for ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

In presenting "Bunty" the management feels justified in pronouncing it one of the greatest picture productions of the year, a picture that is in a class by itself and one that will appeal to those who sometimes complain that the "movies" have nothing new and that picture plots are as alike as two peas.

"Bunty Pulls the Strings" is a pleasing evening's entertainment for intelligent people. It is a bit of Scotland visualized on the screen. Not a bit of the rare humor of the stage version has been lost. Much that the stage could not provide has been added. A most unusual production and one worthy every person's attention. See "Bunty" by all means.

SUGGESTIONS

The biggest exploitation angle this possesses is the fact that in a semi-humorous sort of a way you can make capital of the "blue law" movement with it. You can relate that the laws of Scotland were so blue that "Tammas" was scandalized because a window was opened on Sunday morning to let in a little sunshine and that "Rab" was chastised for whistling when he was supposed to be learning the catechism. Next is the fame of the play and the excellence of the cast. We would give Raymond Hatton and Cullen Landis the best end of the player billing. Both are popular juveniles. Keep the comedy angle uppermost at all times. Some quotations from the titles will make good catch lines.

CATCH LINES

This picture shows you what happens when "blue laws" are in operation. Poor "Rab," red blooded, very much alive boy even if he came from Scotch parentage, was given a caning because he whistled Sunday morning before "kirk."

The play that brought Scotland to America enacted by a cast that is truly all-star. Cullen Landis, Raymond Hatton, Casson Ferguson, Russell Simpson and a dozen others of big league fame.

"WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONE"
(Hampton-Pathe)

H. B. Warner Excels in Entertaining Comedy-Drama

THROUGH the splendid work of H. B. Warner, Nat Goodwin's famous stage success, "When We Were Twenty-one" makes an entertaining feature. The star's talents have been handicapped in many ways in this picture by the material handed him, for the play is like a great many others of its kind which are splendid vehicles in play form because of the entertaining dialogue. But when they reach the screen the loss of the humorous situations and sparkling dialogue gives the screen productions rather poor quality.

This would certainly have been the case with "When We Were Twenty-one" had not H. B. Warner injected plenty of action in the lighter scenes when it was needed and for contrast in the dramatic moments dominated every situation by strong, forceful acting.

The picture really doesn't get its start until the middle of the second reel, because of the numerous scenes which are introduced, many of which are liable to be rather tiresome.

When the story finally swings into its humorous and dramatic contents the plot is convincing and carries an appeal which should interest.

It is in the dramatic moments, however, that Warner excels and it is a touching moment indeed when the star leaves his home and offers to sacrifice himself for the young man whom he has brought up from childhood, but who has fallen a victim to the wiles of a crafty woman.

In the lighter moments the picture loses much of its entertainment value, for there seems to be little attempt to improve the situations, as far as real humor is concerned. Still there is plenty of incident introduced which keeps the action at a high pitch at all times and does not allow the interest to lag.

The production qualities of the picture are excellent with capable direction and splendid acting an added attraction.—Frank Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"When we were twenty-one"—what memories it conjures to those who have passed its magic portals! Who has gone through without sowing wild oats?

H. B. Warner is presented at the ———— theatre ———— in a picturization of the stage play by H. V. Esmond, "When We Were Twenty-One."

It is a romantic story of a young man who is sowing his wild oats of wine, woman and song, and knows not that he is a fool suffering from the blindness of youth and of a man who has passed twenty-one and sees with the eyes of experience the folly of the boy.

"When We Were Twenty-One" was one of Nat Goodwin's greatest stage successes, first played by him nineteen years ago, with a cast including Maxine Elliott, Constance Collier and Arnold Daly.

The cast chosen by director Henry King to interpret the story on the screen is even as impressive. Claire Anderson is in Maxine Elliott's role, Christine Mayo in Constance Collier's and James Morrison in Arnold Daly's.

Mr. Warner plays Mr. Goodwin's role of the man who in placing happiness of others above his own almost made everyone unhappy.

PROGRAM READER

Does youth deserve the fruits of its folly? Is it headed for the rocks of disillusionment when it plunges through the breakers of indiscretion? "When We Were Twenty-One," in which H. B. Warner is starring at the ———— theatre ———— views that bubblesome, troublesome age from the angle of present and past.

"When We Were Twenty-One" is a photoplay version of H. V. Esmond's stage drama, in which Nat Goodwin with Maxine Elliott, scored his greatest triumph. It tells the story of the sacrificial love of a man for a youth to whom he has been father, mother and brother.

The youth falls for the wiles of a scheming adventuress. She marries him for his money but promptly leaves him for another man when she finds him penniless. It is a terrific blow to the boy, who thought his love was a noble, beautiful thing that was willing to shield a misunderstood woman from the slandering tongues of a lying world.

With the desire of those who possess the wisdom of experience, the older man wishes to shield the younger man from the hard knocks his follies had in store for him. No sacrifice was too great for him to make for the boy left in his care by a friend.

A splendid cast has been assembled by director Henry King. Mr. Warner plays Nat Goodwin's role, James W. Morrison is the boy and Claire Anderson the girl who though engaged to the boy, loved the older man. Christine Mayo is the adventuress.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture play up the fact that it is a picturization of the play which made Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott famous.

Although the picture has its dull moments there is enough action and dramatic moments to give it impetus and keep the spectator's eye glued to the screen throughout.

Play up the title as strong as you can as it is a splendid one and will attract attention wherever displayed.

As far as the story goes, do not promise too much, for there may be a few who will not take kindly to it.

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"The Daredevil" (Fox)—"Interesting picture which went over big.

"Shore Acres" (Metro)—"This one is impossible, poorest drawing picture I've ever had. The plot is timeworn, moth-eaten; direction nothing startling, star miscast and a thoroughly poor picture throughout. The fact that it has been a stage classic doesn't save it either."

"Married Life" (Sennett)—"A fun rolt. Audiences smiled when it started and were roaring at the finish. Many enjoyed it more than feature." A roaring Sennett farce, funnier than "Yankee Doodle" or "Down on the Farm."

"Humoresque" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"There is no doubt but that this is one of the best box-office productions of the year. When a picture can be put over for three weeks in this town, it must be some production. That's what happened here." "Has been held for the second week at 40cts. top price. I had a line a half a block long waiting for tickets by 7-30 each evening." "Did not draw as big crowds the second week as it did the first. Houses were bigger than average, however." "Don't Ever Marry" (First National)—"This picture was entertaining and well liked. Business about as usual."

"The Turning Point" (First National)—"The people liked this film and turned out in large crowds."

"The Deadline" (Fox)—"As a film play and business proposition-not much."

"Heart of a Fool" (Selznick)—"A fair picture. Business about as usual."

"Dangerous Days"—"A fair week. Average picture."

"Woman in Room 13" (Goldwyn)—"Did fair business on this, nothing to rave about but is got by. Well produced, nicely handled picture, but star does not draw."

"The Wonderful Chance" (Selznick)—"Drew well at both matinee and night performances. Regular O'Brien following of women of city saw to that. Picture is about the most entertaining O'Brien has ever made.

"Everybody's Sweetheart" (Selznick)—"Despite the fact that this is Olive Thomas' last picture it broke no records here. Audiences were about average. Drew well at matinees."

"The Poor Simp" (Selznick)—This picture brought more than usual business. Seemed to please the audiences."

"The Mollycoddle" (United Artists)—"Drew well considering that it played this city for two weeks during the summer."

"The Thirtieth Piece of Silver" (American)—"They didn't like this one, and I don't blame them. Margarita Fisher is much too fat and the character she played lost sympathy at the very beginning. Poor picture."

"The Poor Simp" (Selznick)—"Average picture. Did average business."

"The Wonder Man" (Robertson-Cole)—"Almost equalled records for opening day at this house. Had to take off comedy to accomodate crowds. Ordinary picture."

"The Devil's Passkey" (Universal)—"Played eight days and holds the house record."

"Jes' Call Me Jim" (Goldwyn)—"A picture which appealed to my audiences. The box office results were larger than usual."

"The Jailbird" (Goldwyn)—"Good picture with average business for one week."

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" (Metro)—"A big risque, very speedy, but undeniably funny and it went over very well. Even the broadest bits of horseplay did not offend, but on the other hand, was accepted by my audiences in good part. A good box office attraction for me."

"The Restless Sex" (Famous Players)—"Good picture. Favorable comments on all sides. Average business consitent all week." "Started well but fell down last days of run."

"The Joyous Troublemaker" (Fox)—"Star has a part which is not in his particular forte. Yet he is the best part of the picture for it has little in the way of plot to recommend it. Business only fair."

"A SHOCKING NIGHT"
(Universal)

Not Substantial Enough for Five Reels

IT is said that "A Shocking Night," the newest Lyons and Moran Universal comedy, will be the last which presents them in five reelers and that they will shortly return to comedies of one reel. While the stars have had a fairly successful season with pictures of feature length, the law of averages indicates that their forte is the one or two reeler. In other words, the short pieces will be remembered for placing them in the spotlight, with which the feature length offerings will not stand comparison. There has been one exception, however. "La La Lucille" was their one best bet and proved to be quite a winner everywhere.

Th new Lyons and Moran comedy, "A Shocking Night," doesn't offer much entertainment. The plot is covered with moss and has served the stage and screen for many, many years in various guises. Furthermore, the development is rather amateurish. There isn't enough substance for five reels, which naturally brings out its shortcomings. It is padded in several scenes with repetitious details brought out time and again. But its chief fault is the lack of humor. Blame can be attached here upon the plot. Even the funniest joke, if repeated too often, loses its sting. This story simply has been done too often. The stars, who are also the directors, haven't shown any inspiration in their treatment of it. Probably because there wasn't any to be found.

But the idea of the rich young couple who masquerade as servants and their friends substituted in their place to hoodwink a wealthy prospect from the West has lost its appeal. The prospect in question is simply a variation of "rich uncle," or "grandfather," or some other relative. The piece is a poor example of the bedroom farce and simply shows the uncouth Westerner determined to make the unmarried couple embarrassed. He believes them husband and wife, which is, of course, shocking to their sensitive natures. There is considerable latitude given over to packing the young people in one bedroom and locking an irate father in a storeroom. The picture bears the stamp of "program offering" all over it. Edgar Franklin has written much better stories. His responsibility here makes us wonder if he wasn't engaged to submit a vehicle. The time-worn plot and action, the lack of humor, make "A Shocking Night" very frail and uninteresting. The stars and their assistants work hard to score and succeed in asserting their personalities.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Universal comedy team, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, will come to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in "A Shocking Night," an original contribution by Edgar Franklin. The entertaining comedians have a fitting vehicle here for the expression of their talents. A well balanced cast assists them. The story revolves around an adventurous night in the home of the Harcourts. The young husband is nearly bankrupt and his servants leave him. Since it is the night when an engaged couple, Richard Thayer and Bessie Lane, are coming to have dinner, the host conceives the plan to masquerade as the butler and his wife as the maid.

A Montana millionaire is also expected who will invest his fortune in a mining scheme of Harcourt's. But he turns out to be a human wild-cat and stirs up a pretty mess by assuming that the guests are married. This precipitates a series of amusing situations. Eventually everything is explained satisfactorily and the Harcourts are lifted from the depths of despondency. The stars enact their parts with their customary vigor and dash. Their direction is capable throughout.

PROGRAM READER

Suppose you kept a retinue of servants and found yourself bankrupt. Suppose the servants left just at a time when you expected guests. Wouldn't you attempt to fill their places? Suppose again a Western millionaire was expected? Wouldn't you put up a bold front and endeavor to please him to the extent that he might make you wealthy again? This is the outline of "A Shocking Night," the Lyons and Moran comedy which comes to the ———— theatre next ————. To go into detail would spoil the interest for you. But suffice to state that the offering contains a series of highly amusing complications. How the husband and wife invite a peck of trouble only to emerge with colors flying is told in five reels of solid entertainment. Don't miss it.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have been meeting success with the Lyons and Moran comedies it would be well to book their latest. Tell that it is on a par with their best achievements. You might also state that it is an enjoyable bedroom farce which moves with considerable kick and vitality for five reels. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion, detailing just enough of the plot to arouse curiosity. Don't give it entirely away since it is quite familiar and might keep certain "hard-boiled" patrons away. You can stir up interest by using snappy catch lines based upon the title. Such expressions as "Is it shocking to be caught in your pajamas when a guest in someone's house?" You might play up the other Lyons and Moran pictures. Bill the picture as a snappy bedroom farce which carries adventurous high jinks.

CATCH LINES

They attempted to fool a breezy Westerner but his conduct was so unconventional that he had the laugh on them. See "A Shocking Night."

"THE PASSIONATE PILGRIM"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Better Than Average Picture From Well Known Novel

FOR about four reels this is one of the best productions of all time and then things take a flop, the end being conventional "movie" stuff, not up to the opening reels and disappointing because so much that was extra good was forthcoming in the beginning.

However, there can be no question, but that "The Passionate Pilgrim" is a much better than average film drama. It has been given a good production and the cast is exceptional.

Matt Moore, the best actor in the family when well cast, has a very likeable role as the diffident novelist and newspaper man, while Ruby de Romer is appealing as the invalid heroine. Others of a long and well balanced cast who are entitled to personal mention are Claire Whitney, Charles Gerard, Sam J. Ryan and Frankie Mann.

"The Passionate Pilgrim," an adaptation of the story by Samuel Merwin, is rather episodic, long lapses of time being bridged by titles with fade-outs used to explain what has happened up to the time of the picture story.

A well produced trial scene, many beautiful exterior shots, correct and expensive interiors are features worthy of mention.

The story of "The Passionate Pilgrim" concerns principally what happened to Henry Calverly, a famous novelist, from the time his young wife committed perjury on the witness stand to save her mother's life until after her death, when he finds new happiness in a second matrimonial venture with the invalid daughter of a deceased captain of finance. A "Miracle Man" theme is given some attention rather to the detriment of the dramatic value of the offering. Complications to the progress of the romance are brought about by the machinations of the trustees of "Miriam's" estate who do not wish her to marry or regain her health.—Length, 7 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

Directed by Robert G. Vignola.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ———— is "The Passionate Pilgrim," adapted from a story by Samuel Merwin and which is presented with an all-star cast that includes among others, Matt Moore, Mary Newcomb, Julia Swayne Gordon, Tom Guise, Charles Gerard, Ruby de Remer, Claire Whitney and Arthur Donaldson. The passionate pilgrim is a newspaper man, one Henry Calverly, who journeys through life as an unfortunate victim of circumstances. He is a very interesting figure as drawn by Samuel Merwin and humanized upon the screen by the clever Matt Moore is made doubly so.

Calverly is a truthful reporter and he details his articles just as he sees life. The consequence is, he is discharged. However, he is rewarded eventually. He enters the life of a crippled heroine and his solicitude for her welfare effects a remarkable cure. The picture is wonderfully true to life, the scenes of the newspaper office being genuine. The offering points its conflicts and contrasts in a manner which appeals. Mr. Moore is supported by players who have, seemingly, been chosen for their adaptabilities as well as their talent. The picture enlists the sympathies.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ———— theatre have a treat in store for them when Robert G. Vignola's Paramount picture, "The Passionate Pilgrim," comes next ————. This is an adaptation of Samuel Merwin's magazine story which many of the ———— patrons may have read. Mr. Merwin is always interesting, but when his stories can be given color on the screen, they are doubly interesting. "The Passionate Pilgrim" takes up the adventures of a young newspaper man, whose truthfulness, whose ability to detail life just as he saw it, causes him to be discharged. How he finds himself—how he wins love and happiness is told in scenes which are mighty effective in their dramatic contrasts and conflict. Rest assured "The Passionate Pilgrim" is rich and rare entertainment.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this picture, our advice is to play up the author and the director and the all-star cast. Seldom has a picture carried such a galaxy of well-known names. So play them up to the limit. Tell that it is a story of a newspaper office—of a young reporter who wins sympathy for painting life as he saw it. Tell that it offers a story of intrigue and adventure—that it is well tinctured with romance. Play up the title. It is a winner. You might use an allegorical prologue showing a pilgrim endeavoring to walk through life and overcome the obstacles. Treat your copy in a dignified fashion. Exploit the theme and advise your patrons that a rare treat is in store for them.

CATCH LINES

Is it safe to be interviewed by a newspaper reporter? See "The Passionate Pilgrim," adapted from Samuel Merwin's story. See the treat of the season.

He was discharged from his position for telling the truth. But his sincerity brought him unbounded happiness. See "The Passionate Pilgrim."

Mr. Watterson R. Rothacker, President,
Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company,
Chicago, Illinois, U. S. A.

Dear Mr. Rothacker:

Permit me to congratulate both yourself and the Motion Picture Industry on your enterprise in opening such a wonderful new developing and printing establishment in California.

Fine feathers make fine birds; I have often seen your splendid laboratory work make peacocks out of pelicans.

Many times I have wondered at the penny-wise policy of some producers who spend hundreds of thousands in dressing up productions and then send them out dressed in overalls printing.

Rothacker Prints mean more than a mere Trade Mark; Mr. O'Reilly and I were really astonished at the wonderful screen values you reflected from the "Honeymoon Ranch" negative.

More power to you!

Very truly yours,

Poster Advertising

A good poster does not necessarily mean an expensive poster. On the other hand it certainly does not mean a cheap poster, for the man who saves money by cheapening his advertising is following a penny wise and dollar foolish policy. The money spent is thrown away. There is no use spending money for posters that do not advertise. If it is a question of saving money, save it all and avoid advertising entirely. In advertising it is not what one saves that counts, it's the returns brought in that are important. In the case of motion picture poster advertising the essential thing is the resulting box-office sale. To the exhibitor nothing is more vitally important than good poster advertising, nothing more fatal than bad poster advertising. When he is furnished with cheap posters the very foundation of his business is menaced. The more of them he uses, the better he displays them, the greater is the harm done, for cheap posters are repellant, not attractive, and posters should pull the public in, not drive them away. In only one sense is a cheap poster convincing. It convinces the public that the film advertised is likewise cheap.

The RITCHEY name upon a poster is as significant as the Sterling imprint is upon silver. The RITCHEY poster is an attractive poster, it is a convincing poster, and at all times it has the maximum of advertising value. As an investment it is as safe as a government bond, as a ticket seller it is incomparable.

Never Was a Picture So Praised——
Never Before Was a Picture So Deserving of Praise!

JULES E. MASTBAUM, president of the Stanley Company, controls more theatres than any other exhibitor in America, and we believe that he has never before given an endorsement of a picture over his signature. About "Forbidden Fruit" he has wired as follows:

> "I have just had the pleasure of witnessing CECIL B. DeMILLE'S Paramount masterpiece, 'FORBIDDEN FRUIT'.
> "It is the unanimous opinion of the directors of the Stanley Company and myself that it is the crowning achievement of the cinema art.
> "It is therefore gratifying to inform you that we will open our magnificent $2,000,000 Stanley Theatre with this production for an extended run, as a fitting and appropriate testimonial to this picture, which, we believe, reaches the pinnacle of art in motion picture production."

QUALITY

Noah Webster said
"The biggest thing is usually the best, because being the best is what made it the biggest."

Paramount is the biggest concern in the motion picture industry. It makes five times more photoplays than any other corporation.

And Paramount is biggest because it is best. The finest writers, the greatest actors, the best directors work for Paramount.

The theater showing Paramount Pictures stands for QUALITY. It attracts the best citizenship.

In Colorado Springs that theater is

DECENCY

The management of the Princess Theater makes it a personal business to see that EVERY photoplay shown in its house is irreproachable both in morals and good taste.

It shows Paramount Pictures because Paramount stands first in the motion picture industry for its insistence upon decency.

Why not bear this in mind when planning your next evening at "the movies?"

PARAMOUNT

If it were not for Paramount, motion pictures might still be in the store window class—or extinct.

Seven years ago Paramount started to make the cleanest, highest class, entertainment the movies ever saw.

Today the greatest living authors travel half-way around the globe to the Paramount studios to write original stories for the films. The most celebrated actors are there to portray these stories.

Gradually Paramount is attaining its goal.

CONFIDENCE

The greatest asset of a motion picture theater is the confidence it builds up among its patrons.

Among the people of Colorado Springs the Princess Theater has established this confidence to an unusual degree.

If this were lost, the Princess would lose its all.

So it will very naturally be the policy of the Princess never to mar the confidence of its patrons by offering pictures of inferior quality or by charging more than any film subject is worth.

This Campaign Alone Increased Receipts 33⅓ Per Cent!

Study them carefully.

They were run during one week. And the receipts showed a 33 1-3 per cent increase. And those new patrons kept on coming!

Here's the statement from H. E. Ellison, who runs a chain of theatres throughout Colorado:

"These theatres have been using Paramount Pictures for several years, and when I took them over I invented a new campaign of advertising. The results have been the most satisfactory of any advertising I have ever done in my ten years' experience.

"We have demonstrated that the right principles win, whether applied to pictures or anything else. We carry ads like these once in about four or five weeks, and we will continue it until we have doubled the receipts of all the theatres.

"Aside from the monetary results of the campaigns they are also creating an element of favorable public opinion, a confident assurance that clean and wholesome programs can always be found at our theatres. The voluntary comments of many of our patrons affirm this."

The magic name Paramount was the keynote of these campaigns. The name that has been hammered home in our national advertising until it stands everywhere as a symbol for the best.

It isn't enough to show Paramount Pictures. You've got to tell people you're showing them. Then you'll make real money!

Your kind of a Pretty Girl

GLADYS WALTON

See Gladys Walton in her newest joyous hit, "RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL," directed by Harry B. Harris. Universal will bet its bottom dollar that here is a picture to make your audiences chuckle and glow for weeks afterwards.

FOR a star to become a star in her very first picture shows that she is really a star, and every showman in the country who has played "PINK TIGHTS" knows that this is one hundred per cent true of GLADYS WALTON.

Universal has helped more players become stars than any other producer in the whole world. We do not say "has made more stars"—we say, "has helped them become stars." In simpler words, it's all up to the player. Which gives you pretty nearly the whole difference between an over-touted disappointment and "52 Good Pictures a Year—and no Worry."

The reason why you have no worry is simply because it is you who have made the star.

My dear Mr. Nathan:

I take this means of complimenting you on "The Last of the Mohicans." On its opening day it furnished an army of by-word-of-mouth advertisers, whose favorable comments resolved into splendid matinee and evening business.

We co-operated with the schools, and by this time several public schools and high schools have attended the matinee performances almost in a body.

All the press reviews were excellent, and I am pleased with the response "The Last of the Mohicans" is enjoying in Brooklyn.

Very cordially,

"The Last of the Mohicans"

Directed by Maurice Tourneur and Clarence L. Brown.

Produced by Associated Producers.

THE story of "The Last of the Mohicans" is too well known to need resketching for the purpose of this review. To the many who have read James Fenimore Cooper's romance, Mr. Tourneur's motion picture will bring an added pleasure, and to those who have not, the picture should appeal as an exciting excursion into an adventurous period of American history with which one will be glad to be acquainted. To both divisions of its audience, the picture should come as something fresh. For in many ways the screen story is new and decorative of the book on which it based.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, PRES.

220 WEST 42nd ST. NEW YORK

January 12, 1921.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS:

On the 22d day of May, 1919, Jane and Katherine Lee made a contract with Louis T. Rogers, agreeing to make pictures for him for a period of one year. This contract had a provision whereby Louis T. Rogers could assign it to a corporation known as the Rogers Film Company.

Working under unusual difficulties and impediments Jane and Katherine Lee made two pictures for the Rogers Film Company, at which time the funds and capital of that corporation having become entirely exhausted, the corporation was unable to proceed further. About the same time Irene Lee, the mother of Jane and Katherine Lee, obtained a judgment against the Rogers Film Company for $1731.60 for the salary of the Lee children and for money actually advanced to enable the corporation to finish the second picture.

The two pictures made by Jane and Katherine Lee have been released and distributed by the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation, under the names of "The Circus Imps" and "The Dixie Madcaps."

It now appears from advertisements and other facts that a third picture is about to be released under the name of "The Hicksville Terrors." This third picture is made up entirely of material that was cut out and discarded in the cutting of the other two pictures.

The undersigned, who is the mother of Jane and Katherine Lee, as well as their sole guardian and business representative, has protested against the distribution of this third picture as unfair to Jane and Katherine Lee, and has instructed her legal representatives to begin action, if in their opinion it is possible to enjoin the distribution of this so-called picture.

The undersigned desires to bring these facts to the attention of the exhibitors,

(1) because the picture is injurious to the name and reputation of the Lee children, as it is made up solely of material that was discarded in the first two pictures;

(2) because the release and distribution of this picture as a picture made by the Lee children is unfair to the exhibitors and moving picture patrons who are attracted by the work of the Lee children.

The undersigned will gladly give any exhibitor or patron any further information that he may desire.

Wid's DAILY — Sunday, January 9, 1921

Harry Leon Wilson's Yarn Makes Enjoyable Picture

"THE SPENDERS"
B. B. Hampton Prod.—Hodkinson

DIRECTOR ..... Jack Conway
AUTHOR ..... Harry Leon Wilson
SCENARIO BY ..... E. Richard Schayer
CAMERAMAN ..... Harry Vallejo
AS A WHOLE ..... Good production of a highly interesting story. Much bright comedy and many tense situations make it a thoroughly desirable offering
STORY ..... Humor and suspense evenly balanced. A tale that has a wide appeal DIRECTION ..... Good for the most part. There is a slight let-down near the end
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... All right
CAMERAWORK ..... Adequate
PLAYERS ..... Claire Adams, Robert McKim, Joseph Dowling and Niles Welch, handle principal roles in highly satisfactory manner. All the rest good
EXTERIORS ..... Several good westerns
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL ..... Might have put more of Wilson's lines in titles
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Old Western pioneer turns tables on Wall Street crooks who are fleecing his grandson
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 5,693 feet

It will be conceded by a big majority of picture patrons that Harry Leon Wilson's imaginative romance of the "West coming to the East," is the sort of tale that makes for real screen entertainment of the right sort, in its picture form. Nothing deep or problematic about it, but an enjoyable romance, the sort of entertainment that no one can find much fault with.

It's a clean, snappy comedy, with swift moving action most of the way through, and enough element of suspense to provide an exciting climax, even if it does turn out the way the audience has guessed. The scenarist and director are responsible for keeping the story true to its original form, and presenting it in a clear and smooth way.

The one spot in the picture where there seems to be a slight bit of stalling is toward the close, but it isn't long and the suspense previously created will make it unnoticeable to many.

The story begins with the Bines family in Montana City, after the death of Daniel J. Bines, the millionaire builder. Uncle Peter Bines, who founded the fortune, wants the family to stay in the west. P. Percival Bines, of the third generation, and his sister Psyche, want to live in New York.

Avice Milbrey of New York who is passing through Montana City in Rulon Shepler's private car, causes Percy to firmly decide for New York when he assists her to catch the train after a thrilling dash in an auto.

The family, except Uncle Peter, go to New York, where Percy falls in love with Avice, who is to be forced to marry Shepler because he holds financial reins on Avice's father. Shepler starts in to break Percy in Wall Street. Rumors of this reach Uncle Peter who comes to New York and plays a secret game in Wall Street, "coppering" all of Percy's bets. The financial crash comes and with it a blow at Percy's reputation on a frame-up involving him with a chorus girl.

Avice makes a financial clean-up through money invested with Uncle Peter, and she then lends it to the old man to win or loose for both of them.

Just when Percy thinks he hasn't a cent left, Uncle Peter appears with all the money won back. Avice straightens out her father's finances with her winnings, and the end finds her with Percy—now Peter—on their way to their home in the west.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You need not be afraid to make promises of a high class entertainment, good comedy, and a pretty little romance for this picture, because it will back you up, and undoubtedly will please your patrons, no matter what class audiences you cater to. Featuring the interest of the story itself is the best bet, although you also have well known names in the cast, in Robert McKim, Claire Adams, and Joseph Dowling. Tell them what it's about, as the idea of the crude old west corner cleaning up the Wall Street sharks carries an appeal.

Harry Leon Wilson is a well known and popular writer, and from the wide circle of readers who enjoy his stories in current magazines, his name will be valuable in your advertising.

Don't forget that the previous records of the above theatres were established during the good, big, fat, prosperous times, which specifically proves that "The Woman In His House" is the Best drawing card of the year, because in spite of the fact that everybody in the business is yelling "Hard Times" and "Business Gone to the Bow-wows" etc., "The Woman In His House" packs 'em in at the Lyric, Minneapolis, and the New Garrick, St. Paul, the entire week of blizzards, rain, slush, and everything that makes up rotten weather.

Motion Picture News

VOL. XXIII JANUARY 22, 1921 No. V

An Alliance of Arts

THE time—January 24th to 26th—is drawing near for the Conference at the Hotel Astor, New York, of the Motion Picture and Musical interests of the country.

This initial step to a most important end will, it is confidently expected, accomplish much. There will be a very large attendance. Widespread interest has been aroused in New York music trade circles and among the entire musical fraternity, many of whom are coming from far away points. We take occasion here to extend the thanks of the motion picture industry to John C. Freund, Editor of Musical America and The Music Trades for his genuine interest in and efforts for the practical success of the movement.

This first National Conference will be important not only for what it accomplishes—and the program promises many definite results—but also for what it sets in motion.

Obviously the best way for the musician and the musical industry to understand the theatre needs and, equally, for the theatre and the picture industry to make the most of music is for both interests to know each other and make their plans in common.

Briefly we need an alliance that will have for its constant and energetic aim—the simplification of motion picture music, its higher and more serviceable adaptation to the picture theatre program—all to the end of developing a finer expression of the picture and broader and higher type of picture theatre patronage.

We reiterate our belief that the motion picture theatre of the future is destined to be the country's concert theatre, the community centre for those who love and will grow to love good music.

Let's Shake Hands

RECENTLY, in an Ohio town, the church people and the picture theatre owners, met in what promised to be a stiff fight over the Sunday closing question.

One exhibitor, John Seiffert, President of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League, made a long address on the history of the motion picture leading up to an explanation of how better pictures have been made commercially possible and why they could not continue to develop if the industry were throttled by Sunday closing.

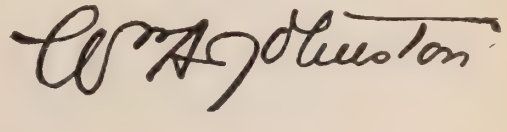
The explanation proved enlightening and satisfactory. A working alliance was arrived at between both sides and the outlook is most hopeful.

We stated recently that in our opinion this same mutuality of understanding and interest could readily be arrived at everywhere.

The church is a very old, a revered and a necessary institution. The motion picture is the modern medium of expression. The two are irremovable forces. They can move together but not against each other. The church can no more afford to fight the picture than the newspaper—still less; and the picture theatre cannot afford to antagonize the church.

We must remember, first of all, that the clergy, as with the public at large, has very little correct information and mostly misinformation about us. Among other misconceptions they believe that we are wallowing in easy money, that our insistence upon Sunday pictures is actuated only by a hysteria of greed. They know nothing of the mechanics or economics of the industry; as for pictures and picture theatres they are acquainted with so few that, consciously or not, they are utterly unfair towards them.

A general campaign of get-together is needed.



We emphasize the matter here because we believe it lies at the very root of the censorship and Blue Sunday menace, the guns of which are now booming on all sides.

There is no need for the exhibitor to wait for general action by his League or the National Association —nor for an eleventh hour rally against a reform lobby in his state legislature.

Let him start now to gain the understanding and confidence of his home town churches, and women's organizations. He can do this on his own; and we know that it can be done, because we have many reports right along that it is being done.

If in every town and city of the country the church and the theatre understood each other, censorship and other such radical attempts at reform would die at their roots. The professional reformers at legislative headquarters would have no backing; morally or financially.

And we can't help adding that a professional reformer minus a good salary is perfectly harmless.

Snapshots

By Wm. A. Johnston

Murray Garsson. Left for Jacksonville to rush the development of Fine Arts City. His slogan to be: "Saving on Production Cost." Ought to interest any producer these days. Speaks highly of Jacksonville's friendliness and broad spirit of enterprise. Says Fine Arts City will be able to house any number of companies and offers every studio facility. Ready, this Spring. Enthusiastic over Jacksonville's climate and scenery. 5000 photographs of "locations" now being made.

Tarkington Baker. Letter from far-off India, Bombay, where he manages Indian Famous Films, Lowgi Castle, Government House Gate Road. Says he's very happy over results achieved. And likes India, even though he celebrated Christmas under a sun-shade.

Howard Estabrook. Points out parallel between oil and pictures. 1870-1878 oil went through overproduction, depression, suspension of operation, riots, etc. By 1919 production had increased 2500 per cent and petroleum industry assets are now over seven billion dollars. "So the World does move," he adds. "Who limits the future of the Cinema probably would not have seen any possibilities in Guttenberg's printing press in 1460.

W. H. Drummond. The Knoxville Tenn., State Right man. In town. Says South is pretty blue over cotton. Florida, however, has biggest tourist crowd in its history. Theatres and exchanges have been doing rushing business. Predicts that Jacksonville will develop into a big producing center. Enthusiastic over its facilities and the spirit of its citizens.

Gowanda Opera House. John W. Schatt, owner; Mrs. Marie Cummings, manager. Deserve top of column in any theatre honor roll. Run a 500-seat theatre in a town of 4,000. Make it beautiful and make it pay. Rest rooms, wide, comfortable chairs, white and gold panels, attractive colored lights, special stage settings—but read the article itself next week. We've been begging Mr. Schatt for this material for some time. Fine man, this John Schatt. Takes pride in his theatre. Not an experiment. Has been going on—and successful—for several years. Every small town house can do likewise. And if every one did—well, what a solid, prosperous industry we'd have!

Robertson-Cole Insert. This issue. Very beautiful and striking. Dominates advertising pages—doesn't it? Well, that's good advertising. Last week two-page spread from Stoll Film Company deserves honorable mention. Also dominated.

Ellis Berg. San Francisco. Manager of Strand and Rialto theatres there. Excellent theatre man. In town. Looking for Eastern connection.

Jule and Jay J. Allen's Allen theatre, Cleveland, O., which opens Monday, Feb. 21st

New Allen House in Cleveland to Open Next Month

IF present plans do not miscarry, Cleveland will witness the opening of one of America's finest photoplay houses when the Allen theatre, on Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, now rapidly nearing completion, throws open its doors to the public on or about Monday, February 21. When completed, the structure will, it is said, represent the last word in modern theatrical construction, and although the Allen will not be the largest house in the United States, it will be one of the real show places of the country.

With a seating capacity of 3,500, the theatre will be devoted to the presentation of exceptional motion pictures. Producers of high class motion pictures are being invited by the Messrs. Allen to arrange for the premiere of their features to be exhibited in this theatre. This invitation has ben extended to the independent producers as well as to the established companies. Runs of one and two weeks, depending on the merit and drawing power of the picture being presented, will be the established policy of the house. All productions will be given elaborate presentations and special musical settings.

It is anticipated that many of the leading producers, distributors and exhibitors of the country will be present on the occasion of the opening.

F. G. Bradford. Back in New York after a year's health vacation in the South of France. Here's best wishes and a hearty handclasp to a modest, courageous gentleman to whom everybody in the trade will extend a hearty and sincere welcome. Needless to mention his long and efficient service as Gaumont's general manager. Mr. Bradford's future plans not announced as yet.

George M. Cohan. Gives a good reply to Ziegfeld's statement that actors' salaries are coming 'way down. George says: the thing to watch is the box-office line, not the actor's salary. Right! And it applies equally well to pictures—in the big theatres. The thing to watch is the box-office line, not the cost of production. As for stars' salaries—well, we'd all like to see them get less of the gross producing income, but—it's the box-office line that counts. And these days—above other days—we do want pictures that make box-office lines—or we don't want any: at least we can't afford them.

Getting-Rich-Quick. A producer—in our office, outlined his plans. Nearly took our breath away stating that he didn't expect to make a fortune on each picture. Didn't expect to make a fortune in a year. Not even in two years. Said he'd be perfectly happy if he could make a moderate but steady profit on each picture. A millennium! If everyone in the business were similarly minded, if we could eliminate the blue-sky poker players and financial fanatics—we'd be a long way toward stability.

Al Lichtman. Going into business for himself. As big a shock as the day we heard that Bennie Schulberg had stepped out of the Famous Players door. Welcome the opportunity to say "Good luck!" to Al in his new field. A regular fellow and a real film man. Succeeded by S. R. Kent. A recruit to Filmland from such commercial organizations as Crucible Steel. Clean-cut, forceful. Keep an eye on him.

Kaufman Issues Correction

E. H. Kaufman, of Inter-Ocean Film Accessories Corp., of Hollywood, in referring to an article published in the Motion Picture News of January 1st, under the heading of "Seeks Export Delegate at Foreign Trade Meeting," states that the inference was that he was aiming to have the trade represented in the foreign trade council. His intention was, he said, to have the trade get behind a movement to have the picture industry represented on committees as well as in the foreign trade finance corporation, organized for the purpose of furthering export trade.

Screen Made Object of Attack in Many Sections of Country

Sunday-Closing, Censorship, Barring of "Crook" Films Agitate Industry

THE motion picture screen appears to be the object of a general assault in many sections of the country, judging from the reports received from correspondents in various parts of the United States. Agitations for the closing of all cinema-theatres on Sunday, movements to legislate censorship into practice and the barring of pictures showing hold-ups and similar scenes are some of the "slings and arrows" under which the motion-picture is laboring at the present time. Not in all cases, however, are the so-called reform elements successful in their endeavors. Witness the following telegram from the United Theatrical Protective League, Inc., of Minneapolis, Minn.:

Sunday-Closing Defeated

"The first attempt in Minneapolis to get over a Sunday-closing was defeated by a vote of three to one at Waterville. The ordinance proposed would compel exhibitors to exhibit pictures to censors at three o'clock in the afternoon. If censors decided production unfit for projection, the theatre would be dark on that date. If the ordinance had passed at Waterville, many towns and smaller cities would have followed suit. The W. C. T. U. and other women organizations were back of the ordinance, and therefore its rejection is a big victory for the Northwest exhibitors. President Steffs personally conducted the fight against the ordinance for the league."

"Crook" Films Barred

From Chicago comes the following report:

"Motion pictures showing daring holdups have been ordered barred by Chief of Police Fitzmorris. His action came following the assertion of three boys who were sent to the reformatory that they decided to steal an automobile and turn 'stickup men' after having witnessed a film of 'crooks' at work. 'Even if the picture shows the criminals in cells as result of their work, it should not be shown,' was the dictum of the chief.

"The result of his order to the motion picture censors was a flurry in local exhibitors' and producers' circles, and efforts were made to ascertain just how far the chief intends to go.

"The chief's position is that his opposition was directed solely at actual criminal scene pictures showing holdups or burglaries. The censors themselves are very quiet as to the exact text of the order, but admit that it gives them much discretion.

"Dr. Atkinson, head of the Allied Amusement Association, declares there is nothing in the order for the exhibitors to worry about.

"I have made an engagement to discuss the matter with the chief," he said. "I know the chief is a reasonable man and I rather imagine that his order has been more or less misinterpretted. It is the old, old cry, but Judge David has ruled that the showing of a criminal or immoral scene in a picture is neither criminal or immoral and the producers and exhibitors have a recourse to the courts in the event of the censors going too far. But we have found the censors much more reasonable in the last year and we do not anticipate any trouble that will be costly to producers or exhibitors."

Censor Bill in Michigan

With but a few of the formalities of organization out of the way, a motion picture censorship bill fight is looming up in the Michigan State legislature as one of the early features of the Fifty-First session. The legislature convened last Wednesday, and three days later news of the censor bill leaked out. It is virtually the first legislative matter which has been taken up for consideration.

Mrs. Eva M. Hamilton, of the Sixteenth district, and Senator John W. Smith, of Port Huron, are working on the bill, it is reported. Details of the measure have not been made public, but it is promised that the bill will be submitted for legislative consideration within the near future. Mrs. Hamilton is the first woman to take a seat in the Michigan legislature or senate. Any bill in which she has a hand will earn for itself more general interests than if it had its origin in other sources.

It is the opinion of many that there is a sentiment in Michigan for a censorship bill. The interest in the matter has been growing for the last three years. The bill to be proposed, will, in general, place censorship power with the state department of public instruction. This would eliminate, it is claimed, the idea of a salaried board and the objection that such a board might come into the hands of the interests, cranks, or other prejudiced individuals.

Appeals from the decisions of the superintendent of public instruction to the Circuit Court would be provided in the case where motion picture concerns were not satisfied with the decisions of the independent.

Doom of Screen Foreseen

Nathan Burkan, an attorney in the film business, believes that the movies are doomed unless the course of the fanatics is checked.

Mr. Burkan justified his belief with facts that tended to prove that, even though the many published attacks on the screen are discounted by the majority of folks who read them, the thought expressed takes root in some minds, and these minds influence still others.

"This spreading of detrimental and unjustified propaganda against motion pictures must be stopped at once," he said. "I believe this can best be done by an intensive and far-reaching campaign of education and truth. These men and women who force their bigoted and misguided ideas on others must be fought with intelligence. The public must be brought completely to a knowledge that their motives are neither sincere nor constructive; the public must further be educated to an ever deeper belief in the motion picture. We in the industry must act at once."

M.P.T. Ass'n Active

Movements from within the industry to offset the attacks aimed at it from outside forces are also in evidence. Such a movement is being conducted at the present time by the M. P. T. Association of the World.

At a meeting of the M. P. T. Association of the World held in the ballroom of the Hotel Plaza, Tuesday morning, January 11th, 1921, Charles A. McMahon, chairman of Motion Picture Bureau of the National Catholic Welfare Council, in a short address, emphasized the fact that his organization had officially endorsed and

Ass'd Producers and Big Four to Combine

THE individual units of the Associated Producers and the United Artists have agreed upon the important details for the formation of a new corporation on the Coast this week or early next week. The new organization shall handle the distribution of the eleven producing organizations. The name for the new organization has not as yet been selected. Under the new arrangement, the Associated Producers and United Artists will retain their identity. This step is a revival of the proposals made prior to the formation of the Associated Producers.

The minor details will be worked out at a series of conferences to be held immediately after the arrival of Dennis O'Brien and Hiram Abrams, who are expected to reach the Coast on Wednesday. Oscar Price arrived in Los Angeles last week. None of the members of the Associated Producers would speak for publication. John Fairbanks declared: "There is more than a possibility of an association."

First National Franchise-Holders Convene at Chicago

Discuss National Activities and Witness Showing of the "Big Five"

OFFICIAL directors and prominent franchise-holders from all parts of the United States gathered in Chicago this week for the annual meeting of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc. According to a statement issued from the First National headquarters in New York, the meeting held in Chicago on Monday, January 10th, discussed important phases of the company's national activities and devoted special attention to ways and means of presenting and exploiting the group of super-special productions to be released by First National and constituting the group known as the "Big Five."

The conference was made the occasion to present to the franchise holders and a number of prominent independent exhibitors who had gathered in Chicago for that purpose, the five productions which form the cream of First National releases for the first part of 1921. "The Kid," the Chaplin six-reeler, led the series of showings on Monday afternoon, followed by "Passion," with Pola Negri, the continental star, in the evening. Tuesday afternoon the theatre owners witnessed "Man-Woman-Marriage," the Allen Holubar production starring Dorothy Phillips. "The Oath," a Raoul Walsh production, was set before the gathering Tuesday night. "Sowing the Wind," Louis B. Mayer's latest presentation of Anita Stewart, was put in view Wednesday afternoon, followed, in the evening by a new Katherine MacDonald production, "Trust Your Wife" as a surprise, though not one of "The Big Five."

According to the telegram from the News correspondent, great enthusiasm was shown over the splendid quality of the pictures projected for the assembled members. Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid" was hailed as a "sure winner," and this picture is to be released at once. In addition to the subjects mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the telegram reports that two other pictures were screened and are to be released at a later date. These pictures are "Not Guilty," a Sidney Franklin production, and "The Woman in His House," a Louis B. Mayer production.

At the outset of the conference, the indications were that much of the discussion would revolve around the arrangement of suitable prologues to enhance the presentation of each of the "Big Five" in the leading theatres of the countrty, the advisability of an increased scale of admission being recommended to the franchise holders in connection with all or some of the productions, and new departures in the advertising of them.

"Big Five" Shown to the Trade

FIRST showings of "The Big Five" of First National's were held in Chicago this week.

Of "The Kid," the long awaited Chaplin feature, L. H. Mason, Chicago representative of the News had this to say:

"It was worth waiting for: This must be the verdict after viewing this much-discussed picture in which Charlie Chaplin comes back, sharing honors, it is true, with Jackie Coogan, the wonderful child-actor, but winning new laurels by his own ability to bring tears as well as smiles.

"Real genius was shown in weaving together this story which abounds in heart interest and pathos, at the same time giving ample scope for the well-known brand of Chaplin comedy plus opportunities for exhibiting the sympathetic side of the Chaplin character."

Of "Thy Neighbor's Wife," Mason writes:

"This picture was adapted from the play, "Conscience." It is a beautifully filmed picture which has for its theme the power of a really good woman to bring forth the better instincts of a man who combines big business with love piracy. Katherine MacDonald's work is exceptional."

(Full reviews of these and the other pictures of the series will be given in next week's issue.)

It is felt by the First National leaders that this group of specials sets a new high mark in the offering of quality production to the exhibitors of the United States, and consequently they deserve to be surrounded, in the exploitation and presentation of them, with an atmosphere as unusual as the contents of the pictures themselves.

Among the members of Associated First National Pictures who participated in the conference were J. D. Williams, manager New York; Harry O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia secretary-treasurer; E. Bruce Johnson, chief of the legal department; Moe Mark, New York; Nathan Gordon, Boston; Skouras Brothers, St. Louis; Sol Lesser, Los Angeles; Ruben and Finkelstein, Minneapolis; John H. Kunsky, Detroit; C. L. Sanger, New Orleans; Ralph Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; Balaban and Katz, Chicago; Abe Blank, Omaha; Jacob Fabian and Abraham Fabian, Newark; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Tom Boland, Oklahoma City; J. G. Von Herberg, Seattle; Emanuel Mandelbaum, Cleveland; Ralph Clark, New York, and J. J. and Herbert Allen of Toronto, Canada. William J. Morgan, manager of the contract department at the home offi was also present.

Al Lichtman Resigns from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

Will Go Into Business for Himself; S. R. Kent Appointed as Successor

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week that he had tendered his resignation to Adolph Zukor, president, effective immediately. Mr. Lichtman is leaving Famous Players to fulfill his ambition to go into business for himself. His plans are nearing completion, and he will make them known shortly.

In a letter accepting the resignation of Mr. Lichtman, Mr. Zukor expressed deep regret at the former's decision to leave the company. "Although I have long known that you desired to go into business for yourself," he said, "I cannot accept your resignation without telling you how deeply I feel at the severance of business relations which have extended throughout all the years that have seen the growth of this company. You have been one of the principal factors in building up our organization, and during our association I have found you an executive of integrity, vision and rare ability. But, more than that, I have always counted you as one of my closest friends. I sincerely wish you the best of success in your new venture."

Mr. Lichtman is one of the best known men in the distribution fields of the motion picture business. In active charge of the distribution affairs of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a number of years, he probably numbers among his friends more motion picture men than any other man in the industry. Beginning his career in motion pictures while on a furlough from the United States Army in a recruiting office in Omaha, Mr. Lichtman's rise has been rapid. In 1910 he quit the army and became associated with the Chicago Exhibitors Advertising Company as a salesman of its advertising service among Chicago exhibitors. Later he was given the New York agency of this company and in the metropolis made the friendship of nearly all the men who were then leaders in the film industry. Severing his connection with the advertising company, he went into the business of selling motion pictures, his first position being with the Powers Film Co., selling pictures to independent exchanges, on a States Rights basis. In this connection he handled the sales of such pioneers among feature pictures as "Dante's Inferno," "Homer's Odyssey" and "The Life of Buffalo Bill."

At about this time Adolph Zukor announced the formation of the Famous Players Film Company, the object of which was to produce big pictures, featuring the best known stars of the dramatic stage in well-known plays. Mr. Lichtman immediately got into touch with

Al Lichtman, who has just resigned from the General Managership of the Department of Distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

Mr. Zukor and became identified with the sales department of the Famous Players Film Company. He subsequently left Famous Players and organized the Alco Film Company, of which Metro is the successor, and in three months built up a releasing organization with an output of one feature a week. When the Artcraft Pictures Corporation was formed for the distribution of pictures starring Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, Mr. Lichtman was appointed its general manager, and when Paramount and Artcraft merged into the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in 1918, Mr. Lichtman was placed in charge of Distribution. In this position he built up a sales organization which now has an average weekly record of $600,000.

In announcing his retirement from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Lichtman said: "It will be like leaving home—and a wonderful home at that. I shall always look back on the years I have been associated with Mr. Zukor as the happiest and most helpful of my whole life. I consider him the outstanding genius of the motion picture industry, but to me he always will be more than that—he is my best friend. During my association with him I have seen Famous Players grow from a dream into the greatest motion picture organization in the world, and there is no question but that its present greatness is due principally to the vision and wonderful ability of Adolph Zukor. Much as I regret leaving him, however, I do not feel justified in turning down the opportunity which has been presented to me. What my future plans are I shall make known shortly."

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced the appointment of S. R. Kent, now general sales manager, as general manager of the department of distribution, succeeding Al. Lichtman. The change becomes effective immediately.

The rise of Mr. Kent to his present eminent position has been rapid, but, according to those who have watched his progress, has been based on solid achievement. Before entering the motion picture business he was for seven years with the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, most of his work being in the West. Later he was with the American Druggists Syndicate as assistant to the president. He entered the motion picture business four years ago with the General Film Company, where he worked with former Postmaster-General Frank H. Hitchcock in liquidating the affairs of that company. Three years ago he became connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the administrative bureau in the New York office, and a few months later entered the distribution department as a special representative. Later he was appointed district manager of the territory embracing the Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and Des Moines exchange territories, which position he held until May, 1919, when he was called to the home office to become General Sales Manager.

"Production Not Suffering from Paralysis"

Paul Brunet on Return from Coast Denies Pessimism Prevails in the West

MOTION picture production is not suffering from "paralysis," notwithstanding the many statements to that effect which have found their way into print during the last few weeks. This denial is from no less an authority than Paul Brunet, president of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Brunet has just returned from a visit to Pacific Coast centres of picture production where he spent more than two weeks with the object of satisfying his own mind regarding the actual production situation. Not only did he discover that there is no "paralysis," but that there has been none.

"It is true," said the president of Pathe Exchange, "that there has been a falling off in the output of pictures at most of the Pacific Coast studios, but that was a healthy reaction due to a period of overproduction. It was not influenced by any pessimistic attitude on the part of exhibitors, for it is not true that any such attitude has existed. It simply was good business to slow up for a little while and prepare for the era of greater general prosperity presently to arrive, and which was foreseen.

"Much of the misinformation regarding production conditions that has been printed came from sources that never are entirely reliable. At these production centres there is a constant ebb and flow of people working, and seeking work, as 'extras.' They are employed for mob scenes and work of that sort, whenever it is essential that the film show a crowd in connection with the action of the principals in the drama. Naturally enough, these people call themselves 'movie actors,' and usually are willing enough to express their views for publication. Their employment always is irregular, and whenever production lets down temporarily for any cause whatever they are the first to feel the effect. Whereupon they view the general situation with much pessimism—and often these views are printed in good faith as coming from bona fide members of the profession. This is what happened during the last few weeks, and is largely responsible for the unjustifiable accounts of 'paralysis' in motion picture production.

"I, myself, was considerably disturbed by these reports. But I have returned from a personal investigation of the actual conditions on the Pacific Coast in a most optimistic frame of mind. There is, and has been, no 'paralysis.' Conditions are more fundamentally healthy than ever before in the history of the industry. Picture producers have taken a leaf out of the book of other manufacturers, and of dealers in staple articles of general consum tion, and luxuries, and have cleared t way for renewed activity under bright auspices—with a general tendency towa an advance in quality.

"My investigations were broadened a rendered simpler by the presence on t Pacific Coast at this season of the year a large number of visitors from the Ea and other sections of the country—men wealth and authority all of the importa industries. Without exception, their vie and their plans for the immediate futu reflected the attitude and the correspon ing actions of the picture producers as have stated them. All through the indu trial world the decks have been cleared fo action that spells solid prosperity.

"The picture studios have passed throug their period of preparation for the prom ising near future and exhibit no mor signs of retrenchment. But I was struc by indications everywhere of a settled de termination to proceed henceforth on line assuring a higher quality of productions Emphasis was placed on this policy at th various centres where serials and feature are produced for Pathe distribution. I was in the air at the Brunton and the Ha Roach studios, and in a hardly less degre elsewhere. The merchants of Los Angele are sharing this optimistic attitude.

Three-Dimension Photography Is Perfected

New Camera Will Make It Possible to Project Dimension of Depth on Screen, Is Claim

THE day of natural vision photography has at last arrived, according to George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, and one of the pioneers and most prominent figures in the motion picture industry, who announces that after years of experiment the stereoscopic camera has been perfected and will be put upon the market at an early date, although plans for the commercial exploitation of the camera have not yet been completed.

The importance of this announcement to the motion picture industry is realized when it is understood that this means that pictures on the screen can be given the third dimension, that is depth, making persons or objects on the screen stand out as if we actually were viewing them with our eyes in real life.

P. John Berggren, who was born in Sweden, is the actual inventor of the new two-eye camera and has brought it to its present state of perfection after working under the personal supervision of Mr. Spoor, who financed the undertaking, at the Essanay Laboratories in Chicago for four years, previous to that having been engaged in study and experiments on stereoscopic photography for eight years.

Mr. Spoor, despite the statement of experts that stereoscopic photography was an impossibility, as applied to the screen, decided eight years ago that it could be made practical and started on a series of experiments and the camera which has now been perfected, was based on Mr. Spoor's original idea.

Four years ago his investigations had convinced Mr. Spoor that he was on the right track and he decided to cease his large production and distribution activities and give his attention entirely to the perfection of the stereoscopic camera. He thereupon liquidated his various motion picture interests and started on the work.

The Spoor-Berggren camera may be called the two eye camera as instead of a single lense, used in cameras up to the present time, it has two lenses set a short distance apart which result in two images of the same object from slightly different angles being photographed. This process results in a picture, which, when correctly projected on the screen, shows an image exactly as seen by the human eye, as opposed to the flat picture (lacking the third dimension, or depth) such as we have been accustomed to seeing. The difference may be explained by saying that the two eye camera photography is like looking at a statue with a natural background, whereas the present picture is like a painting of the statue.

According to Mr. Spoor, the cameras now in use may be made into stereoscopic cameras for the taking of binocular vision pictures, by the addition of a small attachment and that this is also true of the present-day projectors which may also be equipped for throwing stereoscopic pictures on the screen.

Mr. Spoor considers the Spoor-Berggren camera the most important contribution to the popularity and advance of the motion picture industry since the start of the industry and believes that it will have a very beneficial effect upon the immediate future of the picture business.

Both the optical instruments and mechanical devices which produce the stereoscopic pictures have been fully protected by basic patents owned by Mr. Spoor, whose large fortune, which he made in the motion picture industry, has enabled him to bring his experiments to a successful conclusion despite the enormous expense entailed.

Further announcement as to his plans for commercial exploitation of the invention are expected at an early date.

Campaign for Hoover Fund Arousing Great Enthusiasm Everywhere

Plans Under Way in All Sections to Make Jan. 26 Truly "Great Day"

EXHIBITORS throughout the country are responding enthusiastically to Herbert Hoover's call for aid for Europe's starving children. Mr. Hoover's appointment of seventy-two regional chairmen in the various cities to represent the Joint Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America has injected "pep" into the campaign and from every quarter comes news of exhibitor plans which insure success of the great undertaking.

With few exceptions the exhibitors selected by Mr. Hoover to direct the campaign in the various territories have wired their acceptances, many of them outlining plans for raising funds. In New York the campaign has been started with a rush by S. L. Rothafel, the regional chairman for Greater New York. It seems probable that through his efforts and the efforts of the New York Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, of which William Brandt is president, that a large number of New York theatres will donate their entire receipts on Motion Picture Day, January 26, to the Hoover fund. There are strong indications, too, that this plan will be followed by hundreds of other theatres in other cities and towns.

Mr. Rothafel is arranging a special children's matinee to be given in practically every New York theatre on the morning of Saturday, January 29, tickets for which will be sold by the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and other organizations which are allied with the European Relief Council in the "Save the Children" drive. At the Capitol theatre, of which Mr. Rothafel is managing director, one of the most elaborate children's shows ever staged there will be given at that time.

At a midnight mass meeting held in the Capitol theatre, New York City, on January 12, a large number of exhibitors convened at the call of Mr. Rothafel to discuss ways and means to make "Motion Picture Day," January 26, one of the greatest days in the local motion picture history. Mr. Rothafel presided at the gathering.

In Philadelphia Jules Mastbaum has set in motion the machinery of the Stanley Company, with its big chain of theatres, to insure the success of the drive there. In accepting Mr. Hoover's appointment as regional chairman for Eastern Pennsylvania, Mr. Mastbaum wired: "Accept appointment. All resources of Stanley Company of America and motion picture men in this section at your service. Have appointed Frank W. Buhler as assistant and will organize at once."

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, has also started the ball rolling. E. V. Richards has wired Mr. Hoover: "You have the co-operation of the entire Saenger organization and its personnel, with the same hundred per cent. energy we volunteered in behalf of the motion picture during the war. Will advise you fully after meeting parties you instructed me to meet."

Mike Shea of Buffalo, was early with his acceptance. His answer was: "I will be pleased to accept and am starting immediately to get action for this worthy cause."

From Michigan comes encouraging news. J. C. Ritter, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan has wired Mr. Hoover: "You may depend upon the motion picture theatre owners of Michigan to extend their fullest co-operation. Arrangements are being completed to put Michigan over the top. The co-operation of the various organizations contained in your wire has been assured. January 26 definitely set as Hoover Day in Michigan and the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association assures its whole-hearted support."

James Q. Clemmer of Seattle, Thomas G. Vic Roy of Denver, E. T. Peter of Dallas, Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, Theodore Jelenk of Schenectady, Louis F. Blumenthal of New Jersey, and a host of others have wired accepting their appointments as chairmen and giving hearty assurances of co-operation. E. H. Bingham of Indianapolis, wired: "Will start campaign immediately and give all there is in me to produce largest fund possible for this worthy cause." And so it goes through the list.

At the headquarters of the Motion Picture Committee of the European Relief Council at 122 West Forty-ninth street, New York, the energetic C. C. Pettijohn and a corps of workers are busy night and day answering letters and wires and keeping the men of the industry thoroughly posted on what is being done. William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, are working earnestly and consistently to bring out the industry's best effort and they feel

A broadside to exhibitors throughout the country has been prepared and sent by the Motion Picture Committee to every theatre in the United States. It tells the theatre owners concisely as possible what is expected of them. One side of the sheet is in the form of a poster which is intended to be hung in the theatre lobby. It is a message to the public calling attention to the fact that 3,500,000 babies are starving just across the Atlantic and that no more appropriate place to contribute to their aid can be found than in the motion picture theatre. On the back of the one-sheet is an appeal to the exhibitor to take off his coat and work to make the "save the babies" campaign a credit to the industry.

"Three and a half million children are starving just beyond the Atlantic," reads the broadside. "They are blood relatives of some of the people who support your theatre. Herbert Hoover, humanitarian and international statesman, has asked the motion picture industry to help save these children. The industry has welcomed the opportunity to show its strength.

"You know a score of reasons why we should regard this as 'golden opportunity.' Too much has been said about the cold commercialism of this great business of ours. Too little has been shown of the genuine humanity of the men and women engaged in the motion picture industry. Idle talk that disparages this form of entertainment, so dear to the people's hearts, all too often crystalizes into harmful restraint. Upon our success or failure in this great work of charity a great deal depends."

The broadside message to exhibitors states that while there is no air-tight, driving organization in the movement the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners' of America have given to Herbert Hoover the word of the industry as a whole that 250,000 of the starving children would be saved by the picture men, which, at $10 a life, represents the sum of $2,500,000.

Carl Laemmle Leaves for the West Indies

MR. CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has just left for Havana, Cuba, where he will personally supervise work on Eddie Polo's new serial, "The Seal of Satan," now being filmed in Cuba and the West Indies.

Mr. Laemmle was accompanied by his daughter, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, and by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Anna Spreckles. They first went to Palm Beach and Miami for a short stay before proceeding to Cuba.

The Eddie Polo company has been in Havana for several weeks under the direction of J. P. McGowan, veteran serial director for Universal. Among those with the company are Inez McDonnell and Magda Lane, Polo's two leading women for his current serial.

Mr. Laemmle expects to remain in Cuba for several weeks. It is his intention to be present when the Polo company films important scenes in and around such historic points as Morro Castle and San Juan Hill.

First Nat'l of New Jersey Elects Officers

The policy of offering to the sub-franchise holders direct participation in the operation and conduct of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was put into action at the first business meeting of the Associated First National Pictures of New Jersey, Inc., at the Robert Treat Hotel, Newark, N. J., on Thursday, January 6.

Between thirty and forty out of a total of ninety-two sub-franchise holders of the state gathered around the luncheon board on the second floor of the hotel, Jacob Fabian, of Paterson and Newark, the franchise holder for the state, and Abraham M. Fabian and S. H. Fabian, his sons, made the sub-franchise holders welcome as they arrived, and upon the conclusion of the luncheon, the business session opened with a bang.

The balloting resulted in the election as director of Irving Rose, Union Hill; William C. Hunt, Haddon Heights, N. J.; Henry Haring, Hackensack; and Benjamin Nussbaum, Newark.

The five directors already elected are Jacob Fabian, President of Associated First National Pictures of New Jersey, Philip Dimond, of Paterson, A. M. Fabian, Simon H. Glass, and S. H. Fabian.

The Exhibitors' Advisory Committee was unanimously agreed upon as follows:

Morris Feldman, of the Grand Palace, Newark; Alexander Oaken, of the Cranford Theatre, Cranford; Benjamin Schindler, of the Victorial Theatre, Camden; Herman Austerman, of the Playhouse, Newark; Louis Belinger, of the Summit Theatre, West Hoboken; Lewin Pizor, of the Leader Theatre, Gloucester; Mrs. Lillian Webbe, of the Park Theatre, Nutley; Philip Bornstein, of the Criterion Theatre, Newark; F. A. Struve, of the Arcade Theatre, Princeton; Adolph Bauernfreund, of the Cortland Theatre, West Hoboken; and A. B. Smith, of the Fenwick Theatre, Salem.

Anthony Gablik to Entertain Screen Men

Anthony Gablik, who has done some wonderfully creative art work for the advertisers of motion pictures will entertain a number of motion picture executives and writers at his new and elaborately furnished studio, 70 West Forty-fifth street, on Friday evening, January 21, which informal function will also serve to introduce in this country three famous musicians, Josef Kardos, pianist; Stanley Deak, celloist, and Adalbert Loblovitz, violin virtuoso.

This evening of art and music for the motion picture people is to be the first of a series that will be given by Mr. Gablik regularly during the winter musical season. Other prominent musical lights will be featured at the future musicales, one of which in the near future will be for New York's music critics and music writers, at which the first public appearance of an eleven-year-old Polish violinist of unusual technical merit will be made.

News Photographers Plan Big Time Feb. 5

News photographers representing New York dailies, syndicates and motion picture weeklies will assemble again to make merry at the seventh annual dinner of the News Photographers' Association of New York, which will be held at the Cafe Boulevard, Broadway and Forty-first street, on Saturday evening, February 5, 1921.

The affair is expected to bring together the largest number of news photographers that has ever gathered on such an occasion.

The arrangements committee, which is working energetically to make the dinner a huge success, is composed of Sy Siedman, chairman; Edward Jackson, "Pop" Wortheim, H. Baader and H. Stockhoff.

Henry Ginsberg Visiting Educational Exchanges

Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales forces of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is this week visiting the Boston and New Haven branches. In each city he will hold meetings of the entire sales forces and outline some of the newest plans of the organization.

Harry Owens Back from "Tie-Up" Trip

Harry M. Owens, sales promotion representative of J. Parker Read, Jr., who has been on the road for eleven weeks visiting the W. W. Hodkinson Exchange Managers in the interest of the J. Parker Read, Jr., Productions for the purpose of "tieing up" a sales campaign with the J. Parker Read, Jr., Scenario Test, returned to the Coast last Monday. As a result of Mr. Owens trip over fifty newspapers in the larger cities of the United States and Canada are now running the J. Parker Read Scenario Test, which is creating widespread interest for Louise Glaum.

New Distributing Organization in Canada

W. P. Nichols of Vancouver, B. C., one of the large independent exhibitors of Canada, is the principal behind a move to establish a country-wide moving picture exchange for exhibitors in the Dominion. Mr. Nichols has organized the Canadian Exhibitors' Distributing Company Limited, it is announced, and the capital of this company is $5,000,000, it is stated Mr. Nichols is the proprietor of a chain of fifteen theatres in the West and recently acquired the Majestic theatre of Winnipeg, Manitoba, which was re-opened after additional features and repairs costing $30,000 had been made. Mr. Nichols is also interested in the new Garrick theatre of Winnipeg, a large downtown theatre which will be formally opened in February, and also in the Strand theatre, Brandon, Manitoba. It is announced that he will extend his chain of theatres to Eastern Canada, following a recent visit to Toronto.

Mr. Walter P. Wilson of Winnipeg, is the managing director of both the Garrick and Majestic theatres and, incidentally, the second of these houses is being renamed the Rialto theatre.

Scenic Artists Plan Big Ball on March 9

Scenic artists plan to hold their annual ball and entertainment at the Waldorf-Astoria, in New York, March 9. It is being planned on a big scale by the officials and 400 members of the United Scenic Artists Local Union 829, whose offices are at 161 West 46th street, New York City.

Chairmen of the various committees in charge of the ball are as follows: Walter Percival, advertising; Charles Lessing, ball committee; George H. Williams, decorations; Shirley Braithwaite, entertainment; W. S. Darrell, publicity; M. V. Scott, picket.

Posters to advertise the affair have been printed by many of the artists and will be exhibited at the ball.

No Blue Laws Against Pictures in England

Visiting Executive Says No Sunday-Closing Order Is Expected for Film Houses

THE blue law agitation has not obtained a foothold in England, nor is there any likelihood of its doing so for a long time, according to Arthur Clozenberg, managing director of the Film Booking Office, (1919) Ltd., London, now in New York City to confer with Mr. Carl Leammle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Although theatres and cabarets are closed Sunday in England, a number of motion picture theatres are open and play to capacity, giving a percentage of their proceeds to charity.

"Excellent opportunities await the American capitalist eager to invest in the construction of English motion picture theatres," said Mr. Clozenberg in a recent interview. "There are at present very few large motion picture theatres in England. Next to the cost of building, the greatest obstacle in the way of progress along these lines is governmental interference. Such interference by His Majesty's government may be anticipated until the housing crisis has been settled.

"Unrest would result if elaborate theatres were erected while thousands of families remain homeless," he continued. "The film industry is making the best of the situation by remodelling all the available legitimate theatres until business and housing conditions are again normal.

"So pressed were the motion picture exhibitors for theatre space that they were forced to show films for six weeks in the Covent Garden opera house, the only opera house in England," said Mr. Clozenberg. "Considerable annoyance was manifested by the musical interests, who pointed out that the dread menace of the films had finally arrived. The film industry denied the implication of sacrilege and endeavored to prove that the character and quality of the films were of such excellence as to constitute the real competition—not the fact that lower admissions were being asked for entertainment. In any event opera will never fall into disfavor in England," he said.

"I am delighted and amazed at the beauty and artistry evidenced in the presentation of motion pictures at the better class American 'movie houses,' he continued. "One or two exhibitors in England are endeavoring to present films with the same elaborate display, and I hope the time soon will come when we, on the other hand, will have just as gorgeous and sense-satisfying presentations.

"We English like the American-made pictures immensely. The only discordant note is struck by those who do not like the idea of English capital being sent to the United States. They think they can make just as good pictures in England," he said. "This remains to be seen. Our principal difficulty lies with our damp, and frequently sunless climate. Many English film enthusiasts feel as I do, that American-made pictures suit us as well as the English variety.

"As a competitive product, German films are not to be regarded seriously. English exhibitors passed a resolution, during the war, that they would not show any German-made films for a period of five years after the armistice was signed. They declined to book 'Passion' despite the fact that they were confident it would prove a financial success," continued Mr. Clozenberg. "Thus, German films, may be eliminated from competition with American-made films for the next few years at least.

"The present flooded condition of the English film market further precludes any thought of German competition. Almost 95 per cent. of the films now in England awaiting release are of American manufacture. American publicity and exploitation methods are fast gaining ground in England and the people are becoming accustomed to your more sensational methods of advertising films.

"All the exploitation in the world," Mr. Clozenberg concluded, "is of little value when all our theatres already are signed up with bookings for months in advance."

Mr. Clozenberg recently arrived from England. Universal films are distributed throughout Great Britain exclusively by his organization, the Film Booking Offices, Ltd. The F. B. O. as it is called, is controlled by Sir Edward Hulton Bart, one of the most prominent newspaper owners in England. Sir Hulton owns a chain of London newspapers, including the Daily Despatch, Evening Standard, Daily Sketch, Sunday Herald and Evening Chronicle. Closely allied to his newspapers is one of the most successful newsfilms in England, the "Topical Budget."

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

R. I. Seeks Sunday Opening

A bill to legalize Sunday moving picture performances in Providence R. I., was introduced on the second day of the General Assembly which has just opened. The bill is similar to that introduced last year, which was passed by the House of Representatives, but which was railroaded in the Senate. The bill if it became a law would allow moving picture shows between 3 and 6 p. m. and after 8 o'clock on Sunday. Licensees would be called upon to pay a license fee of $11 for each Sunday performance.

Much discussion was entered into last year in favor of the bill, and it is expected that an early impetus will be given the measure this season, and at the present time its passage seems assured, as it has the backing of the Motion Picture Operators' Union.

Plan Detroit Censorship

A new plan for moving picture censorship, which it is claimed meets the approval of all parties concerned, is expected to be put in operation in Detroit soon. It was originated by Dr. M. C. Pearson, executive secretary of the Detroit Council of Churches, who claims to have received the approval of Mayor Couzens and Police Commissioner Inches and to have been offered the co-operation of exhibitors throughout the city.

A board of three censors will be appointed and maintained under the recreation commission, according to the new plan. At present there is one censor, appointed in the police department. It is planned to retain his services and add one member recommended by women's clubs and one recommended by the churches. It is said that the theater managers have offered to provide a hall in which previews of pictures may be shown to the censors.

Buffalo Exhibs Clear Deck

Buffalo exhibitors and exchangemen are all set to fight any aggressive move on the part of a body of local "reformers" who, it is understood, hope to put through a local censorship ordinance. At a meeting of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association in the Hotel Iroquois last week, a committee of exhibitors and exchange men was appointed to represent the association at a meeting between the managers association and the committee behind the censorship movement, which it is planned to hold soon.

Clever and effective lobby display on "Once to Every Woman" used by the Rivoli theatre, Portland, Ore.

Getting Local "Big Men" to Endorse the Show

That the endorsements of local persons are much to be preferred over those of some national authority in the industry has been proven by Harold Wendt, exploitation and advertising man of the Rivoli theater of Toledo, in his campaign for "The Soul of Youth." Here's the way Wendt worked:

After getting his regular publicity campaign under way, Mr. Wendt arranged a special screening for important city officials, and heads of various civic departments, and after showing, while they were still under the influence of the picture, a stenographer took down their enthusiastic endorsements.

Prints Program on Post Cards

S. O'Hare, manager of the Armory and Swan theatres, Clarinda, Iowa, claims to have found the perfect program for the small-town manager, when everything is considered, especially the matter of expense.

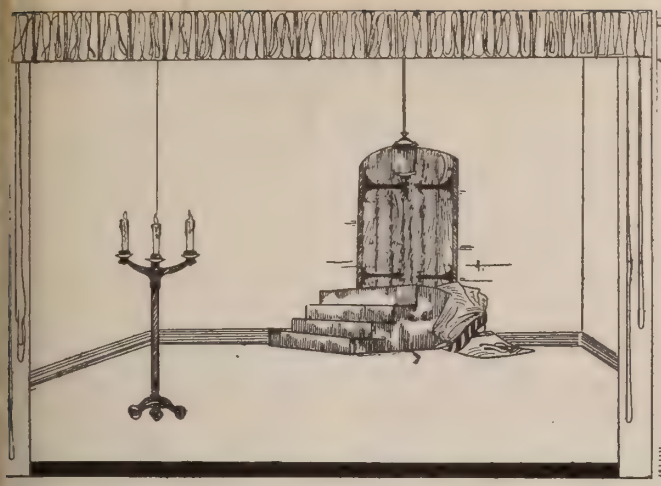
Mr. O'Hare has his week's bill printed on an ordinary post-card, on one end of which has been punched a hole. "Hang me up," explains the why the hole has been placed in the card.

Mr. O'Hare has reduced his program expense from $45 a week to $15 by using the post-cards, and finds the results obtained are quite as satisfactory.

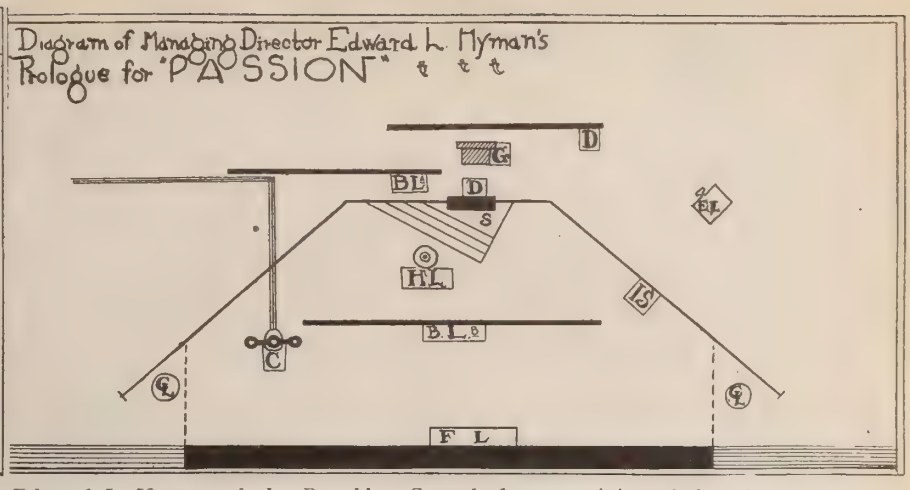
"Mystery Woman" Stunt Goes Over at San Jose

One of the latest stunts sprung by "Pep" (W. W.) Kofeldt, manager of the Pathe exchange, San Francisco, is the tie-up with San Jose merchants and department stores and the local newspaper to exploit Pathe pictures in that town.

Full page advertisements were run Christmas week by the various stores in the tie-up advertising that two season passes to Loew's Hippodrome theatre and $25 in gold to the person who first recognized and accosted "the Pathe Riddle Woman," whose picture was published blindfolded. The woman was to be found in certain of the stores concerned in the tie-up. The little California city became extremely excited over the stunt which had the backing of the town's largest newspaper and the value of the resulting exploitation is very gratifying to the originator of the idea.



Deardourff to Practice What He Preached



C. C. Deardourff, who recently took over the management of the Sigma theatre at Lima, Ohio, after resigning as special exploitation man for Goldwyn Picture Corporation, gave his patrons a taste of the kind of advertising he has been prescribing for other exhibitors during the past two years when he decorated the lobby of his house with big pasteboard question marks and other display cards bearing questions that would excite interest in his feature, "The Forbidden Thing."

The white question marks danced in the breezes as it hung from the glass panels that form a frame for the roof of the lobby. They could be seen all along the street, and brought people away from their regular destination, to see what the display was all about. In addition, Mr. Deardourff used plenty of newspaper space, teaser ads and billboard advertising, with most satisfactory results. Mr. Deardourff intends to give Canton movie fans a series of novel exploitation, putting into practice for his own profit, the advice he has been successfully handing out to other exhibitors in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Michigan.

Stage setting and the characters which appeared in a special prologue for "The Last of the Mohicans" as presented by the Strand theatre, Brooklyn

Detailed Plans for "Passion" Prologue

Complete Working Script of Edward L. Hyman's Recent Specialty Creation

THE NEWS is able to give its readers a practical working script for a prologue on "Passion," as staged by Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Mark Strand theatre, Brooklyn, with personal assurance that Mr. Hyman's creation is highly dramatic and worth copying.

After the "Robespierre" overture, which included an interpolation of the Marseillaise," the curtains part, revealing a dimly lighted French interior. In the center, upstage is flight of four steps, leading to a pair of heavily hinged oak beam effect doors. Immediately over the stairs is suspended a hanging lamp of French design. In the foreground, right stage is a three bracket candelabrum, and from each of the brackets, representing candles, a tiny red bulb is burning. The three walls of the room are tinted a light brown, and under the dim blue lights from the floaters and calciums the room is impressively dark, with lights shining from only the suspended lamp and the candles. "Passion," interpreted by a woman gowned in crimson fluff stuff, barefooted, and with cherry ornaments for head-dress, enters from right stage. "Passion" registers her part by picking up a red scarf which has been thrown across the stairs, and goes through the business of wrapping the red scarf about her semi-bared shoulders.

Jeanne enters several seconds after "Passion's" entrance, and is costumed almost identically with Pola Negri in the picture. "Passion" moves toward Jeanne with sinuous movements, and at the same time removes from her own neck a necklace of jewels, going through the business of tempting Jeanne with the display of gems. The movement of the characters is now bringing them almost center stage, and at this point an interpretative dance goes forward typifying the fight of "Passion" to overcome the God-fearing conscience of Jeanne. As the dance begins, an intense white spot light is thrown on the door, from the booth. The doors are transparent and reveal a singer (coloratura soprano) in the period costume (Louis XV) of royalty, who renders "Polonnaise" from "Mignon."

The line cuts above illustrate the technical part of this prologue script. On the opposite page is a cut showing the characters in and the set for Mr. Hyman's special number.

As the dance moves on and becomes more spirited, the lights begin to come down. With the finale, the white spot is removed from the singer, a candle light goes out, and "Passion" and "Jeanne" conclude their dance by attitudinizing fright, looking in the direction of the door which, lit from behind, reveals a guillotine bathed in red light, with ominous blue flashes across the sky. The second candle goes out, and cannonading is heard from offstage. The lights keep going down until only the hanging lamp over the door and the little red candle are visible. As the cannonading becomes more intense, the light in the hanging lamp goes out, and the lights on the guillotine begin to come down. At this point a very powerful baritone, from off stage, picks up the chorus of the "La Marseillaise" as the orchestra finishes the verse. With the last high note of the French anthem, the remaining candle goes out and "Passion" is shot on the screen.

The following list contains the key to the diagrams:

FOOTLIGHTS: Blue with opening of curtain, and by means of interworking dimmer, come down steadily with development of the scene.

CALCIUM LIGHTS: Light blue. With aperature opened to full size the lights begin coming down. As Jeanne enters, calcium on left stage goes out.

CANDELABRUM: This three-bracket candelabrum as seen in sketch was made especially by the Strand property man, inasmuch as it is very difficult to buy, rent or borrow a three-bracket candelabrum with three distinct lines; enabling the electrician to douse one light at a time. First candle goes out as dance ends. Several seconds after guillotine is seen the second candle goes out, and just before the curtain, candle number three goes out.

BORDER LIGHTS: These lights (marked BLB on diagram) are blue, and come down with the footlights—steadily.

BORDERLIGHTS: These lights are dipped a brilliant crimson, and come up only after white spot has been removed from singer.

HANGING LAMP: Of French period design. Contains cluster of small frosted Mazdas. This light goes out as canonnading begins, and just before the baritone solo of "Marseillaise."

STEPS: Constructed especially for this set. These steps do not run at right angles to the door but run off back wall of set, at a tangent.

DOORS: Painted on transparent cloth. Made to represent the heavy Gothic period doors, with massive bolts and hinges.

GUILLOTINE: This guillotine stands about four feet high, giving the effect of perspective, because of its dimunitive size.

DROP. Small crimson painted drop to help the effect of bathing the guillotine with the border lights.

EFFECT LIGHT: At cue from orchestra leader operator of this lamp takes cap on and off light, and this operation goes on when red border lights are up. Lamp is trained on guillotine and effect is that of blue lightning streaks across crimson sky.

The only other effect employed was a white spot from the booth, and a purple spot from overhead playing on "Passion." The purple spot is slowly irised with ending of the dance.

Umbrellas, Not Rain Checks, Handed Out

When the Clemmer and Wintergarden theatres of Seattle, Wash., played "The Mark of Zorro" day and date, so unusual a thing that a great deal of stress was laid on the fact, special attention was paid to the house decorations, interior and exterior, doing everything in Spanish colors and giving the theatres a distinctly Spanish atmosphere. The usherettes were garbed in Spanish costumes, with short dresses, while the doormen and outside attaches were dressed in the black bandit garb, similar to that which "Doug" uses in the picture.

It rains the best part of five months in Seattle, and the management utilized their exploitation ideas to make their patrons comfortable while standing in line in the rain, by supplying them with large umbrellas on the top of which was printed "Going to see Douglas Fairbanks in 'The Mark of Zorro.'" Besides the comfort the umbrellas gave, they were extremely attractive to the thousands of people who passed in the trolley cars and in autos. The managers of both theatres have decided to use umbrellas for the comfort of their patrons all during the rainy seasons now.

"Silk Hosiery" Title Cleverly Used

When it came to planning the exploitation for the run of "Silk Hoisery," Palace theatre, Wichita, the usual newspaper and outdoor advertising campaign was supplemented by a small teaser booklet. The front page was a brief outline of "Silk Hosiery" defined as a "Hand-Embroidered Paramount picture," while the back page advertised the Palace theatre and advertised the picture as a "beauty picture, fine as silk."

The display came in the intervening pages, the entire back length of the booklet, which could be unfolded until it stretched in a single sheet, being a study of various kinds of displays. There were shoes, stockings (feminine), sometimes garters and a border. The stockings were, in every instance, tenanted.

It was a complete display of feminine silk hosiery and peculiarly appropriate to the picture, even though it failed to show any stars, or, in fact, a single face in the display.

Original Angle for Exploiting "In Search of a Sinner"

Clifford A. Carroll, manager of the Carroll theatre, Rome, New York, put ov a neat exploitation stunt recently when h called upon all the young men of his cit to evidence their ambitions to become de tectives. Mr. Carroll utilizes this origin idea for the showing of "In Search of Sinner."

About a week previous to the run c "In Search of a Sinner," Mr. Carro caused the following ad to be inserted i the local daily newspaper in the "Mal Help Wanted" column:

"WANTED—Alert, Able-Bodied Ma to act as Private Detective in search of sinner. Phone 808 between 7 and 9 p.m.

According to Mr. Carroll, "the pape hadn't been out on the streets for an hou before the telephone began ringing. I ha to leave the front of the house; wasn' able to watch the projection and, in fact couldn't do anything but attend to tha phone."

Portland, Ore., Stages Elaborate Prologue

Nineteen persons are used in the prologue being put on at the Liberty theatre last week in connection with "Love, Honor and Behave."

Paul E. Noble, manager of the Liberty, planned the entire act, all lines, settings and costumes having originated with him. The prologue is called an "atmospheric setting" for the comedy which follows and reproduces an imaginary scene from a sultan's harem.

The "admissions" to a special tin can show which the Hippodrome theatre, Wolfe City, obtained for the first episode of "Daredevil Jack." According to F. M. Ferguson, manager of the Hippodrome, the stunt gave the serial a big send off

Cozy Presents Fashion Revue

"You Never Can Tell" Tie-up at Topeka, Kan., Proves Most Successful

WHEN Bebe Daniels in "You Never Can Tell," appeared at the Cozy theatre, Topeka, Kansas, December 6-11, she had plenty of competition and publicity.

Manager Harriet Ruth Wright provided both. The competition was furnished in a fashion revue, arranged by Lee D. Balsly, of Realart's Kansas City office, as prologue to the picture.

For the fashion show some of the prettiest girls in the city were selected. The most advanced styles in feminine gowns were supplied by a number of the leading stores, which came in for their share of mention in connection with the revue. The local angle of the show was played up thoroughly and aroused wide interest, the newspapers commenting on it at length in their news columns.

Another feature on the programme was a "Get in the Movies" campaign. This was also well advertised in the Topeka papers and received a great deal of space as a news item. The idea was that everybody could get in the movies—if they were the right type. The only way to find out, the advertisement contended, was to appear before the camera. An opportunity to do this was offered, through Miss Wright, when a cameraman went to the State Capitol grounds to take pictures of the girls appearing in the fashion revue. Topeka people were invited to be present and get in the picture, either singly or in groups. Members of the Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club and several lodges were specially invited. Scenes were also taken of a number of public buildings and prominent citizens.

The object of the campaign, according to the advertisements, was "to create additional interest in motion pictures; to give Topeka people an idea of how pictures are made and to give talented ones an opportunity to try without any cost or obligations."

Prizes were offered in connection with this, three judges being selected to choose the three people who showed the most marked characteristics. The selection of types was made at the Cozy theatre when the film was shown. The prizes were $10 for the first best type; $10 for the second best and $5 for the third.

When completed this film was added to the programme and announced as "An interesting motion picture of Topeka places and persons." In the newspaper stories of this it seemed that everybody wanted to get into the movies and the cameraman evidently had no difficulty in finding subject matter for his scenes.

In addition to these features, Miss Wright got out a quantity of teaser slips for motorists and a number of cards for street and house to house distribution.

Special arrangements were made for the fashion revue. A runway was built around the orchestra pit, connecting with the stage. On this elevated platform the girls, attired in the smartest and most advanced styles of feminine apparel, came out towards the audience.

Effective Method of Putting Over Song Number

A simple but effective method of putting over a song number was hit upon by Manager Edward Weisfeldt of the Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee. An immense scenic telephone, as shown in the accompanying illustration, was erected on the stage. A woman singer was concealed in the mouth piece and her male partner in the receiver. By means of interior lighting effects the heads of both singers gradually appeared as they sang a telephone love song.

Kunsky Theatre Presentation

Madison and Adams, Detroit, Originate Many New and Novel Specialty Numbers

A UNIQUE and original idea in stage settings has been introduced by Howard O. Pierce, managing director of exploitation and publicity for the John H. Kunsky interests in Detroit and Thomas D. Moule, manager of Mr. Kunsky's Madison and Adams theatres of that city. This idea consists in the presentation of various song numbers from time to time in a cabinet set centre stage. This cabinet, which is about six feet deep and with an opening twelve feet square is sometimes set off with a great gold frame and closed in on the sides with soft pretty draperies, no stiff scenery being apparent on the entire stage. Through a system of the most artistic lighting, soft shades of varied color bathe the entire stage, while in the frame itself is presented a minature setting, with the living figures of the singer or singers, who go through their business, presenting in a way an animated living picture, and all in keeping with the story or the theme of the song number being introduced at the time. With the subdued lighting on all sides and with an entirely different and diffused lighting on the inside of the frame, which in some instances ranges in three colors or more, a picture of the utmost charm is introduced, which when blended with the song invariably charms the audience to the utmost enthusiasm.

This idea has been used for several months at different times by both the Madison and the Adams with the most splendid results.

Recently the Madison introduced a novel setting along these lines with the rendition of the song number, "The Love Nest," from "Mary," George Cohan's new musical piece. The stage was draped on both sides by great, soft blue curtains sprinkled with just the least touch of gold. In centre stage was a quaint, pretty drop of a high green English hedge row, with high sides and dropping towards the centre with a graceful curve. Directly back of the row was shown the red tiled roof of an old English house, chimney and a section of the house itself. In this setting the first part of the song was sung together with the first chorus. Then, as the chorus was still being sung, the stage was darkened, the singers disappearing behind the drapes, but continuing the song, that no break might occur in the presentation of the number. As the chorus progressed the lights slowly came up behind the special hedgerow drop, as described, revealing it to be a transparency which as the lights came up to full behind it brought forth the interior of the same house as shown in exterior on the drop itself, and, in a quaint setting of a breakfast room, with a high double window of old design and which could be seen through, and which was banked off at the sill by an old fashioned window flower box filled with bright flowers, sat the two singers, man and woman, at each side of a small tea table in the act of drinking tea while going through with the action of the chorus sung as a repeat. With artistic lighting as set off with a red glow from a fireplace at one side and a moonlight effect through the window as seen above the heads of the singers, the scene was most effective.

"Humoresque" exploitation stunt by the Lyceum theatre, New Britain, Conn

This Is Surely New ar Novel

A sensation occurred in the municip elections in Toronto, Ontario, when mysterious candidate figured in the ca paign for the mayorality until practica the last moment. The whole city was i state of excitement because of the parti pation of the "dark horse" in the electi drive, but had a good laugh when the a nouncement was made that the disturbi "third party" was none other than a ch acter portrayed by Fatty Arbuckle "The Life of the Party."

Two real candidates were in the ci field for election to the mayor's chair, t a huge surprise occurred when a third m apparently threw his hat into the ring. T name of this candidate was "Algern Leary," and the local newspapers soon b gan publishing election advertisements f the mysterious individual. The Algern Leary displays were grouped right alo with other campaign announcements f more than a week but no Algernon Lea made an appearance in public. His new paper announcements were clever a caustic, however, so that the public beg to give him serious consideration in spi of the name "Algernon."

On Friday, December 31, the day befo the local elections, the Toronto newsp pers carried a paid announcement whi stated that "Algernon Leary, Candida for Mayor, will issue an important stat ment in the week-end papers. Watch f it."

Then came the big surprise. The Satu day evening editions carried big displa which read: "Algernon Leary, candida for Mayor, says, 'Gosh I'm licked,' b I will be the 'Life of the Party' for I a none other than Roscoe (Fatty) A buckle, and I am the candidate that looke like the 'Dark Horse' you have been rea ing about. At that, you'll agree, some o the planks in my platform are worthy o consideration. One thing is sure, you vote me 'the life of the party' in this e cruciatingly funny photoplay in which really do run for Mayor in one of the liv liest campaigns ever waged." Announc ment followed that "The Life of th Party," with Algernon Leary in the lea ing characterization, would be presente at the Pantages theatre, Toronto, durin the week of January 3.

The man responsible for the big stur was N. K. Miller, manager of the Toront Pantages. Without qualification, Toront never before saw such a publicity achieve ment as the phoney election campaign o "Algernon Leary." It had the whole cit talking and there was immense excitemer over the puzzling activities of the unknow third candidate. Mr. Miller took re "slams" at public issues and some of hi statements were really bold—as compare with the advertisements of other candi dates.

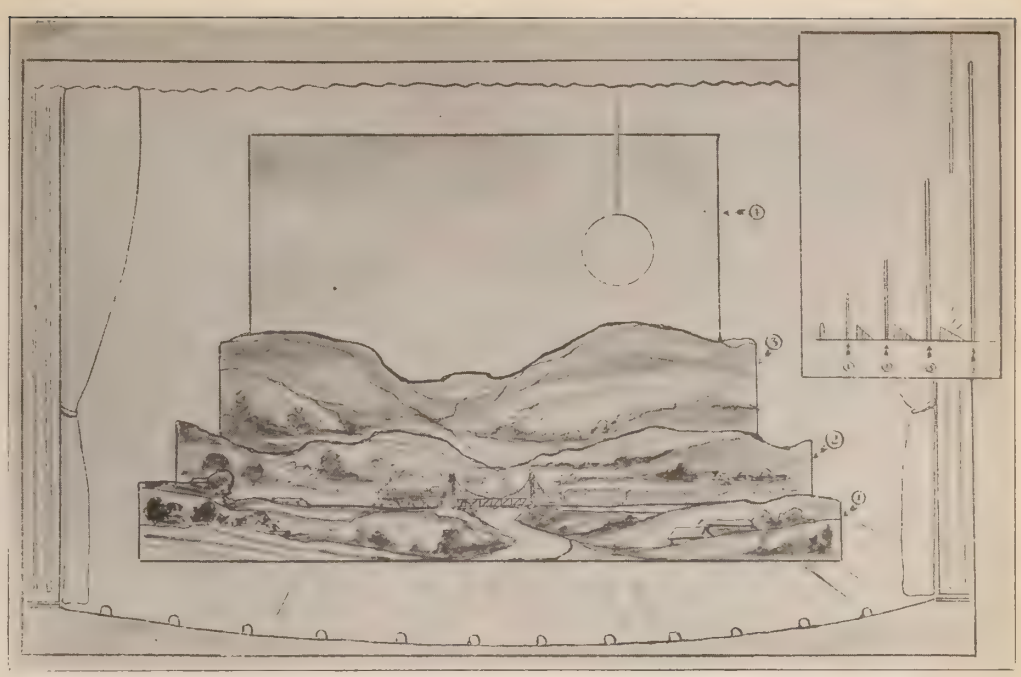
One blatant Leary advertisement read "I'll fight the beef trust, the milk trus the leather trust—and any other trust tha abuses the defenseless cow."

Details for "Peaceful Valley" Prologue

With the opening of its third week, the Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., has taken its place among those theatres that have developed prologues to a high point of artistry and efficiency. Beginning on Christmas Day this new theatre presented to its patrons a prologue made up entirely of scenic effects which attracted wide attention.

The prologue was entitled "Evening in Peaceful Valley," and was used in connection with "Peaceful Valley." The effects were gained chiefly through the unusual design of the scenery employed, the clever use of lights, and three simple mechanical devices.

The setting consisted of a back drop and three perspective floor sets. The nearest of the perspective sets, or ground rows, was two feet in height, and contained painted scenery depicting a miniature railroad track and trestle bridge. The second set, four feet in height, showed several houses and general rural suggestions and the third carried views of distant hills and a general fade-away effect into the back drop of clear sky color. Blue lights, dimmed, were used in back of each of the floor sets, and the effect gained was one of nearly immeasurable distance.



The mechanical devices consisted of a miniature lighted railroad train, a moon set and a shimmering moving river. The river was merely a strip of blue silkalene set on rollers originating in back of the middle ground set and terminating in back of the foreground set. The silk shimmering in the softened glow of the blue lighting, and moving slowly over the rollers, gave a very realistic effect of a lazily flowing stream.

The miniature railroad train was merely a shell with a row of two candle power incandescents affixed to the back. The description of the moon sounds almost ludicrous in connection with the effect gained by it for it was merely an incandescent light, hung in a tin pan with orange tissue paper pasted over the front. A line through a staple pulled it up slowly from behind the back perspective set and in front of the back drop.

The action was merely the passing of the train through the foreground, and the rising of the moon before the curtain was lowered on it.

Girls used on the streets of Boulder, Col., to advertise "Idols of Clay"

Prizma Film Given Novel Presentation at Capitol

A NOVELTY ballet number is being staged at the Capitol theatre, New York, for the current week. Mlle. Gambarelli and a quartet from the Capitol ensemble present a dance adapted to Grieg's "Papillons," while a prizma film showing various-hued and shaped butterflies is projected on a net hung in front of the dancers. A black drop is used for a backing. The dancers are attired in the usual robes for esthetic numbers.

This Idea Worked Well at Boulder, Col.

Mae Murray personally invited the inhabitants of Boulder to attend the showing of "Idols of Clay" at the Curran theatre, Boulder, Colo.

A team of four girls had been engaged by the exploitation man to provide the fireworks prior to the picture's run. The girls went around the streets of Boulder distributing calling cards for "Mae Murray." On the reverse of these cards the copy read:

"I will be at the Curran theatre today, Tuesday and Wednesday. Come and see me in 'Idols of Clay.' A Paramount Picture."

Seven hundred cards constituted the first printing order; but so successful was the dodge in arousing interest and causing comment that the manager of the Curran theatre had a repeat order filled and the girls, who had exhausted their supply by noon, were kept busy the remainder of the day.

The girls wore pennants pinned across their shoulders with "Idols of Clay" for the stunt, and this little touch alone aroused sufficient patronage to repay the management.

Mitchell Originates New Exploitation Stunt

In the next column is shown a cut of one of W. Grant Mitchell's exploitation stunts in the interests of "In the Heart of a Fool" when this picture played the Majestic Gardens theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., of which Mr. Mitchell is manager.

The horses did all manner of tricks, standing on their hind legs and lying down with the riders, and when performing about the Kalamazoo streets attracted great crowds.

Another stunt which Mr. Mitchell used for the "In the Heart of a Fool" engagement was to have fifteen thousand paper bags, furnished by a grocer by the way, printed with an announcement of the showing dates for the feature, with a small ad for the grocer. These bags were distributed by the grocer in the usual way. The merchant was one of the largest in the city, operating several stores.

Ballyhoo used by W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic theatre, Kalamazoo, to put over "In the Heart of a Fool"

"The Last of the Mohicans" Exploited in Philadelphia

When "The Last of the Mohicans" opened in Philadelphia, it was given a great deal of exploitation, and made the subject of several tie-ups, notably with the schools. The book is required reading for the eighth grade of the public schools. Therefore it was to the schools that Manager George Gravenstine, of the Carman theater, which ran it for a week, turned for assistance. Altogether eight schools in the neighborhood were visited. Offers were made for benefit performances in connection with the schools, and special matinees were also arranged, whereby pupils of the various schools interested in the tie-up were admitted at a reduced rate on presentation of a special ticket.

Another method of advertising the film was by means of a float, featuring an Indian, a tepee, and characters from the story. This was used the week before the opening and during the run, standing before the theater at night, and traveling through the neighborhood in the daytime. It excited a great deal of favorable comment.

Elaborate colored descriptive sheets were also passed out at each performance the preceding week. They contained scenes from the picture and a small amount of description, and were most attractive in appearance.

In addition to this, cards were placed in store windows, advertising the program.

Impressive Prologue Presented at the Criterion

A CHURCH interior unadorned except for the richness of the stained glass windows and illustrated in the cut appearing below is the stage setting used by Hugo Reisenfeld for his prologue and introduction to "The Inside of the Cup," opening for an indefinite engagement at the New York Criterion, Sunday.

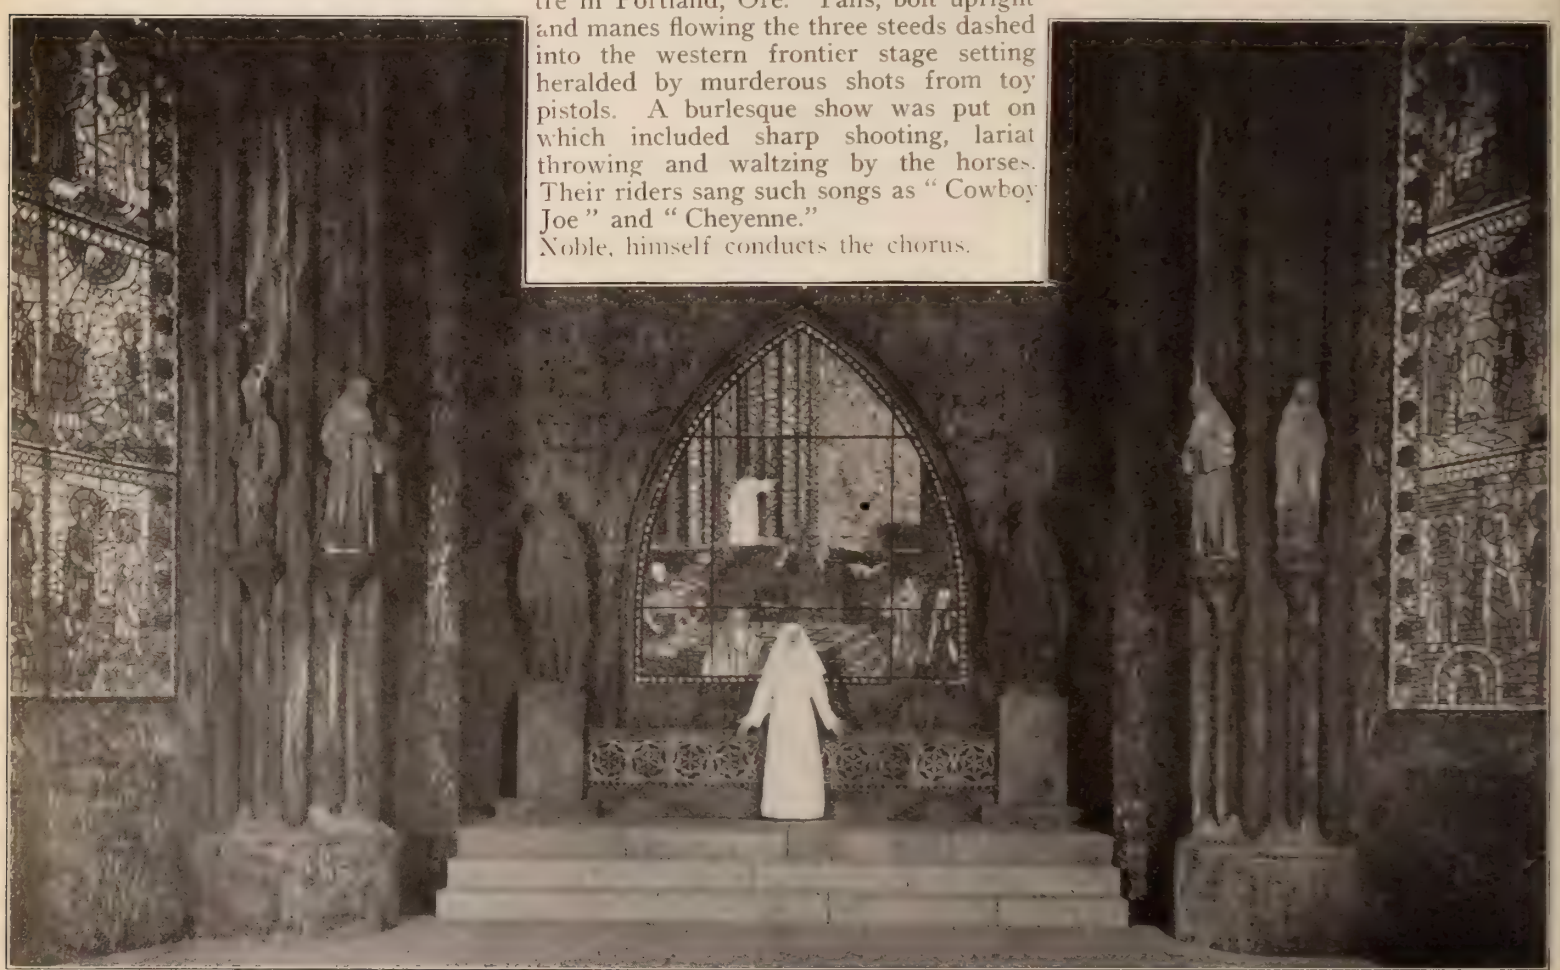
The canvas is by Josef Urban, famous scenic artist, and is rich in its effects of stained glass windows, beautiful columns of the Gothic Church and the medieval statues of saints which are scattered within the nave. The entire symbolism of motion picture and prologue is summed up in the main window which represents Christ driving the money-changers from the temple.

In this unusual frame Gladys Rice, soprano, sings Gounod's "Ave Maria." Her costume is the simple white of the novitiate in orders.

On the same Criterion programme, but offered more as an appetizer than as a prologue, is the overture dansant. The Criterion orchestra carries the theme of the "Blue Danube" waltz. A ballet of nine young and good-looking girls interpret the music.

Noble's "Round-Up" Prologue

Three hobbledy horses navigated by a harmony trio put on an unusually good "atmospheric setting" for "The Round-Up" when it showed at the Liberty theatre in Portland, Ore. Tails, bolt upright and manes flowing the three steeds dashed into the western frontier stage setting heralded by murderous shots from toy pistols. A burlesque show was put on which included sharp shooting, lariat throwing and waltzing by the horses. Their riders sang such songs as "Cowboy Joe" and "Cheyenne."



Noble, himself conducts the chorus.

Big Displays for Residential Theatres

The distinctive thing about the full-page, cooperative advertisment which the Broadway-Prospect-Art theatres, of Kansas City, ran in a Sunday issue of the Kansas City Post, was that it marked the first full page ever used by a theatre other than a centrally located house. The theatres belong to the "neighborhood" category, but it was largely upon the suggestion of John P. Goring, exploitation representative for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that the managers of the theatres decided to give their patrons "Something to Think About," with their unusual policy of newspaper advertising.

In order to reap the full benefit of their full-page display these three "suburban" houses, which played "Something to Think About" coincidently, had to run their copy several days in advance of the opening. This was done to allow several hundred feet of film to be taken of the advertising spread and these in turn were run in each of the three houses.

Bond's Clothing House was sold on the advertising idea by the exploitation man and came in for part of the page reducing overhead for all three theatres. Such use of advertising space by neighborhood houses establishes a new precedent, shows fields of exploitation still open to exploitation men, brings good will from newspapers and box office returns to theatres of enterprise.

Sassen Gives Fox Serial Great Send Off

Southern Exhibitor Puts Over "Married on Stage" Stunt for "Bride 13"

HERE is an exploitation stunt for "Bride 13" put over by Phelps Sassen, manager of the Lyric theatre, Easley, S. C., that reads like a press agent's yarn, but it is all truth, even down to part where Mr. Sassen's bride came near being "snatched from the altar." The title, by the way, of the first episode of the Fox serial.

When Mr. Sassen booked "Bride 13" he began cudgeling his brain for a new and novel stunt so far as Easley was concerned to bring the first episode to the attention of his patrons. He finally decided on the "married on the stage" idea and made an offer of prizes of considerable worth to the couple who would consent to be married in the Lyric.

For several days no one appeared to take advantage of Mr. Sassen's offer, although there were a number of "nibles." However, the night before the serial was to start an Easley business man approached the Lyric manager and stated that he represented a couple who would go through with the stunt. A bargain was soon made and Mr. Sassen hustled out to get together as large a list of wedding presents as possible. In this connection he was assisted by the Easley business men and soon had better than $150 worth of useful articles pledged. In the meantime the coming event scheduled for the next day at 4 o'clock was widely advertised.

Long before it was time to tie the knot or start the show, the Lyric was jammed to the doors.

At the conclusion of the first show, the Lyric pianist began playing the wedding march and down the isle came Manager Sassen and a minister, followed by an usher who led the bride in one isle. The groom and an usher marched down another isle.

The party mounted to the stage and took their places in front of the screen. To the accompaniment of "Oh, Promise Me" the minister began the ring ceremony, while Mr. Sassen thinking about the box office receipts and how well his stunt had gone over, smiled like the cat that had eaten the canary. The ceremony had proceeded but a short way when all of Mr. Sassen's carefully laid plans blew up with a bang and "snatched from the altar" in real life threatened to ruin the knot that was being tied and Mr. Sassen's exploitation stunt.

Down the aisle hurried a middle aged woman. Up on the stage she climbed and hurriedly ducked behind the screen, dragging Mr. Sassen after her. From behind the picture curtain came the woman's voice shrieking in the ears of the surprised manager, such expressions as "It cannot be. It cannot be. She is my only daughter. She is too young. Stop it. Please stop it." It was not long before Mr. Sassen came to the conclusion that somebody was making objection to his stage wedding and that the somebody was the bride's mother. Consequently the splicing operation was called off while a consultation was held between bride, groom, mother, sisters, brothers, friends and relatives. After fifteen minutes of argument and pleadings the mother was persuaded to give her consent to the marriage and stood by while the rest of the ceremony was performed. After all due formalities, clear down to kissing the bride had been concluded, Mr. Sassen, his audience and wedding party again gave their attention to "Bride 13."

Mr. Sassen states in telling us of his stunt and the attendant dramatic finish that fate added to it, that he has tried a lot of exploitation ideas but that never has anything gone over like the married on the stage idea. Of course he admits that the "snatched at the altar" part helped put a dramatic finish to his efforts and that everybody in Easley is talking about "Bride 13" as a result of what happened, planned and unplanned.

Rivoli Specialty Real Novelty

"HERBERTIANA" is the title of another unusual stage number presented by Hugo Reisenfeld at the New York Rivoli, this week. Based on the music of Victor Herbert successes, it brings together a group of singers and dancers which rival the productions of the musical comedy stage. The spirit of the production is that of a young people's sociable. Grace Foster, soprano; Ralph Soule, tenor; Paul Oscard and Vera Myers, dancers, and members of the Rivoli ensemble, appear in the number.

The number opens with Oscard and Miss Myers dancing to the strains of the "Nightingale Song" from "Mlle. Modiste"; Soule takes up the refrain and the ensemble sings from the popular tune while the dancers continue. "The Superlative of Love," from Herbert's "Her Regiment," is next sung by Soule, with the refrain sung alternatingly by the tenor and Miss Foster, and the ensemble taking it up while the dancers trip a few steps. There is a soprano recitative which modulates into the chorus of "Kiss Me Again" which the ensemble repeats and which the dancers bring to a close with a charming bit of pantomime expressing the spirit of the song.

Stage setting for Willard C. Patterson's Christmas show at the Criterian theatre, Atlanta, Ga., as described below

Patterson Puts Over "Dinty"

Exploitation Campaign Extraordinary Gets Atlanta's Attention and Then Some

WILLARD C. PATTERSON has recently put over a most successful exploitation campaign for "Dinty" which began with newspaper stuff six weeks in advance of the showing and continued to the very last day.

On opening day, Mr. Patterson's "pet bet" started the ball rolling. This was a trio of newsboys, dressed as much as possible like the trio in the picture—"Dinty," "Chinkie," "Watermillions." These boys worked the streets of downtown Atlanta, always together, and wearing on their backs, placards which read, "See Dinty—Criterion today." There were an oddly assorted trio—the freckled faced white boy, the lemon-hued "Chinkie" and the shining, coal-black little "Watermillions."

Another tie-up which proved astonishingly successful was that of the newsboys. Since "Dinty" is the story of a newsboy, it was peculiarly appropriate that the newsboys themselves should help to boost it. And they gladly did. On Monday, every newsboy in town and there are more than two hundred of them,—wore a placard similar to those of the trio, reading "See Dinty—Criterion today." And usually the newsboy, making a sale, would conclude it with some such remark as "Sa-a-ay, yu don't want to miss 'Dinty'—he's great!" All of which had its effect.

But perhaps one of the most successful "tie-ups" of the entire campaign was that with the cigar-stores and the cigar-stands in hotels. Twenty-five men who worked at cigar-stands, either in drug-stores, hotels, or cigar-shops, were hired, to finish up a sale by boosting the picture. It was very insidious, and worked with amazingly successful results. For instance, when a man completed the purchase of his favorite brand of smokes, and was picking up his change, the clerk, would say:

"By the way—have you seen the picture at the Criterion this week?" etc.

Every orphan's home, and charitable institution which took care of children, were guests of the management some time during the week, to see the picture. And of course, the newsboys also had a treat.

But the exploitation of "Dinty" did not cease with the outside. In other words, Mr. Patterson not only "Put over" the picture in a new and interesting way—he put it "on" with his usual success and thoroughness.

Inside the theatre, the Christmas spirit was carried out in the decorations, which were great loops of smilax, looping gracefully from the side-lights, from the stage clear back to the main entrance, the loops "starred" here and there by great scarlet poinsettas. The balcony stairs were twined with the vines, and the red blossoms, and great jars of holly and mistletoe stood on the tables in the lounging rooms.

A special stage set that created no little favorable comment, depicted a snow scene—snow covered hills, a wintry blue sky, and, nestled in a valley between the hills, apparently very far away, was a tiny cottage, whose windows glowed with a warm-looking orange light. Down stage, and as if on a lower slope of the hill, the snow-covered roof, and red chimney of another cottage peeped.

The orchestra put over one of the best numbers on the bill, in an overture called "A Toy Symphony." Every member of the orchestra wore little red caps with "streamers" and they seemed to get even more fun out of the overture than the audience itself.

Jackson Gets Out Novelty Herald

Making New York City sit up and take notice with cards that cost $4 a thousand to print, $3 worth of feathers, and a few hours' work on the part of theatre employees is some stunt. It was accomplished by Ben H. Jackson, manager of the William Fox Audubon theatre, and although the cards were issued some weeks ago, they are still in circulation through the city, because of their novelty.

The cards were used as a novelty advertising stunt for a showing of "Twin Beds." They were postcards size and through two holes punched at one end theatre employees thrust a small feather, the significance of which was disclosed by the wording, as follows:

"Here's a tickler. 'Twin Beds' will Tickle You," and other announcements concerning the feature.

Hile's Presentation Makes Hit with Audiences

In his presentation of "Once to Every Woman," A. V. Hile, manager of the Antonia theatre, Butte, Mont., has followed out the successful plan inaugurated during the New York showing of using a singer.

She was used in two places in the film, first while the screen heroine was shown singing in the opera. As the shot was ordered the singer stopped, and the trap man duplicated the shot. The effect was intensely realistic. The singer also was used at the sick-bed scene when the heroine recovers her voice in singing "Ben Bolt" for her dying mother. One of the city's leading soloists was engaged for this work.

In exploiting the feature, besides a comprehensive and thorough advertising campaign, Mr. Hile originated an attractive lobby display, using cut-outs from a 24 sheet. This was supplemented by a Magna Vox phonograph attachment to a talking machine that played Oriental operatic airs that could be heard two blocks away.

Strand Has Prologue for "The Great Adventure"

AS a prologue for "The Great Adventure," playing this week at the New York Strand, Manager Joseph L. Plunkett is staging a vocal number, "A Dream," the vocalist being Walter Vaughan, tenor.

The stage setting provided is an artistic studio with a French window looking out on a painted water scene. The setting is dressed with the usual studio furniture and at left center is a large picture in a gilt frame.

The first verse of the song is rendered with the singer sitting at a table at right. Later he rises and sings to the painting. Gradually the painting dissolves and the figure of the woman shown is replaced by a girl, suggestive that the painted form had come to life. Near the close of the number the painting is faded back again, the woman's form disappearing. The illusion is performed with a transparency canvas covering the inside of the picture frame.

Brooklyn Strand Localizes Short Subject

Localizing film short subjects and the incidental prologues that may go with them, calls for thought and effort, as was indicated in the home town exploitation that the Brooklyn Strand theater got out of a travel scenic, "On Board the U. S. S. Idaho," in a recent performance.

Brooklyn having a great navy yard and being continual host to naval officers and sailors, gave opportunity for surrounding the film with local effects. Managing Director Hyman devised a prologue to introduce the subject and had prepared a highly artistic scenic drop showing the Brooklyn Bridge in hazy outline. Before this drop on the bridge of a ship stood Arthur Smith, basso, in the shore attire of a sailor, singing "The Sea Is the Life for Me." Inasmuch as the Brooklyn Strand is only a short distance from the big bridge all in the audience quickly assimilated the home touch idea and applauded the stroke.

That the film had been selected with the local touch idea foremost was revealed by the opening scenes.

Lobby paintings for exploiting "Godless Men" by Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore. A special shadow box with eight lights produced a clever silhouette effect. The lobby was done in green trimmed with red and evergreen ropes were used. A 500 watt spot in blue on the waves of the painting and a baby spot on the skipper gave the canvas a very pretty effect

Hyman's New Year Specialty

Complete Details Concerning Last Week's Brooklyn Strand Overture Number

ONE of the best New Year's overtures that have been seen in this office is the one used by Managing Director Hyman to open the program on which Charles Ray "19 and Phyllis" was featured.

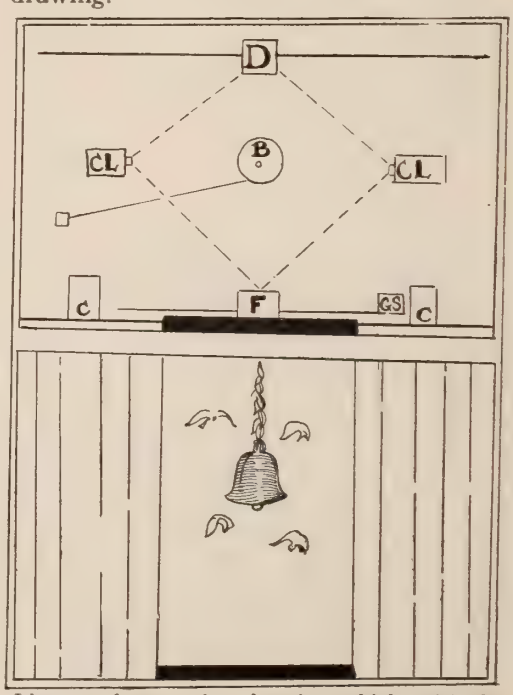
The overture was conceived expressly for the New Year's week program, and the diagrams give a pretty good idea of how it was put over at the Brooklyn Strand theatre.

On a stage that was half curtained, Hyman suspended a silver papered bell from the loft. In the bell was placed a 500-Watt lamp, together with a cardboard trap that worked on a spring. The trap was used to hold ten snow white pigeons which were released during the playing of the overture, by the simple process of pulling a string back stage.

While the Strand Symphony Orchestra was playing "Come All Ye Faithful," the bell was made to swing like a big pendulum. The effect was beautiful and won an enthusiastic round of applause.

Following is the key to the chart on this page:

F—FOOTLIGHTS. In red throughout.



C—CURTAINS. Green plush curtains were half closed over stage.

D—DROP. A plain drop. Solid neutral blue in color.

B—BELL. A silver papered bell. Constructed of wood. Suspended from stage loft on rope. Run conduit for 500-Watt lamp in the inside of bell, on the rope. Place pigeons in bell and close cardboard trap after them. Fasten the trap in such a way that a quick jerk will bring the pigeons down and make them fly.

GS—GAUZE SCREEN. Run this screen across close to the footlights to prevent pigeons from flying over audience.

CL—CALCIUMS. Lamp on right stage to be in red. Left stage light in lemon. Frame this light so that the throw makes rainbow pattern on the neutral drop, as indicated by dotted lines on drawing.

Glove City Showmen Exploit "Restless Sex"

The local advertising tie-up with the various stores in town is by no means a new stunt, but the one engineered by the Schine Brothers up in Gloversville, New York, for the three-day showing at their Hippodrome of "The Restless Sex," is unique in that the entire affair was encompassed into two days' work.

One feature of local interest was the fact that the date of showing also marked the fourth anniversary of the Hippodrome theatre, and incidentally the fourth year of the Schines' arrival into Gloversville theatricals.

The big stunt was the evening paper's spread. The Leader-Republican, always alert, scouted out and with the able help of Louis Schine, obtained two pages of advertising, making a double truck with the theatre ads totalling a page.

A unique sunt was the giving of readers to each advertiser on the double page, thus inducing many who were running additional ads through the run of the paper, to come in on the deal.

A double truck screamer, spreading over the two pages, reading "Schine Brothers Celebrate Fourth Anniversary Here With Week of Many Special Features in All Theatres," greeted the reader.

A special article, dealing in general with the theatres, covering over one and one-half columns, was prepared by Lewis Geffen, the Schine exploitation and publicity man. The regular readers, also consisting of more than a column, were spread on a third page.

Needless to say, every ad mentioned "The Restless Sex" in it. Some of them, prepared by Geffen, laid particular stress on the picture without injuring the effectiveness of the product listed.

Saengers Originate Two "Kiddie" Stunts

For the purpose of motion picture exhibiting the old adage about taking care of the pennies and the dollars will look out for themselves, might be humanized and paraphrased to read "interest the kiddies and the adults will turn out for the show." Appeals to the youngsters have often been made and just as often have resulted in crowded houses for the theatres using them.

The Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans, have originated two "kiddie" stunts which have been used with great success all over the territory by exhibitors in connection with showing of "Dinty."

One of the novelties is in the shape of a throwaway. Across the top of the sheet is the question:

"Well, Well, Who Have We Here?"

Immediately, below the question is an apparently meaningless spread of 215 dots each one of them numbered. Instructions are given on the sheet to start at dot No. 1, draw a straight line to dot No. 2, and then to dot No. 3, and so on, until the 215th dot has been reached, when the lines drawn take the form of the face of Wesley Barry, grin, cap, and all, as he appears on the one sheet posters on "Dinty." At the bottom of the throwaways is the wording:

"If you have been careful not to miss any of the dots you'll have a nice cheerful smiling picture of Dinty. What? You don't know Dinty? Then you better get acquainted. He will be at ....." and then space for the name of the theatre and the date.

The proper tracing of the 215 dots is a pretty complicated task and usually as amusing to grown-ups as it is to the youngsters to whom the throwaways are distributed. It means that the circulars

Well, Well, Who Have We Here?

Here is the puzzle, Saenger's puzzle, for "Dinty" as explained in the accompanying story are taken home and the family knows about the attraction.

The second novelty is a tie-up with local merchants in an award offering contest for the boy or girl under fourteen who has the most freckles. The judging takes place either in the theatre or privately, but the bestowal of the awards is always a public event on the stage and consequently a wide attention-attractor. The novelty of the freckles getting a person anything of value has appealed to a number of the newspapers in the southern territory as being interesting reading with the result that many of the contests have been accorded the best sort of publicity.

Some More Good Stuff on "Dinty"

Although there have been scores of novel and clever stunts to exploit "Dinty," great credit must be given Tom H. Boland, manager of the Empress theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., for the keen showmanship that inspired him to so carefully work out the plans for a "Dinty Day" in connection with the showing of this feature.

By interesting the Oklahoma News in a plan whereby the newsboys of the city would be encouraged to increase the street sales of the paper, Mr. Boland secured the co-operation of practically "all newsboys, former newsboys and boys who wanted to be newsboys" so the announcement said.

As a result of Mr. Boland's planning, the great majority of newsboys selling papers on the streets of Oklahoma City wore bright red tags pinned to their coats. The tag was similar to that used by express companies and carried the following reading matter:

"Buy Your NEWS
From Me.
I Want to Win a
DINTY DAY Prize
By Selling the Most NEWS Today.
See 'Dinty' at the Empress Theatre."

As a reward for the newsboys selling the greatest number of papers, the theatre and the paper agreed to give $5 in gold to the best seller, $3 to the second best seller and $2 to the third best seller.

Cutouts mounted as banners and a variety of posters enabled the newsboys to hold several parades boosting "Dinty" and create sufficient local excitement to cause pedestrians who hadn't known of the feature through other advertising methods to inform themselves.

Music and The Picture

Last Call for the Conference

Important Meetings in New York City Next Week—Opens January 24th —Important Film and Musical Interests Represented

By Charles D. Isaacson

WHEN these words are being read, the eve of the long-discussed Musical-Picture Conference will have arrived. And the delegates from the furthermost points will be enroute eastward and northward.

If you have pondered up to now, pack your grip and jump aboard a train to arrive in New York City Sunday evening about seven or Monday morning about eight. Telegraph at once to the Hotel Astor to get you a room somewhere and send a wire to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS music department, so that the newspapers and other publicity channels may be apprised of your coming—also so that we can look for you and shower all the courtesies upon you which will make your visit most pleasant and profitable.

If you come you will be among over a hundred important exhibitors, managers, owners of the biggest, the medium and the little theatres where music is, or is going to be a dominant factor in showmanship and better patronage.

If you come you will be amongst the foremost musicians of America—composers, artists, conductors, grand opera and symphonic men, who are lending their presence and intellects to this historic undertaking.

You will meet face to face with the men who have pioneered the musical idea in theatres—who have made their theatres, headquarters for music—who have used music to create the best patronage in their houses. You will meet the successful impresarios, conductors, composers—the men who are now known as picture-music experts.

You will exchange ideas with the publishers of music who are seeking to give the motion picture theatres what is best fitted to the needs of pictures—not only for the better fitting of themes to the pictures, but for special program novelties.

You will meet with the pioneers in film music instruments. You will see what is being done to better organs, pianos, player-pianos, orchestras.

You will come in contact with the great musical artist agencies who are planning routing schemes which will materially simplify and advance the idea of engaging high class singing, dancing and playing soloists and ensembles. You will be first among the likely candidates for preferred position with these agencies.

You will be taken "into the secrets" of the greatest minds in the new art. The big men from all parts of the country for the good of the cause are opening their treasury-chests and favoring forth their riches.

How the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto, Criterion, Strand and other noted instances of music-pictures do their work will be illustrated, point by point. Not only will you see and hear the best examples of the ideal utilization of music and pictures but you will know why it is done, and it will be explained in the theatres by the directors themselves.

I conceive this phase of the conference to be almost beyond estimate in its value for the industry—and I have no praise broad and loud enough for the bravery and unselfishness which prompts the managers of the theatres which are being turned over for the purposes.

You will have the opportunity of inaugurating the first venture of the kind in history. You will become one of the founders of the Association of Musical and Motion Picture Futurists, which is to be definite channel through which these promising new possibilities can be realized. You will have a hand in settling for all time the music tax question. You will give voice to the growing demand for better cue sheets, special music scores for big feature pictures, consideration of the need for variable scores and cue sheets for varying sizes of theatres. You will make it possible to do more cordial business with musical union; to get musicians more easily and to get musicians who understand picture needs.

You will give impetus to music schools about to train musicians especially for pictures.

You will show the strength of the musical idea in pictures and youu will encourage those who have been afraid to inaugurate the policy in a large way.

THE AMAZING STRENGTH OF THE CONFERENCE

Although the Musical-Picture Conference was only mentioned three months ago, it has become the big idea of the year. Among exhibitors it is being watched, and will doubtless set the pace for musical standards as well as indicating pretty definite lines along which the exhibitor can afford to follow.

Producers have listened to what is being planned and the biggest will be at the meetings.

Of course the musical fraternity and art are both in the idea full strength.

The musical union is on the job.

But the most amazing thing of all is the way that the press of the United States has devoted big space to the conference plans. In New York City it is NEWS, and you know how rarely matters of this sort get in the news columns.

Not only are New York newspapers paying attention, but cities and towns everywhere are devoting articles and articles to it.

In fact, foreign countries are watching and it is not unlikely that a proposal will be presented to make next year's conference one of international propositions.

The periodicals in the allied fields are giving very liberal attention to the meetings.

Although the NEWS has been the original promoter of the affair, there is no reason why the other motion picture trade papers should not join along for the good of the cause.

The NEWS wishes at this time to announce that the plan is too big to be merely a publication scheme! The NEWS will be happy to withdraw from the actual sponsoring of the Picture-Musical Association, as soon as it is well on its feet —although the NEWS gives its word that it will be at all times an enthusiastic supporter, lending the value of its space, its columns, its editors and its music department.

Some of the Leading Lights to Be Present

It is almost an impossibility to single out the leaders among the noted authorities who have pledged their presence at the Motion Picture Musical Conference in New York City, January 24, 25 and 26. But among those who are to make addresses on live topics, lead discussions, present special exhibits, etc., the following ought to be mentioned.

Exhibitors

Barr, Maurice. He is the manager of the great New Orleans theatre of New Orleans, La. This is one of the chain controlled by the Saenger Amusement Company. Mr. Barr is, perhaps, the leading exponent of the fine music in connection with pictures in the Solid South.

NEWSY BRIEFS FROM CENTRAL FILM BELT

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

Paramount's advertising campaign for 1921 started off with a big shot Sunday, January 9, when a full page advertisement appeared in the Herald-Examiner. Several hundred theatres, booking Paramount pictures for the week, were listed in the ad which announced the attractions and policy of Paramount for the coming year. It is said Paramount's advertising appropriation for the new year has been made twice as large as last year's.

Watterson R. Rothacker is on another week-end trip to New York. Douglas D. Rothacker has returned from his vacation ten pounds heavier. Edward O. Blackburn went to Kansas City in connection with an industrial film, while J. W. Carnrick headed toward Dayton.

One of the most successful meetings of the Motion Picture Press Club held this year was held at the Stratford Hotel on January 7. After the business of eating was disposed of, Publicity Representative Roche of Paramount, was elected president of the club to serve for two years or until his successor is elected, vice Richard Robertson, who is shortly leaving for the Pacific Coast. Irving Mack was made secretary and the urbane Ralph T. Kettering was put in charge of publicity.

Harry Jones, son of Louie Jones, manager of the Randolph theatre, Chiczago, is the latest one of this family to enter the film business. While his uncle, Aaron Jones, could have landed him a job with Jones, Linick & Schaefer in some capacity, young Mr. Jones desired to start out without any pull and is now selling short features for Reelcraft Pictures of Chicago. It is reported that he is getting away to a good start and indications are that he will climb to the top.

George H. Moore, dean of Chicago moving picture theatre managers, celebrated the tenth anniversary of his appointment as manager of Jones, Linick & Schaefer Orpheum theatre on January 13. Mr. Moore started as assistant manager of this house on September 7, 1907, and continued in that capacity for four years until Aaron Jones put him in charge in January, 1911. Chicago then had less than a dozen picture houses and the Orpheum was the only moving picture house in the Loop. It seated eight hundred people and it was against all advice of friends and showmen that Jones, Linick & Schaefer build what was then considered such a mammoth sized theatre for pictures. Mr. Moore's connection with Jones, Linick & Schaefer goes back eighteen years or more to a time when he was a special policeman in penny arcades operated by this famous trio of showmen. His two sons, Walter and George, Jr., have followed in his footsteps and are engaged in the moving picture industry, Walter having been assistant manager at the Randolph since it was built, being recently transferred to the Orpheum to help his father, and George, Jr., after serving in the U. S. Marines has become connected with Celebrated Film Exchange as a salesman.

George L. Levey has resigned as secretary of the Famous Features Film Company of Indianapolis and has joined Celebrated Players feature department at Chicago. He will cover the South Side. Mr. Levey is well known to Chicago exhibitors. For three years he was with the Anti-Trust Company, of which C. R. Plough is manager. After that he was manager of Fox and up to two months ago was with Unity where he had been for the past three years.

Watterson R. Rothacker's proposal that Americanism films be shown in the steerage of immigrant ships won the instant approval of Chicago business men. Mr. Rothacker has received many assurances of support when it comes to putting the plan into effect. The editor of a national business magazine, which is published in Chicago, was one of the first to endorse the proposal. "Mr. Rothacker is right," said the editor. "It is all right to show the immigrants films while they are at Ellis Island and after they are admitted to the country, but the psychological time is while they are still on the high seas. The time to begin making them into desirable American citizens is before they set foot on American soil."

J. L. Friedman of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, who was president of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, will attend the annual meeting of Federated, which is scheduled for February 8 at San Francisco. Special cars are taking care of members of Federated and their families and all members from territory east of Chicago will meet here on February 4 and journey together to the coast. Mr. Friedman states that anyone caring to join the party will be more than welcome and should get in touch with him at once.

C. R. Redlick, district representative of Special Pictures Corporation, and C. S. Smith, service manager of Celebrated, were busy last week moving all the prints and advertising accessories from Special's office to the Celebrated office, which are now releasing all the Special Comedies.

Two beautiful girls, one stationed at the entrance to the foyer and one in the balcony, garbed in bizarre but effective style, form one of the features recently installed at the Riviera. They act as head ushers, merely informing patrons as they enter to which aisle they should go for seats. The costuming is effective. Each girl is dressed in white palm beach trousers; a black velvet sack coat with flaring skirt, black velvet tam, with a white Eton collar, and black velvet tie. Each holds a small bamboo walking stick in her two hands, hanging at arm's length.

"Exhibitors with any showmen's instinct ought to do the best business of their histories this year," declared H. W. Willard, of Realart, after he looked over last week's reports from theatres in which he is interested. That seems to be the general sentiment of Chicago exhibitors, despite the fact that some of them had long faces the week after the holidays, evidently fearing that the holiday week business might continue. "Good pictures will get the business," said one exhibitor who declares that despite the ante-holiday falling off, his business shows an increase over the same period last year. Another who had just returned from Rockford declared that business there was limited in only to the seating capacity of the houses. "The only house in town that was not packed to the doors Wednesday night," he said, "was one that had a picture that had been doing almost capacity business for four days."

The Haymarket theatre in Chicago on Madison near Halstead street which has been a burlesque and vaudeville house for years, recently announced the policy of running high class pictures and vaudeville. The theatre had to be remodelled to insure good projection and fire protection, and the Exhibitors' Supply Company was called on to recommend the correct equipment. The Iron Clad Amusement Company, owner of the Haymarket, appreciating such advice purchased the complete equipment from the Exhibitors' Supply Company which included two Type-S. Simplex Projectors.

E. M. Saunders, sales manager of Metro, was a Chicago visitor this week, and while here conferred with Jack Graumon, local manager, in regard to 1921 sales plans. Abe Fisher, manager of Metro's Minneapolis office, also was in town.

Ed. Hurley, well known director and producer of pictures, is now making Chicago his headquarters and is considering tying up with one of the local film exchanges.

J. Maynard Keyes, of the A. A. A. A., announced in Chicago this week that three thousand motion picture actors in Los Angeles, members of three different local organizations, had associated themselves with the Actors' Equity Association.

H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal, spent two days in the Chicago offices this week.

LASKY

Thompson Buchanan takes up his new duties this week as supervising director with Frank E. Woods.

W. Somerset Maugham, the prominent English writer, arrived in Los Angeles last week.

C. B. DeMille has completed production work on "Anatol." The release title will be "Five Kisses."

William De Mille will start work next week on an original screen play written by Edward Knoblock.

George Melford has begun the production of "Money Master," with James Kirkwood and Alice Hollister in the leading roles. This production was adapted for the screen by Sir Gilbert Parker and George Melford from a story written by Parker.

Thomas Meighan is scheduled to begin work next week on "White and Unmarried," a Munsey magazine serial story. Tom Forman will be the director.

Roscoe Arbuckle will start work next week on "Three Miles Out," an original screen story written by Frank Condon. James Cruze will be the director.

Elinor Glyn's original screen story, "The Great Moment," has been selected as a stellar vehicle for Gloria Swanson. The continuity is now being written by Monte Katterjohn. Sam Woods will be the director. Work on this production is to begin in the near future.

FIRST NATIONAL

Sol Lesser left for Chicago on Friday of last week taking with him two sets of plans for the new First National theatre which has been proposed for Mercantile place on the site of the Broadway theatre between Fifth and Sixth streets, Los Angeles. The plans provide for a seating capacity of 4,000.

Carter DeHaven, Director Lloyd Ingram and Robert McGown are now editing and titling "The Girl in the Taxi."

The final scenes for "Stranger Than Fiction," starring Katherine McDonald, were taken this week. The supporting cast includes Wesley Barry, David Winter, James Dumont, Tom Maguire, Evelyn Burns and Harry O'Connor.

Louis Mayer gave a pre-review showing on Tuesday evening of this week of the John M. Stahl production "Sowing the Wind," which stars Anita Stewart, in the ballroom of the Hotel Alexandria, Los Angeles.

Irving Lesser has resumed the production of "Peck's Bad Boy" with Jackie Coogan, the child actor. Dorris May, Wheeler Oakman, Raymond Hatton (borrowed from Famous Players-Lasky), James Corrigan, Lillian Leighton, Charles Hatton and Gloria Woods appear in the cast. Sam Woods, the Lasky director, will produce this subject. Mr. Woods has been borrowed from the Lasky staff for the occasion.

UNIVERSAL

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are starting a series of two-reel satires this week. The first of this series is titled "Bootlegging," and it shows the art of fooling the Eighteenth Amendment.

Negotiations have just been completed for the purchase of two stellar vehicles, "Christmas Eve at Pilot Butte," a recent magazine story, has been purchased for Harry Carey, and "The Truant," a novel written by Azola Forester and Mann Page, has been bought for Frank Mayo.

Dorothy Devore, who was formerly with Christie Films, has been engaged as the leading woman for Frank Mayo in "Blood Brother to the Pines." Robert Thornby is directing this production. The cast includes Percy Challanger, Albert A. Lee, Charles Edler, Dix Sutherland and others.

The cast supporting Edith Roberts and Casson Ferguson in "Three at the Table," includes William Quinn, Joe Neary, August Phillips, Edith Stayard and others. William Worthington is the director. The story was written by Bennett Cohen and adaptation is by Wallace Clifton.

The cast supporting Gladys Walton in "The Bobbed Squab" includes Edward Hearn, Frederick Malatesta, Ruth Royce, Richard Norton, Helen Bruneau and Frank Norcross. Rollin Sturgeon, is directing the production.

Jack Ford is directing Harry Carey in "Everybody for Himself." Helen Ferguson is playing in the leading feminine role opposite Carey. The supporting cast includes Charles LeMoyne, J. Farrell McDonald, Joe Harris, and Lydia Tytis. The continuity is by George C. Hull.

Fred Granville has just returned from England where he directed Peggy Hyland for the Samuelson Film Company. He has been engaged by Universal to direct Eva Novak in "The Girl and the Goose." The original story is by Emma Bell Clifton, and the continuity by Dorris Schroeder.

Hoot Gibson is at present at work on his two-reel Western, entitled "Rarin' to go." Gibson is directing the picture as well as taking the leading part.

Edward Laemmle is directing Jack Herrin and Louise Lorraine in "Tiger Trail."

A number of comedies are at present under way at the Universal studios. William Beaudine is directing Dorothea Wolbert in "A Search for Suitors." William Watson is filming "Leaping Rajahs and Dignified Lions" with Zip Monberg, Florence Lee and the Century lions taking prominent parts. Tom Buckingham is directing Harry Sweet in "Superstition." Fred Dischback is completing "The Dog Doctor."

GOLDWYN

Clarence Badger. Will Rodgers and their company are filming "An Unwilling Hero." The company will go to New Orleans to "shoot" exteriors for this O. Henry story.

Victor Schertzinger, Tom Moore and members of their company have returned from New York where scenes were made for "Made in Heaven."

Katherine Newlin Burt, who wrote "Snowblind" and "The Branding Iron," has arrived at the Culver City studios. Rita Weinmann and Alice Duerr Miller are expected to reach here shortly.

METRO

Arthur Ripley has been appointed as assistant to Bayard Veiller, chief of production. Ripley has been with Metro for three years in an editorial and advisory capacity.

Director Chester Bennett and Antonio Moreno are completing the editing of "Three Sevens."

Our Motto: All the News, If it's News, When it's News

The Christie Company is putting in a practice green at the Studio for the benefit of Charlie and Al Christie, Fred Porter, Scott Sidney, Pat Dowling, and all the other members of the organization. Yes, they have it bad.

H. H. Van Loan, in response to numerous inquiries from Bob Welsh and Geo. Gould, of ye home office, states he and his company are still here.

Maurice Tourneur is back from the East where he weathered the cold blasts.

Charlie Christie is planning a tour of the South where he will bask in the sunlight of Dallas, New Orleans and Atlanta. (Our idea of a hard winter.)

Vi Dana will be Madge Joy in "Home Stuff" and other characters are Robert, Ma, Pa, and Susan Deep.

Gareth Hughes has come back to our town.

Joe Engle has decreed a Metro star shall wear cotton hose—not for economy but realism.

J. N. Nulty was seen at the National Studio and again affirmed the fact that he was alive and not dead as reported during the recent World war.

Samuel Goldwyn is still in town.

Fred Quimby arrived in our midst Wednesday.

Jack Dempsey is also here.

Ruth Roland took the "Rattler" for New York this week.

Pauline Stark duly chaperoned by her Mother left to see New York and incidentally to play "Salvation Nell."

The youngest reader of "Hokum" is Mary Jane Moran who was properly taught to read the best motion picture magazine by Papa and Mama Lee Moran.

Edward Cecil, Metro heavy, says it is possible for a mean man to be too mean.

Ruth Anne Baldwin has gone to the desert, not necessary to collect her thoughts, but she wants to spend half her time at writing and half her time at play.

Reg Barker did not get enough zero weather in Canada last month so he has since rumped his troupe to Bear Valley and Truckee.

Harry Meyers has been receiving so many congratulations on the "Connecticut Yankee" part that he scarcely has time to work.

Rollin Sturgeon's next play will have Florence Turner in it and it is the first time the two have been in the same company since years ago, when they both were with Vitagraph.

Tod Browning tells the story of a newsey who saw a title flashed on the screen, "The Mills of the Gods grind slow," who broke out with the statement—"Say, mister, that's all wrong, De Mills grinding slow." Everybody knows DeMille's a director and not a cameraman.

So Charlie Chaplin cantered away with a $500,000 check, eh! That is a sublime way to end a year, for it all happened on December 31st.

Anita Stewart will not be seen in "The Tornado," because they are going to change the title.

John M. Stahl is here from New York.

Dave Hartford, four Malamute dog teams, and players have gone into the wilds for "The Golden Snare."

Benj. B. Hampton has broken into print with an article entitled, "Too Much Sex Stuff in the Movies"—featured by Pictorial Review.

Colin Campbell is in prison for a few days for the making of necessary scenes for a coming Hawakaya picture.

Wallace Worsley while directing a New Year's reception was heard to remark, "This isn't a funeral, put the pep into it that you used to. Gather 'round the punch bowl." Who in this day remembers?

Mason Hopper is having trouble because children grow up while he is making scenes that require two weeks—putgrow the frame, as 'twere.

The public press has been giving a lot of space to the motion picture industry because Master Pictures proved to be an alleged poor investment for some people who bought jobs.

As previously stated the Editor of "Hokum" has called a conference (by mail) to dispose of the syndicate rights of this publication. To date we are considering protecting our readers by not giving our consent for the publication broadcast of these columns. However, a definite decision has not been reached and we would gladly receive suggestions from our many readers. If you wish to be exclusive do not permit this syndicate trust to take away your pleasure.

Bill Hart tells us he is on his last picture and then retirement, to which E. H. Allen adds, they will be able to make the Ghost walk several weeks to come.

Bill Duncan's cellar was robbed the other night.

Louis H. Thompson, who signs all mail as President of Special Pictures Corporation, was in Los Angeles from Hollywood this week.

King Vidor is putting on a movie contest with one of our local contemporaries and getting a lot of page publicity. King is trying to find another Mary Pickford, Doug, or Charlie Chaplin, or Charlie Ray. Whether he finds them or not makes no difference, because you have got to hand it to Ted Leberthom, he's getting the space.

Hunt Stromberg is going to New York to place a lot of advertising for Tom Ince. He is taking a trunk of publicity matter.

We hear a noise like Mark Larkin coming West again.

Oliver Morosco is original to say the least. He is going to build a Greenwich Village right here in Los Angeles, which brings up the question, will he move the "Black Cat" out or "Kelly's Place."

Chester Signs with Federated

Big Comedy Deal Is Announced by Federated Film

WHAT is said to be the largest comedy contract ever signed, has just been completed, on behalf of the C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., and the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. Negotiations have been going on for over thirty days and have just been closed.

Mr. Chester, up to the present time, has only been making one two-reel comedy a month. The Federated will not only secure this comedy, but in addition, have contracted with the C. L. Chester Productions to take from them a two-reel comedy of the parlor type, of similar quality to the Chester Comedy. This comedy will be known as the "Federated Chester Special."

The Federated have also contracted for a single-reel comedy each week, which they state promises to be the highest grade single-reel parlor comedy ever offered to exhibitors.

In connection with this deal, J. L. Friedman, president of the Federated, states that he was very much elated over the contract that had just been entered into between the two organizations. Mr. Friedman stated, among other things, that in his opinion, it would stamp for all time the mark of success on the activities of the Federated.

"Both exhibitors and producers are fast learning that the Federated is not only the most logical film distributing organization in America, but, at the same time, has the most logical method of distributing," said Mr. Friedman. "The contract with Chester Corporation, following closely the contract with the Special Pictures Corporation, and the contract with Fitzpatrick & McElroy for their Ford Weeklies, is convincing proof that the largest producers recognize the splendid distributing facilities of the Federated, and by their selection of the Federated for their product, they pay testimonial to the most logical method of buying and distribution ever devised.

"The Chester Comedies are too well known to require any comment, and we believe it is a fair statement to make that when the Federated starts distribution of these comedies, they will be able to honestly say that they offer not only the greatest assortment of one and two-reel comedies on the market, but unquestionably the largest quantity and the best quality of one and two-reel comedies ever offered by any distributing organization in film history.

"While in general, other organizations, both in and out of the film industry, are making every effort to retrench, because of the shrinkage in their business, it must seem striking that the Federated is entering into contracts that involve such large sums.

"THE FIRST-BORN," starring Sessue Hayakawa, and being released as a Robertson-Cole super-special will have its premier showing at the Strand theatre, New York City, during the week of January 30, according to an announcement from Robertson-Cole.

The production is the first of a new series of Hayakawa pictures made under a recent contract with Robertson-Cole, whereby not more than four releases a year of a maximum power are being released. "The First Born" is based on a stage play by Francis Powers, produced in San Francisco by Fred Belasco.

BALTIMORE

The flying start that D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" got at the Lyceum theatre, Baltimore, received added impetus when Rev. Dr. De Witt M. Benham, pastor of Central Presbyterian Church, denounced it in the newspapers as being "shockingly indecent and unfit for any decent person to see." This was on the second day of the performance, and since that time the theatre has been virtually sold out in advance.

Immediately upon the firing of Dr. Benham's skyrocket came a controversy which filled two columns of the letter-box of the "Evening Sun," while the "News" devoted a half column of space to Dr. Benham's spoutings and the declarations of people who did not agree with him.

Among these latter, strange to say, was the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors.

"We passed it, didn't we?" said the Board in reply to a question about its alleged immorality. "We don't allow shockingly immoral films to be shown. Our board is thought to be too drastic, if anything."

Members of the audiences who were questioned were not of the opinion that the film was either "shocking" or "immoral." A majority expressed the opinion that it was a "thing of art."

RICHMOND

Upon complaint from a Richmond lady who had viewed in Washington the Robertson-Cole production of "Kismet," with Otis Skinner, Mayor George Ainslie appointed Director of Public Safety William H. Myers, Director of Public Works Charles E. Bolling and the Rev. F. T. McFaden, D.D., as a committee to visit Jake Wells' Lyric theatre Monday afternoon and witness a private showing of the feature picture in order that the various scenes, especially the bathing view, may be passed upon before beginning the regular performances.

According to the report given the city's chief executive by the committee, there was found nothing objectionable, and the picture in general was highly praised. After the Annette Kellerman bathing pictures and many others of similar construction, the committee did not feel that any of the scenes should be cut out, and it was unanimous in its findings.

Later in the evening, Mayor Ainslie saw the picture and agreed with the report of the committee. One result of the announcement that the picture might be cut, as a result of a censoring committee's visit, was that the afternoon and night performances Monday played to capacity audiences, long lines waiting for admission throughout the evening.

SAN FRANCISCO

Police were called, sales of tickets stopped and ropes stretched across the sidewalk at the Strand theatre several times Sunday and even Monday afternoon, week of January 2, because of crowds anxious to see the Associated Producers' new release, "The Last of the Mohicans." M. W. Jackson, publicity director of the theatre has arranged some neat newspaper advertising for this production which seems to be drawing the crowds. All box office records at the house were broken Sunday, January 2, by the throngs which came to see the picture. Eddie Horton, famous organist and jazz piano player is doing some stunts at the organ and on the Strand's large Knabe piano.

House records for attendance were also broken Sunday at the Tivoli theatre where the "Peaceful Valley" is showing. Seven shows were packed to capacity with people clamoring for standing room. "It can never be beat," declared I. E. Phelps, manager of the theatre in commenting on "Peaceful Valley."

John D. Howard, for some time publicity director for the San Francisco Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has resigned and gone to Los Angeles where he has been installed as publicity director at Mack Sennett's Mission theatre. Mr. Howard was well known in San Francisco for some lively publicity and exploitation stunts.

The All Star Features Distributors in San Francisco under the management of E. R. Williams has purchased Conway Tearle, Rosemary Theby in "Whispering Devils." The exchange has also bought rights to the latest James Oliver Curwood release, "Kazan," and the new Billy West comedies ready for release. A series of Mary Miles Minter productions has also been taken on.

Business is humming, says H. J. Sheehan, manager of the San Francisco Fox exchange, and the business of the office has warranted hiring an additional booker, J. E. Smith, and another salesman, E. A. Langley, formerly of the Seattle territory. George Colladay, formerly of the Montana sales force, has been made manager of the sales staff at the San Francisco exchange. Lester Sturm, Seattle manager for the Fox company, is in San Francisco and Oakland for a few days visiting.

The San Francisco Pathe exchange men who were winners in that concern's recent "Pearsons Month" competition, have distributed twenty per cent of their awards to the employes of the exchange as a testimonial of the concentrated cooperation of all members of the exchange.

The distribution was made through envelopes hung on a Christmas tree in the exchange. W. W. Kofeldt, manager of the exchange, was presented with a handsome portfolio.

Edward Armstrong, Western division chief of Universal exchanges, has established permanent headquarters in San Francisco. Until now his headquarters have been in Denver, Colo. C. L. Theuerkauf, manager of the Los Angeles Universal exchange, is in San Francisco to confer with Mr. Armstrong for a few days.

Advance publicity on Universal's forthcoming release, "Outside the Law," will be undertaken next week by Ben Westland, director of publicity in the San Francisco exchange, through the key towns of Northern California. Westland has just returned from Los Angeles, where he arranged a campaign of publicity for that picture.

NORTHERN NEW YORK

Henry W. Kahn, Metro exchange manager in Buffalo, has been granted a two-months' leave of absence and will sail February 12 aboard the Ryndam for Holland. He will visit Paris, Berlin, where he has relatives and will make a tour of the Riveria. Someone from the home office will look after the local office during Mr. Kahn's absence. Mr. Kahn has resigned as chairman of the grievance committee of the Buffalo Exchange Managers' Association because of his trip abroad.

C. A. Taylor has taken over the New England rights on Captain Weigle's Chicago Tribune picture, "Ireland in Revolt," and has sent two representatives to cover the territory. They are E. F. Callahan, formerly manager of the Buffalo Special Pictures company branch and J. C. Parmelee, formerly with Nu-Art. Mr. Taylor may take over additional territory if the picture goes over big.

Hugh Rennie, First National manager in Buffalo; E. O. Hayes, city sales manager and Murray Hawkins and Mell Edwards, salesmen, have returned from the New York convention, filled with pep for the 1921 campaign. Mr. Edwards recently resigned from the Goldwyn staff to join First National, succeeding G. E. Dickmon, who has been engaged by Fred M. Zimmerman, as a Nu-Art salesman.

Ben Fitzer, who has an independent office in the Palace theatre building, journeyed to Syracuse last week to aid Emmett Cornell put over "Madonnas and Men," at the Eckel theatre. Mr. Fitzer promised Mr. Cornell that he would crack all box office records with this picture with the result that Mr. Cornell went right out and bought a new Marmon sedan a week in advance of the opening.

The Strand theatre in Ogdensburg has signed up for the Realart franchise, according to an announcement by Harry E. Lotz, Buffalo manager. The Tri-It and Masque theatres in Buffalo have also joined the Realart army. Mr. Lotz hopes to hit the 150 mark in the number of franchises in the district soon.

K. L. Eagon, formerly with the Independent Film Association in Chicago, has joined the Gardiner Pictures staff in the Warner building. He will be in charge of the Albany branch sales department. F. Williams, formerly with the Dooley exchange in Buffalo, has also been engaged by T. R. Gardiner. He will cover the smaller towns. "Ireland in Revolt," the Captain Weigle picture, is breaking all quick booking records. The lyric, Buffalo, has booked the picture for an eight-day run, commencing January 16. The Weiting Opera House in Syracuse and most of the key cities in the territory have been signed up. The Gardiner company will inaugurate a new franchise proposition the first week in February, under which exhibitors will get 13 big productions a year. Each will be sent out as a road show, with advance men and special exploitation equipment.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Buffalo Merit exchange in the Palace theatre building, is in Albany "putting things in shape." During his absence General Manager George Stockton is looking after the Buffalo office.

Fred M. Zimmerman of Nu-Art announces that the Star theatre, Angola, N. Y., has booked the entire Nu-Art output. The Regent theatres in Elmira and Corning have signed up for the new Clara Kimball Young series. The Amusu theatre in Wayland, N. Y., has also booked the entire output. G. E. Dickmon, formerly with First National, is now representing Nu-Art in the Southern Tier.

Michael Shea of the Shea Amusement company, operating the Shea Hippodrome, Criterion, North Park and Court Street vaudeville houses in Buffalo, has been named Buffalo chairman of the motion picture committee which is co-operating with Herbert Hoover's European Relief council. Pictures showing conditions in Central Europe are to be shown at Shea's Hippodrome and the Strand at all shows until January 26.

C. R. Baird of the Baird Manufacturing company, manufacturer of parts for projection machines, visited Al Becker of the Becker Theatre Supply company last week. Mr. Becker has handled the company's products for a number of years. Mr. Becker has installed two Simplex machines in the Oriole theatre, Buffalo.

The exhibitors' fight with the Buffalo Express continues with both sides sitting tight. The Express, however, has eliminated the midweek notices usually given the theatres, cut down the Monday notices to a few lines and chopped the Tuesday reviews in the case of every house but the Teck, Majestic and Shea's vaudeville, to about five lines each. So thus far, the Express is ahead. The exhibitors on their part are continuing to give the paper the same amount of space in the daily issues, but are keeping the Sunday display down to one inch. The Central Park and Premier have dropped the Express. Others may soon do the same.

The Buffalo Evening News is now reviewing the downtown picture shows on Sunday evening and publishing the reviews on Monday, instead of Tuesday. Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Criterion and North Park, has long advocated this move, pointing to the New York papers' policy in this respect.

Louise Fazenda visited Buffalo and Niagara Falls, Wednesday, December 29, and under the guidance of E. F. Callahan, Special Pictures manager in Buffalo, the little comedienne visited the principal theatres of the city.

The Buffalo Evening News and the Shea Amusement Company began the first issue of the News-Shea Review Sunday, January 2, with a film showing scenes of interest in and around Buffalo. The film will be a weekly proposition.

STATE RIGHT AND EXPORT NEWS AND VIEWS

"Women Men Love" in Cleveland Houses"

"Women Men Love," the first of a series of feature productions to be made by Bradley Feature Film Company, has been playing this week to big business at the Metropolitan and Strand theatres, the two premier houses of Cleveland, Ohio. The picture stars, William Desmond, who is supported by Marguerite Marsh, Martha Mansfield and Evan Burrows Fontaine. It was made by Samuel R. Bradley, of "House Without Children" fame, from the story by Charles T. and Frank Dazey.

Distribution will be made on the state right basis, with sales in charge of Syd. Rosenthal, formerly a district manager of exchanges and a Cleveland exchange man.

The second picture to be offered by the company is "Dangerous Toys," by Edmund Golding. It already has been completed. William Desmond, Margaret Clayton and Frank Losee are in the cast.

5 Western Star Dramas Are Completed

The first five Western Star Dramas, the series of which were recently announced for distribution on the independent market by Dominant Pictures Corporation, have been assembled, edited and titled, and are now available for release, according to a statement issued to the trade press this week by Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of the Dominant organization.

The first of the series is entitled, "The Call of the West," and features Art Accord, Edythe Sterling and Pete Morrison.

Jans Leaves for Pacific Coast

Herman Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., has left for the Pacific Coast and the inter-mountain states in the interest of his picture, "Madonnas and Men." Mr. Jans expects to report further sales on this picture in the near future. He recently sold Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Wisconsin to F. J. Cubberley, representing Ruben and Finklestein, of Minneapolis.

Peacock Productions Moves Headquarters

The executive offices of Peacock Productions, Inc., controlling branches in Dallas, Kansas City, St. Louis and Oklahoma City, have been transferred from Tulsa, Okla., to the Film Exchange Building, Kansas City, Mo.

"Heidi," Prizma Dramatic Story, to Be Offered to Independents

"HEIDI," the dramatic story presented in colors, has been secured by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation of New York, who will offer it to state rights' buyers.

This Prizma picture, which was shown at the Capitol theatre during Christmas week, received much commendation and notice. Critics in the various newspapers and trade papers have unanimously declared that it is a picture that will set a standard for pictures in the future.

"'Heidi,' which features little Madge Evans, marks an epoch in motion picture production," writes one reviewer, "in that it is the first real indication that the black and white photography with its limited tintings is ultimately to be superseded by colors for dramatic subjects.

"For its first venture into the dramatic field, Prizma has selected the century old fairy story, 'Heidi,' with its locale laid in picturesque Switzerland. This seems a wise choice for the apparel of the various characters of the play, the beautiful exteriors selected and the backgrounds of flowers and red roofed Swiss buildings, permit the use of many of the photographic tints that show best and allow an opportunity of appealing to the senses, both from a dramatic standpoint and from the angle of beauty of shades and colors.

"Some very beautiful effects are achieved by the star and other players that lend naturalness to the images of the faces of the characters. Its exploitation possibilities, from the fact that it is the first picture to combine the dramatic and artistic so successfully, are great."

"The picture is a beautiful one which leads to the hope that there will be more to follow soon," says another critic.

"It is a rarely beautiful specimen of photo-dramatic art, replete with the simplicity and peace of a pastoral poem," states another reviewer.

Eckels Announces Changes

New Duties for Independent Film Officials; Sign for New Comedies

INDEPENDENT FILMS ASSOCIATION announces a change in the duties of its officials. Eddy Eckels, president, is turning over the reins of the business end of the association to Harry Rice, his newest acquisition. Mr. Rice will take full charge of the home office, located in Chicago, and all departments operated there as well as Midwest territory.

Mr. Eckels will make his headquarters in Los Angeles, where he will supervise all productions distributed by the Independent Films Association.

Mr. Eckels' activities on the Coast will consist of securing new units for independent distribution, supervision of production, also sales of the Western territory. Richard Robertson, director of publicity and advertising, will join Mr. Eckels in Los Angeles.

The Independent Films Association will establish a New York office with a representative there to handle the Eastern division and foreign sales, and the purchase of all accessories. Mr. Belford will remain in Chicago as salesmanager.

Independent Films Association also announces the securing of a contract to distribute Pinnacle Comedies, starring Max Roberts. The company has produced four two-reelers thus far, and upon resumption of production will work with a view of delivering one comedy every two weeks. The first four productions show the star in a different character in each picture. This unit replaces the Leo White Company on the Independent program.

The Independent Films Association is planning an extensive advertising and exploitation campaign for the Pinnacle Comedies along the line that has proven so successful to the Neal Hart productions.

The Pinnacle Company is headed by Samuel Klein, well known veteran of the motion picture business, and Julius Heinsius is vice president and treasurer. Contracts were signed in Chicago.

EVERYBODY KNOWS "The HALLROOM BOYS"

Kelwin to State-Right "Ireland To-Day"

"Ireland Today," the single reel being shown in connection with the photodramatic spectacle, "In the Days of Saint Patrick," will be sold on a state rights basis, according to an announcement from Winfield F. Kelley, president of the Kelwin Film Company, who is presenting the all-Irish program at the Lexington theatre for a three weeks' run. "Ireland Today" shows scenes of present day Erin and depicts the sufferings of the unhappy people as a result of the civil strife now existing. It is meeting with enthusiasm at the Lexington theatre.

Mr. Kelley instructed his office force during the week to dispatch night and special delivery letters to every state right buyer in the country offering the picture for sale on a reasonable and profitable basis. The pictures were taken exclusively for the Lexington theatre showing of "In the Days of Saint Patrick." World's rights on this single reeler are controlled by the Kelwin company.

Wm. Desmond Scores in Los Angeles Play

While Herman J. Garfield is launching the picture version of Dan Sully's "The Parish Priest" starring William Desmond, the new Oliver Morosco play, "Slippy McGee," is making its first appearance in Los Angeles with William Desmond the central figure on the stage. According to the California critics the new play, which is by Edward Rose, is proving to be a personal triumph for the popular picture star whose services were enlisted merely for the creation of the leading role. The work William Desmond is doing in the play is said to be the best he has ever done upon the stage which calls attention to the fact that Mr. Garfield is joined by several others in film circles in his opinion that the star's work in "The Parish Priest" is the greatest he has ever done upon the screen.

So much live interest is being shown in "The Parish Priest" by state rights buyers who are familiar with the popularity of the play as a stage offering in their territories that Mr. Garfield is seriously considering selling the production on a state rights basis, it is reported.

New Company Formed

Charles H. Rosenfeld announces the forming of the Tri-Star Pictures Company, in New York City. Associated with Mr. Rosenfeld will be Murray F. Beier.

Alexander Alt and Helen Howell, who are being starred in a series of two-reel comedies for Reelcraft

Free Ad. Material Furnished by Top Notch

The Top Notch Producing and Distributing Company of Cleveland, Ohio, who recently created a sensation with their nation-wide publicity campaign on their "Title Contests," giving away $7,800 in cash prizes direct to the public, now announce that all single sheet, three-colored posters and 11 x 14 photos of any number will be furnished on every release free of charge on each two-reel Top Notch Comedy. There will be no three or six sheets made up on this series, because the officers of the organization state that it is superfluous to have any other advertising matter on comedies, except photos and single sheets, owing to the fact that the feature productions draw more attention with their large displays, and it is seldom that theatre owners ask for large sheets for their comedy bookings.

Sheldon Picture Ready for Premiere

"Is a Mother to Blame?" a new drama from the pen of Andre Van Remoortal, with the scenario by R. A. Wagner, has just been completed and will be launched immediately. "Is a Mother to Blame?" was produced by A. L. Gilbert and staged by Roy Sheldon, with Walter R. Sheridan as assistant director.

Ennis on Sales Tour

Bert Ennis, member of the firm of S. & E. Enterprises, will leave New York this week for a visit to the important exchange centers of the United States in the interests of the various S. & E. productions, among which are included "It Might Happen to You," "Cowboy Jazz," and a series of seven two-reel Midget comedies which the S. & E. organization has recently acquired for state right distribution.

Among the exchange centers which will be visited are the following: Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Toronto, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and Los Angeles.

Reelcraft Has New Series

To Distribute 26 Alt and Howell Comedies Starting Feb. 12

AS a part of its plan to establish Reelcraft as one of the leaders of the independent field in short subjects, and following the announcement of three new series of releases for the market during January, comes word of another two-reel comedy series to be released on February 12, by the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation.

The new series of comedies will feature Alexander Alt and Helen Howell. Alexander Alt and Helen Howell have teamed together for some time in vaudeville, and are well known to screen fans by their clever work in support of prominent screen stars. Alt is justly famous as a juvenile actor and portrayer of "boy" parts, while Miss Howell is equally well known as in ingenue.

Al Martin will direct the series. Martin is well known in the comedy producing field, having started his career as a writer of vehicles for a well known film comedian, later serving as a cutter and co-director with the star of his productions.

The supporting company has been selected with the intention of making a well balanced cast capable of producing a fast and clean comedy.

"Marked Women" is the title of the first release, and it bears out the promise of the producing company, that they can and will make good comedies. The Union Film Company is producing the series at their own studio in Sherman, California. There will be twenty-six comedies in the series, one to be released every other week.

Distribution will be through the Reelcraft and allied independent exchanges throughout the United States.

Guinan Series Is Started

Kremer Star Begins Production of First Picture; Ford Directing

WORK has already started on the series of eight western dramas in which Victor Kremer will present Texas Guinan. Miss Guinan having reached Los Angeles early this week where she at once went into consultation with Francis Ford who will direct the series.

The first picture to be released will be "The Girl Sheriff," from the pen of Eugenie Kremer, with the continuity by Winifred Dunn, and is built upon an actual incident of the great West, one of the chapters that has gone far toward making up the history of the country the other side of the Mississippi.

The role in this picture is said to particularly fit the dramatic personality of Miss Guinan and much is expected of it in the way of public endorsement.

Following "The Girl Sheriff" the other pictures will be "Red Head," "The School M'arm," "I Am the Woman" and "The Wild Flower of the Mountain Range." The titles of the remaining pictures will be announced shortly.

No expense will be spared in making this series, it is announced, and one of the most extensive advertising campaigns as yet undertaken has been planned.

The following territory for the series has already been sold; Greater New York and Northern New Jersey to the N. Y. Independent Masterfilm Co.; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to the De Luxe Film Co., of Philadelphia; South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida to the Southern Film Co., of Atlanta, Ga.; Louisiana and Mississippi to the Southern Film Co., of New Orleans and Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma to the Southern Film Co., of Dallas, Texas.

Bert Lubin Selects Title

"West of the Rio Grande" Chosen as Name by Novel Voting Test

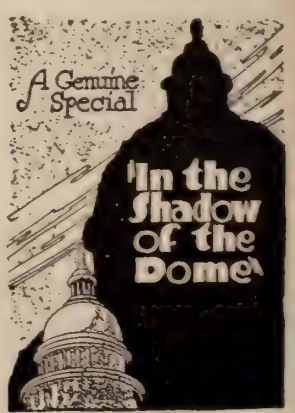
FOLLOWING a selective voting test for the best title for his second release which had tentatively been entitled, "Crossed Trails," and in which test the leading independent exchangemen about the country had been supplied with ballots, Bert Lubin announced today that the winning title selected was "West of the Rio Grande," and under this name his second release will be placed on the independent market immediately.

As noted in last week's trade papers, a list of twelve suggested titles was sent about the country. Lubin reports that "West of the Rio Grande" was selected for first place in ninety per cent of the replies, and ran second in eight per cent.

"West of the Rio Grande," is a five-reel Western and a sequel to "Honeymoon Ranch," Lubin's first release. It is adapted from the story of the same name by Tex O'Reilly, the famous writer and soldier of fortune.

Allene Ray, declared winner of the 1920 Fame and Fortune Beauty Contest is co-starred in this production with Harry McLaughlin who also supported her in her first Lubin picture. Direction is by Robin H. Townley.

A scene from the second Jack Hoxie feature to be released by Arrow Film. The production has not as yet been titled and is now being made on the Coast



Arrow Representatives Sent on Road

In conformity with the announcement of the policy of the Arrow Film Corporation of increasing their organization in anticipation of an increased volume of business during the coming year, Arrow this week announces from the office of W. Ray Johnston, vice-president and general manager, that Thomas C. Curran and C. M. White, newly appointed special representatives, who have for the past week been attached to the New York office, have this week gone out to their respective territories. Mr. Curran will make his headquarters in Kansas City, while Mr. White has gone to Cleveland.

Before going to Kansas City, Mr. Curran will visit St. Louis, while Mr. White will take in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati while on his way to Cleveland.

Fox-Fischer Production Not for State Rights

Under a photograph from "In the Shadow of the Dome," which appeared in the January 15th issue of the Motion Picture News, the caption erroneously stated that the picture was for state right release. Fox-Fischer Productions, who own the picture, state that it will not be offered to the Independent field.

New Producing Company

Salient Films, New Company, to Make 10 Five-Reelers a Year

SALIENT FILMS, INC., a New York corporation, announces its entrance into the ranks of producers who will film their pictures in the East.

An announcement issued to the trade this week states that Salient Films has been organized for the purpose of producing a series of ten five-reel features during 1921 and that these pictures will be made in New York. The new firm is composed of Messrs. Max. F. C. Goosmann, Frank W. Weeks and J. Charles Davis, 2nd., respectively president, vice president-treasurer and secretary, the last named also being supervising director with full authority over all productions of the company.

Mr. Goosmann was for several years connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in an executive capacity, during which time he travelled all over the United States in the interests of his company. He resigned the position of office manager of the New York Exchange of Famous to assume the management of the New York Exchange of the Empire State Film Corporation.

F. W. Weeks, vice president and treasurer, is a new comer to the ranks of motion picture producers. Mr. Weeks has long been interested in photography and has patented several inventions pertaining to the motion picture end of the business. He will devote his entire time to the affairs of the Salient.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, came to the motion pictures in 1912 from the ranks of the advertising men. He has devoted the intervening time to an exhaustive study of the business having been by turns scenario writer, assistant director, director, film editor, producer and exhibitor. He has devoted the last two years to the advertising and exploitation of pictures. He became director of advertising and publicity for the Arrow Film Corporation, which position he held until last week when he resigned to accept his present responsible one. He will have entire charge of the producing end of the business for Salient and states that work on their first picture will be started at once.

President Goosmann stated that it is the intention of Salient to produce good strong human interest stories, with a well chosen cast and to give them careful production with the best of direction and photography. It is the purpose of the company to make these pictures with a careful attention to cost, which will eliminate the vast sums of money so often wasted in making pictures. A carefully devised system of producing will be followed, which, it is claimed, will permit the turning out of a high grade product far below the usual cost but equal in every respect to the present standard of feature productions.

Farnum Feature Ready

"The Fighting Stangrer" is Announced as a Canyon Pictures Corp. Release

THE latest state right offering to be placed before the independent buyers of the country is Franklyn Farnum in "The Fighting Stranger." This production is the third of a series of six "eastern and western" dramas. The fact that it is a remarkable piece of work is attested by the unanimous words of commendation of all those buyers who have seen it, Canyon Pictures, who are releasing the picture, announce.

Franklyn Farnum, who has the reputation of being among the most strenuous and athletic of screen stars is said to outdo himself in "The Fighting Stranger." Wild riding, death defying leaps, tight rope walking across canyon mouths, are but a few of the stunts in which Mr. Farnum exhibits in the latest offering."

The story is an adaption of the novel "Danger," by William E. Wing.

Equity Feature Goes Big

"Whispering Devils" Scores on Ascher Circuit in Windy City

THIS week proved a banner week for the six-reel Equity state right feature, "Whispering Devils," starring Conway Tearle and Rosemary Theby, announces that company. A. M. Gollos, manager of the Gollos Enterprises of Chicago, who controls the distribution rights of this feature for Illinois and Indiana, communicated the news to the Equity Picture headquarters. He inaugurated his new year's business with the most successful run any of his features have yet had.

A short time ago Gollos purchased the distribution rights of "Whispering Devils" for his territory. A week later he screened this production for the Ascher Brothers circuit, the biggest of the West. Immediately Nate Ascher booked "Whispering Devils" for his entire circuit, beginning with the first of the year. Beginning with Ascher's Commercial theatre of Chicago, "Whispering Devils" moved about the Ascher circuit.

"Those who are familiar with the first-run situation in Chicago know that a picture must be exceptional to secure a full week booking at the Commercial theatre," Equity states, "'Whispering Devils' even excelled this mark. Up to the very last showing of the week the patrons who jammed the streets in order to crowd into the theatre, numbered into the hundreds, and it is only because of previous booking arrangements that 'Whispering Devils' was obliged to move from the Commercial to the Albany Park the following week. The story of the success of 'Whispering Devils' is by no means told, however, for it has the distinction of a simultaneous run at the Plaisance theatre, where Jack Miller, one of the most energetic showmen of the Middle West declared that the showing of 'Whispering Devils' constituted one of the greatest box-office triumphs in his memory."

Planning Kineto Release

Charles Urban Arranging for Distribution of Kineto Review

CHARLES URBAN will be ready to announce within a week or two the arrangements for distributing the Kineto Review on a national basis which takes in all of the United States and Canada. Thus this reel will take its place alongside of his Movie Chats, which have been in distribution for quite some time. That will mean two of the series of the Urban Popular Classics that will be available for motion picture exhibitors.

The Kineto Review has received a thorough testing out as to its drawing power in two high-class theatres. For weeks past it has occupied a prominent place in the programs of the Capitol theatre under S. L. Rothafel's direction in New York and in the Brooklyn Mark Strand theatre under the direction of Edward L. Hyman.

The subjects of the Kineto Reviews are as wide and inclusive as is subject matter for the camera. There is humor and the serious, beauty and study, all of the sciences, all of the arts, scenic and travel subjects of every land; pictudes of the customs and costumes of every people; pictures of work and play; industries, laboratories, military, naval and so on until every conceivable subject has been included.

This is possible because in Charles Urban's library of film there already exists 2,000,000 feet of film. Besides this, Mr. Urban is constantly receiving new negatives from all over the world, not only from his own staff of photographers but from free-lance photographers everywhere. He now has staff men all over Europe and Asia and from representatives in America there flows into his laboratories an unceasing supply of new subject matter.

Sales Manager Mintz Leaves Celebrated

M. J. Mintz, sales manager of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, has resigned to become general sales manager of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company of Chicago, assuming his new duties on January 3rd.

Mr. Mintz has had charge of the state rights department of Celebrated for the past ten months and has made a highly successful canvas of the Eastern and Western state rights field, selling "The Gumps" cartoon series, for which Celebrated Players hold the world rights.

In his new field of endeavor Mr. Mintz will have charge of sales for Synchronized Scenario Music Company, which is supplying complete musical settings for every feature.

Return Engagements for Equity's "Midchannel"

News has arrived to the Equity headquarters that the rum of "Midchannel," Equity's fourth Clara Kimball Young production, has already begun its career of return engagements.

Unsell Company an Aid to Independents

The Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc., which last week made its debut in the trade, will supply a need that has been paramount with independent producing companies, states that company. Unless he wished to shoulder the expense of a scenario department that would mean an overhead of from three to five hundred dollars per week at the minimum, the independent producer had no way of getting the results necessary to the functioning of a successful unit.

The new organization claims to have solved this difficulty by combining into one, a staff of people who understand the angles of the production end, thereby giving the trade a scenario department that will compare with any of the larger companies.

Stills on Sunrise Picture Reach New York

The long awaited set of stills that go with the Sunrise release, "The Price of Silence," starring Peggy Hyland, arrived from California during the week at Sunrise Pictures Corporation, New York, and in the Baltimore exchange. The negatives for stills to this super-independent production had been lost.

The arrival of the stills means that great speed will be the password in the Sunrise office from now on, for the release of the picture and the press books were held up on this account. It is the purpose of the company to issue as novel and original a set of lobby displays and oil paintings for exploitation purposes.

J. F. Lyons Gives Trade a Double Surprise

John F. Lyons, one of the youngest pioneers in the motion picture industry, surprised his friends on December 18th by taking unto himself a wife, and at the same time resigning his position as manager of the Simplex Projection Rooms, at 220 West 42nd Street, to assume an important position with the First National Exhibitors, Inc.

"Hush" Scoring in Detroit

Clara Kimball Young Production Well Liked at Kunsky's Madison

SUCCESS greeted "Hush" the Clara Kimball Young production at the Madison theatre, in Detroit, according to Equity, who is state righting the picture. Two days before "Hush" opened, it was screened before Mr. Kunsky, owner of the Madison, who booked it for the coming week, and although Detroit was in the midst of a snow storm in the early part of the week, picture fans were not prevented from turning out to see the star.

It is estimated that 34,000 patrons saw the picture during the week. An artistic lobby display ornamented the interior of the large Madison lobby.

Mr. Kunsky declared to Herbert Weil, who controls the distribution of the Young features in the Michigan territory that, even considering the popularity of the star, the success of the picture was unexpectedly large.

An additional source of attraction states Equity, that explains the triumph of the fifth Young release, was the teaser-advertising prepared by the Equity staff in advance of the showing of the picture. This advertising campaign is based on repeated use of the phrase "Hush Money" to arouse suspense among the public as to the coming of the picture itself. The series of inexpensive newspaper insertions sent to public officials in strong and crisp language proved extremely effective in awakening general curiosity.

Frothingham's 1921 Plans

Independent Producer to Make Four Specials in Coming Year

ELABORATE production plans for 1921 are planned by J. L. Frothingham, who recently entered the ranks of independent special producers. During a recent trip to New York Mr. Frothingham signed a contract with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for a series of four specials all of which are to be directed by Edward Sloman, one of the best known directors in the business. The first of the specials will be a picturization of "The Other Woman" a novel by Norah Davis. The others will be announced later.

In the cast of "The Other Woman" are Helen Jerome Eddy, Jane Novak, Jerome Patrick, Joseph J. Dowling, and Frankie Lee, the boy of "The Miracle Man," William Conklin and Aggie Herring. Tony Gaudio, until recently with the Allan Dwan Company, has charge of the photography and David Howard is Director Sloman's right hand man.

Mr. Frothingham is no newcomer in photoplay production. For nearly three years he has been producing at the Brunton studio, of which he is a member of the board of directors. He produced several series of photoplays starring Bessie Barriscale. Early in the fall he entered into an arrangement with W. W. Hodkinson for the making of two specials in which Miss Barriscale appeared, the first of which "The Broken Gate" a picturization of Emerson Hough's novel of that title, was a December release. The other is an adaptation of a magazine story "The Living Child" by Mary Lerner, the film version of which has been named "The Red Horizon." Mr. Frothingham is regarded as one of the big independent producers of the coming year.

Dominant Gets Comedies

Company Acquires 12 "Newlywed Comedies" with Rosemary Theby

DOMINANT PICTURES CORPORATION announce this week the release of a series of twelve comedies, to be known as "The Newlywed Series," for distribution on the independent market. This is the gist of a statement issued to the trade press the early part of this week by Jacques Kopfstein, general manager of the Dominant Pictures Corporation.

"The Newlywed Series," patterned after the Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies which were so popular a few years ago, will find favor with every kind of an audience, according to Mr. Kopfstein. In this respect, the comedies have been produced with the necessary amount of burlesque to make its appeal to followers of slapstick comedy apparent, and with an equal amount of refined humor to season its appeal to an entirely different audience.

Rosemary Theby, who scored such a sensational triumph in Robertson-Cole's "Kismet," is the star of the new series of comedies.

Florida as Producing Center

Garsson Describes His New Plant in Jacksonville

FOLLOWING the completion of negotiations for turning Camp Johnston, at Jacksonville, into a new gigantic motion-picture city, to be called Fine Arts City, comprising 700 acres of ground, Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., has returned to New York highly enthusiastic over the successful termination of the plans making Jacksonville one of the big producing centres in the motion picture industry.

"Not only will Fine Arts be interesting as a producing center, 27 hours' ride from New York," said Mr. Garsson, "but it will be an inspiring locale. Architecturally, it will stand out in vivid relief as a gem among motion picture centers. One of the ablest architects in Jacksonville has devoted weeks of study to supervising the designing of the plans for the studios where Fine Arts will make specials and program features.

"A big factor, too, from the monetary viewpoint, is railroad fare. It takes a little over one day or 27 hours to get to Jacksonville from New York. It takes 4½ days or over 108 hours to get to Los Angeles from New York. The railroad fare to Jacksonville is $39.46. That to Los Angeles is $120.59. A difference of $81.13. Quite a considerable sum, when it is necessary to make such a trip several times a year. Aside from money, what a time saver!

"And the time saving is not money wasting, either. Climatic conditions in Jacksonville are excellent; the big electric light plants of the city is ready with the necessary electric facilities; scenery is there that has never been photographed, and not to be equaled anywhere else in the world."

Fine Arts City will boast other novel and splendidly efficient caracteristics. This site embraces a much larger area than any other motion picture center. Each producing company will be given the use of a complete section entirely separate from every other studio; this unit plan of building studios is expected to appeal strongly to producers. Mr. Garsson said that he expects to place orders for equipment and to award building contracts upon his return to Jacksonville, which will probably be in the course of several days.

Motion picture producers who come to Jacksonville to locate will meet with square treatment. The motion picture committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the City Council of that city have pledged their co-operation. Likewise the local newspapers. These have pledged themselves to expose mercilessly any one who profiteers in connection with the industry. Similar pledges have been given by the Retail Dealers' Associations and the Jacksonville Real Estate Board.

W. R. Carter, chairman of the committee, in a recent statement, declared the committee will remain an active body, and that it will work constantly to prevent any mistreatment of motion picture people. Sincere and steadfast co-operation and all motion picture producing facilities are tendered to producers by Jacksonville's business men and municipal executives.

Following the announcement that came on January 1st that Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., would build and operate Fine Arts City of Jacksonville, scores of letters and telegrams came to the local Chamber of Commerce, the Motion Picture Committee, and to Mr. Garsson from producers seeking detailed information concerning Fine Arts City, its new and efficient method of "unit plan of building studios," and other matters of interest.

In connection with its motion picture activities and for the convenience of producers, the Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce is compiling a complete photographic record of thousands of locations available in the immediate vicinity of Fine Arts City, which is seven and one-half miles from the center of Jacksonville, situated near a brick paved highway and electric line conveyances. Experienced motion picture photographers have been engaged in this work for several weeks and are assembling a photographic library that is expected to be of incalculable assistance to producers and directors. Anticipating the inquiries about light and time in taking these pictures, each picture will have a time and a light record and will be indexed. This service will be established for use of motion picture people.

ADVANCE VIEWS OF COMING ATTRACTION

Live News From Producers

WHAT THE MAKERS SAY ABOUT PICTURES

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, Inc., announced this week the launching of a new house organ, First National Franchise, to serve as a connecting link between the more than three thousand exhibitor members of the organization.

The first issue of the publication, whose page size will be the same as the standardized trade papers, was scheduled to be put on the presses January 11, dated January 15 The paper is to be circulated monthly, and subsequent issues are to be off the press one week prior to their date of issue.

In announcing the new house organ, First National emphasizes the statement that First National Franchise is to be a service additional to the publicity department, several pages being devoted to the interchange of publicity ideas and exploitation stunts which have proved valuable in different sections of the country in presenting First National attractions.

Lee S. Ferguson, who joined First National December 1, 1920, has been named as editor of First National Franchise.

Ensemble scene from "Out of the Chorus," Alice Brady's latest picture for the Realart program

MORE than three hundred double exposures, a record number in the production of any motion picture, were made in "A Message from Mars," declares a statement from the Metro headquarters. The fantastic order of the theme made necessary the employment of some trick photography that would render it convincing. But after consultation with Bert Lytell, the star, Maxwell Karger, who is personally directing the picture, decided that the double exposure would need to be employed in order to present the Martian messenger, an important character in the story, in a transparent form.

Blaisdell Again an Editor

Resigns From Stoll Film to Become Publisher of a New Film Magazine

GEORGE BLAISDELL, director of advertising of the Stoll Film Corporation of America, has resigned from that post, the resignation having become effective January 8. He becomes editor and publisher of The Screen, a new non-theatrical film magazine, according to an announcement just made. Mr. Blaisdell was formerly editor of the Moving Picture World for two years.

George Blaisdell

Mr. Blaisdell is already at work in his new activity, which is a weekly publication devoted to the interests of non-theatrical pictures, such as those produced for industry, schools, churches and social organizations like the Y. M. C. A. He will have the assistance and co-operation of an advisory editorial board consisting of men prominent in big business, educational and church affairs. The project has, from its inception, received the heartiest encouragement from men in the non-theatrical motion picture field.

The Screen will be the only weekly of its kind. The first issue of the paper is expected early in March.

Mr. Blaisdell went with the Stoll company as director of advertising when it opened offices in this city three months ago. His achievements there have attracted widely favorable notice. The association has been most happy, he declares, and the severance of his connection has been taken with real regret. That the feeling is mutual on the part of the officials of the Stoll company is attested by General Manager Ralph Proctor.

Exhibitor Celebrates Tenth Anniversary

Gus Peterson of the Strawn Opera House and the Cozy Corner theatre, of Strawn, Texas, recently celebrated his tenth anniversary as a 100% Universal exhibitor. He was the recipient of congratulatory letters and telegrams from officials of the Consolidated Film Company, which distributes Universal pictures in the Southwest, and from officials of the Universal home office in New York.

Author Pays Tribute to Vitagraph Adaptation

E. W. Hornung, author of "Dead Men Tell No Tales," which Vitagraph made into one of the most successful screen productions, recently saw the picture in London. The author of "Raffles" and other widely read stories, paid Vitagraph the compliment of declaring that "Dead Men Tell No Tales" was the first of any of his stories adapted to the screen, and there have been many of them, where he could recognize his own work, as a motion picture.

Ritchey Posters Are Selected by Artists

An array of unusual posters are in preparation for the Roy Sheldon special production, "Is a Mother to Blame?" The question of posters for this picture was submitted to a group of Greenwich Village artists, who at the request of Modre Kovska, an artist and also a member of the Roy Sheldon cast, appeared in several of the Greenwich Village scenes in "Is a Mother to Blame?" These artists conferred on the selection of the posters to be used to advertise the production. Color sketches were prepared and submitted to the judges, and three of the water-colors selected for reproduction by the lithographers were from brushes of staff artists of the Ritchey Lithograph Company. These include a one, three and six-sheet, all of which are declared to be striking illustrations of the very latest developments in poster art.

International Arranges New Poster Designs

International News has arranged for an increased selection of one-sheet posters for lobby and other display. Hitherto, the International News has been heralded by one standard form poster.

Three artistic and colorful designs have been added. One is bordered by clusters of flags of various nations, to indicate the world-wide scope of International News. Another is bordered by designs indicative of wireless stations and radio-news, while the third has scroll moving picture film and camera decoration as a frame for the current news synopsis.

Robertson-Cole Announces First Four Releases for 1921

Hayakawa, Frederick, Max Linder Vehicles and Cabanne Feature on List

ROBERTSON-COLE makes public the specifications of its first four attractions of the new year. "Close inspection of each will prove it to be designed primarily for the purpose of enabling the exhibitor to please his public and increase his earnings," declares Robertson-Cole.

These first four productions are "The First Born," starring Sessue Hayakawa; "The Mistress of Shenstone," starring Pauline Fredrick; "Seven Years Bad Luck" with Max Linder; and "What's A Wife Worth?" directed by William Christy Cabanne.

In the statement from the Robertson-Cole headquarters, these four pictures are described to be especially representative of the entertainment quality which Robertson-Cole insists must characterize its every release."

"Ever since its beginning Robertson-Cole has been working steadily toward an ideal, which is the release of subjects so powerful artistically, dramatically and commercially as to give the exhibitor a maximum return," continues the Robertson-Cole statement. "Many special and super-special productions were released last year, culminating in the presentation of 'Kismet,' the great picture which stars Otis Skinner, and which, by its record-breaking national achievements, has become the box office sensation of the trade.

"Now Robertson-Cole brings the promise that the accomplishments of 'Kismet' are to be continued, even improved upon, by the results which exhibitors will obtain with its first 'Big Four' of the year 1921. These all are pictures greater than anything of their kind released last year, and productions bound by their stars, directors, stories, and general dramatic qualities to win even higher niches in public favor than other pictures to which Robertson-Cole put its name last year.

"Each was made under the conditions which the distributors have emphasized for so many months in the past, that is, with the maximum of time, care and money devoted to their production, and with always in the foreground the needs of the exhibitor and an all-important realization that the only success which can be a complete one is that in which the interest of the exhibitor are as carefully weighed as are those of the producer.

"Robertson-Cole knows that the box office test of these 'Big Four' will prove them to have been made on the theory that the interests of the exhibitor, producer and distributor are identical, the supreme need of all three being to give the public the best.

"Almost ready for release is the first of the four which is 'The First Born,' starring Sessue Hayakawa. This picture is the first made by Hayakawa under a new contract with Robertson-Cole which provides for the building of not more than four productions a year upon each of which is to be lavished greater time, care and money than ever before.

"The story of 'The First Born' begins on the picturesque banks of the Hoang-Ho river in China and weaves its way through the old Chinatown that San Francisco knew before the earthquake. Hayakawa in his role of Chan Wang, the boatman of the Hoang-Ho, wins the love of Loey Tsing, fairest flower of his village, only to lose her when a slave agent buys her from her father and takes her to San Francisco.

"Chang Wang follows his love but does not find her immediately. He meets another girl and marries. Chan Toy, the first born, arrives and in the child he centers all the love that he held for Loey Tsing. In the boy he can see only the image of Loey Tsing. Man Low Yek has purchased Loey Tsing. Her heart and spirit are broken. Chang Wang finds her. He still loves her and she him. Man Low Yek discovers and through his influence and wealth succeeds in getting Chan Wang's wife and the first born Chan Toy, into his clutches. He causes the death of both. Chan Wang revenges their deaths and returns to the Hoang-Ho with Loey Tsing.

"The second of the 'First Four' for this year is 'Seven Years Bad Luck' in which Max Linder, famous screen comedian comes back to a long-waiting public. It is a five-reel super-comedy in which one wave of uproarious fun follows another so closely that there is scarcely a breathing space between. Mr. Linder wrote, directed and acts the leading role in this most humorous production which has many backgrounds, a very large company of supporting actors, including many pretty girls, and which consists of an amazing series of ludicrous situations.

"The story of 'Seven Years Bad Luck' is drawn from one of those simple humanly-fascinating facts which form the basis for most amusing comedies. Superstition in general, and that particular precept which says that if one breaks a mirror he shall suffer ill fortune for the ensuing seven years is the basic idea. Max, who plays the leading role of "Max," himself, has the bad luck to smash a big cheval glass. The jinx starts after him.

"Through the most novel and unique scenes this theme is developed in a manner that would convulse the Sphinx itself. From the moment the comedy begins to unfold itself, when Linder is seen as the host of his last bachelor party through the incidents which lead to the breaking of the glass, the many screamingly funny things that befall him after this, to the final fadeout, which by the way contains a surprise finish calculated to keep an audience talking and laughing for many moons, there is not one dull or uninteresting situation.

"In the supporting cast with Mr. Linder appear such well-known screen players as Thelma Percy, sister of Eileen Percy, Alta Allen, Harry Mann, to say nothing of Joe Martin, popular "monk" actor, who gets more than one laugh by his funny antics.

"The third of the first "Big Four' is 'The Mistress of Shenstone,' a Robertson-Cole-super special which is the second of Miss Frederick's new productions for Robertson-Cole. It is for early release, and is expected to make an even deeper impression on the industry than did 'A Slave of Vanity' her first picture.

"'The Mistress of Shenstone' was adapted for the screen from Florence L. Barclay's popular novel and sets forth in telling manner the inner emotions of a woman of noble character who is mentally persecuted to the stage of last endurance. As the wife of an English nobleman, Miss Frederick is a young woman, free from care whose heart and soul are wrapped in the beauties of life, until that happiness is torn from her by an accident that causes her husband's death.

"Plunged into the shifting quicksands of fate she later meets and falls in love with a man, only to find after promising to become his wife, that he was the man whose error had caused her husband's death. Thus trapped between the new love that has come into her life and the feeling that she must avenge the death of her husband, she is brought face to face with a problem that furnishes exceptional opportunity for displaying the marvelous histrionic ability with which she is so peculiarly gifted. Miss Frederick takes advantage of every opportunity afforded her as Lady Ingleby and carries each situation to a higher pinnacle of dramatic portraiture than she has ever reached during her brilliant past.

"Throughout the entire production Miss Frederick invests it with her personality and paints vividly a picture of a fine character battling for happiness in a manner that touches the heartstrings and awakens the sympathies for the woman who struggles so hard to do the thing that is best for all concerned.

"It is confidently predicted that William Christie Cabanne will win greater fame through 'What's A Wife Worth,' which is the last of the first 'Big Four' for 1921 than he did through 'the Stealers' which has proved such a wonderful box office picture. As usual Mr. Cabanne has taken a most interesting human question and given it a most potent production.

A Fast Moving Melodrama

Avers Vitagraph of New Antonio Moreno Vehicle, "Three Sevens"

AS a screen vehicle for Antonio Moreno, "Three Sevens," Perley Poore Sheehan's famous novel, has worked out into a fast moving melodrama, declares a statement from Vitagraph's headquarters, and the first view of the picture just completed at the Western Vitagraph studios is reported to reveal a feature beyond the greatest expectations. The production is now being edited and titled.

To Chester Bennett, one of the best known of the younger directors, goes much of the credit for making Moreno's feature production a meritorious performance. Bennett's series of six pictures with Earle Williams established him as a director of skill and his picturization of this new story gives the screen something out of the ordinary, it is declared. Both star and director are declared to have done their utmost to make this picture exceptionally good.

"Three Sevens" is described to be a psychological melodrama—with a good theme, a strong moral and an absorbing entertaining plot. Two young actresses, each well known as a leading woman in pictures, are seen opposite the star. They are Jean Calhoun and Beatrice Burnham. Emmett King, De Witt C. Jennings, Bull Montana, Edwin J. Brady, Hector V. Sarno, Bobby Mack, Starke Patterson, Jeffery Webb and others of equal prominence complete the cast.

"Three Sevens" includes many spectacular sequences. Governor Campbell, of Arizona, kindly gave the company every privilege at the State prison at Florence. Three hundred convicts were liberated in an escape scene and permitted a mile outside the prison, declares the Vitagraph statement.

New Producer Enters Field

Metropolis Productions, Inc., Are to Make Short Subjects on Coast

THE film industry has a new producing organization just formed under the name of Metropolis Productions, Inc., which was incorporated under the laws of the State of California for $200,000. The officers of the company have been announced as H. S. Somson, president and manager of productions; Joseph Mertz, vice president, and Albert J. Guenther, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Somson has been connected with the film world for over ten years, recently having been manager of the Peerless Film Service, of San Francisco, before leaving for France.

The board of directors have outlined the policy of producing one one-reel comedy each week and two a month of two-reel length—all to be situation type—and six to eight super features per year. Preparations are now under way for the starting of their first big feature, which will be picturized from the English stage success, "Molly be Careful." This production will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Somson and directed by Wilson Welch, who is well known to the profession, having recently been connected with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and later with Robertson-Cole.

Some of the best farce comedy material has been contracted for, to appear in the one and two-reel program and the cast for "Molly be Careful," the first big production, includes David Warde, well known to the public in the farce comedy field; George French, Lillian Guenther and Polly Fisher. Preparations for release are being made at the present and future plans will be announced at a later date.

The company has leased studio space in Hollywood, and work was started on first production early in January.

Century Comics in Favor

Plant in Hollywood Enlarged; New Players and Directors Engaged

UNDER its new production schedule, the Century Film Corporation, makers of the Century Comedies, released by Universal, has entered into an era of unusual prosperity and success, it is reported at the Universal home office. Not only has the Century plant at Hollywood, Cal., been enlarged, more feature players and directors engaged, and production stimulated generally, but the recent output of two-reel fun film has met with widespread commendation, it is announced.

The reaction on the part of the exhibitor to the production strides of the Century company is shown in the commendatory letters from theatre owners who have been using Century comedies.

The Century Company of featured players now includes six popular comedians. They are Harry Sweet, Louise Lorraine, Charles Dorety, Florence Lee, Zip Monty and Dixie Lamont. Under a recent and long-term contract, Harry Sweet will henceforth be the leading Century star. Miss Lorraine, who gained great popularity in support of Elmo Lincoln in his two most recent serials, "Elmo the Fearless" and "The Flaming Disk," is the leading female player in the Century constellation.

The Century staff of directors now includes Fred Fishback, William Watson, Chuck Reisner, James Davis and Thomas Buckingham, in addition to Charles Gay, chief animal trainer, whose work with the Century lions has made screen history.

"Something Different" Booked on B'way

"Something Different," a Realart picture with Constance Binney, will have its Broadway premiere at Dr. Riesenfeld's Rialto theatre, where it will be shown during the week of January 16.

Miss Binney's supporting cast includes Ward Crane, Crane Wilbur, Gertrude Hillman, Lucy Fox, Mark Smith, Grace Scudiford, William Riley Hatch and Adolph Millar.

"Calderon's Prisoner," the novel by Alice Duer Miller, furnished the story for "Something Different."

Realart Picture Opens Baltimore Theatre

January 8th was the date chosen by William P. Stumpf for the opening of his new 1,000-seat Apollo theatre, Baltimore, Md. Mr. Stumpf chose for his opening attraction Realart's "Food for Scandal," with Wanda Hawley. Other Realart pictures will be shown at the Apollo since that theatre is a holder of the Realart Star Franchise, under which thirty-six productions are released.

Pictograph Features "Unshod Soldiers"

"The Unshod Soldiers," the first subject in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 703, is comprised of scenes clipped from a film record of life in Indo China made by Major Alexander Powell, the famous traveler and author, during his recent tour of the Far East. The soldiers in the picture belong to the Cambodian army and are of Malay, Siamese and Hindu origin.

Robertson Cole's Four

(Concluded)

"One of the most impressive things about 'What's a Wife Worth' is the consistent manner in which the story is told. It really starts from the very first scene that is flashed on the screen and goes on straight through to the end without the slightest deviation.

"In 'What's a Wife Worth?' Mr. Cabanne has made a production that will send people away from the theatre feeling better for having seen it. It is a 'human document,' sincere and sympathetic, in which the characters are not puppets bending to a director's will but real flesh and blood people, who in passing through the whirling maelstorm of life, either break or come forth erect, as their power may be.

"The theme about which the story of 'What's A Wife Worth?' is written teaches a moral lesson, but in its teaching never becomes tiresome or wearisome. Neither creeds or beliefs are flaunted, but one feels nevertheless, the influence of a great 'thought,' which prompted and inspired its inception.

"The story is enacted by a cast of great ability, in which are included such favorites as Ruth Renick, Casson Ferguson, Alec B. Francis, Cora Drew, Howard Gaye and Virginia Caldwell."

Select Audience Views Paramount Scenics

Hugo Riesenfeld gave a private showing before an audience, made up of scientists, college instructors, explorers and newspaper representatives, of motion pictures taken by the Vandenbergh-Paramount Expedition at the Rivoli theatre yesterday forenoon, Friday, January 7th. Dr. Leonard J. Vandenbergh, missionary and explorer, who headed the eleven months' expedition into East Africa and Uganda, personally lectured on the pictures.

French Actor Coming to America

Leon Mathot, the French star, who enacts the leading role in Leonce Perret's latest screen success, "The Empire of Diamonds" which Pathe is releasing, is coming to America, it is reported, as soon as he finishes his present picture, "The Emperor of the Poor," which he is now making for the French Pathe Company.

M. Mathot will probably be seen again in a picture produced by Leonce Perret.

"Mamma's Affair" Is Set for Jan. 31st

Constance Talmadge's next release, scheduled for January 31st, will be "Mamma's Affair," Rachel Barton Butler's well known Harvard prize play, a much more serious story than anything Constance has previously appeared in. Victor Flemming directed "Mamma's Affair," and some of those prominent in the cast are: Effie Shannon, Katherine Kaelred, George LeGuere, Kenneth Harlan and Gertrude LeBrandt.

Press-Book Available for "The Spenders"

To aid the exhibitor who plays Benjamin B. Hampton's great picturization of Harry Leon Wilson's novel, "The Spenders," the publicity department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an elaborate press book embodying practical suggestions for use with this picture.

Anti-Blue Law Fight Growing

16,000,000 Club Will Become 50,000,000 Club is Report

THE 16,000,000 Club, to fight "Blue Sunday" Legislation, started by Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, representatives of the Ford Motion Picture Laboratories, has developed so rapidly that it threatens to turn into a 50,000,000 Club, according to a statement from the organizers.

Every mail brings a volume of requests for personal petition blanks from all parts of the country, it is declared. Most of the letters say "send immediately;" or "send by return mail;" while many can't wait for Uncle Sam and send wires post haste to hurry the blanks along, according to the report of the Ford representatives.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy were the first to start an organized national campaign against this movement, and the 16,000,000 Club pledges every member to do their utmost to kill the "Blue Sunday" legislation. This firm is in a position to realize from a number of angles just what this "Blue Sunday" would mean to the motion picture industry, because they own and operate a chain of theatres and are also representatives of the Ford Motion Picture Laboratories, so they stand as exhibitors, producers and distributors.

When the agitation first started they wanted to jump in and help, and in an effort to get at least 16,000,000 petitions before Congress they paid for full page advertisements of the 16,000,000 Club in every motion picture trade paper in the country—both national and regional. They offered to furnish free of charge personal petition blanks which could be used by the exhibitors, the distributors and the manufacturers to gather signatures to send to their representatives at Congress protesting against the curtailing of the liberty of the American people, and legislation which threatens the existence of, the future and the stability of the entire motion picture industry. They called it the 16,000,000 Club because they wanted to get that number of petitions to send to Congress. But the way in which the members of the motion picture industry are responding make it look as if the millions will be many more than sixteen, and that Congress will be simply blanketed with these petitions.

The blanks are prepared to accommodate space for 100 signatures. They do not protest only against the closing of the theatres on Sunday but against "the enactment of any Blue Sunday legislation which is intended to curb the happiness, pleasure and innocent pursuits of the American people."

Theatre syndicates are sending in saying "we want five thousand blanks." Distributors are wiring, "we can use two thousand right away and will send for more as soon as these are filled." Producers are writing, "we can use thousands." Many of the theatre men simply say they have three theatres or they have four theatres, and leave it to the discretion of the instigators of the idea to send as many as they think proper. One exhibitor wants to make his town 100 per cent against the Blue Sunday and wrote expressively, "Send me the dope for the fight against Blue Sunday. We have a town of 9,000." And he received a supply which will enable him to enroll every citizen.

Five Metro January Releases

Four Specials and a Roland West Film on Schedule

FOUR special productions from the studios in Hollywood and Jewel Carmen in a Roland West production, comprise Metro's January release schedule. Viola Dana in F. Scott Fitzgerald's "The Offshore Pirate"; May Allison in an adaptation of Margaret Mayo's dramatization of "The Marriage of William Ashe," a novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward; "Lure of Youth," Luther Reed's original story, presenting an all-star cast; and Jewel Carmen in "The Silver Lining," produced by Roland West, are the pictures.

The last named, written as well as produced by Mr. West, is the first to be released, the date being January 3. The exciting twists in this story that deals with the divergent careers of two girls, one a crook and the other a society belle, insure to exhibitors booking it a certain response from patrons.

"Lure of Youth," a Metro special, will be released on January 10. This absorbing picture of the sacrifice of a famous actress for the sake of keeping fresh the illusions of an ambitious youth, was adapted by Luther Reed, from his own original story. The all-star cast that enacts it includes Cleo Madison, Gareth Hughes, Lydia Knott, William Conklin, William Courtwright and Helen Weer. Philip E. Rosen directed "Lure of Youth." The photography is by Robert Kurrle; the art interiors were designed and executed by Sydney Ullman.

May Allison stars in "The Marriage of William Ashe," which Metro releases on January 17. This picture was adapted from Margaret Mayo's dramatization of the novel by Mrs. Humphrey Ward. The supporting cast includes Wyndham Standing, Zeffie Tillbury, Frank Elliott, Robert Boulder, Lydia Yeamans Titus, and Clarissa Selwynne. Edward Sloman directed. The scenario is by Ruth Ann Baldwin. Jackson Rose was responsible for the photographing and John Holden the art interiors and lighting effects.

The fourth release of the month "The Offshore Pirate" is announced for January 31, with magnetic Viola Dana starring. This Metro special was adapted from F. Scott Fitzgerald's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name.

Elmer Pearson Takes "Stock"

Pathe Exchange Director Reviews Product for 1921

WITH the turn into the New Year, and its already encouraging signs for industry in general and motion pictures in particular, Pathe has taken "stock," as it were, and finds itself equipped with what is believed to be the finest assemblage of entertainment in its entire career.

This "inventory," taken by Director of Exchanges Elmer Pearson, indicates that Pathe is prepared for all events, with a series of features that have never been equalled by a Pathe feature output; the most attractive series of short subjects on the motion picture mart, and a schedule of serials that rivals comparison.

In calling the attention of his field forces to this "stock" Mr. Pearson keenly advises that the product is of such high class merit as to be a bulwark against any slump in business.

And further, Mr. Pearson foresees no good reason at this time for any real depression in the motion picture industry, insofar as it affects the exhibitor.

"Conditions generally throughout the country, according to daily reports in the newspapers, giving the opinions of the foremost men of industry and finance, are sounder today than in months," writes Mr. Pearson. In the early fall conditions unquestionably were extremely precarious. Industry was suffering its first and most serious blow from post war conditions and financial inflation. But industry in general stood up well under the shock. Various sections were temporarily demoralized, but even this fact didn't bring any material decrease of patronage to motion picture theatres.

"Now, on any morning, one can pick up a newspaper and read where factories shut down for weeks, are again resuming activities. The buying strike of the public has about ended. The lowering of retail prices in accordance with the drop in the wholesale markets, will further aid this condition.

"In any event, Pathe is prepared to face conditions with a most superior type of productions, serials, short subjects and features. Just a few of the coming features, or current issues, are 'Dice of Destiny,' "Rogues and Romance," the comedy drama, which led George B. Seitz to take an entire company to Spain; 'That Girl Montana,' a play with Miss Sweet; 'When We Were Twenty-one,' also an H. B. Warner offering; 'The Sage Hen,' typical Edgar Lewis production.

"And then there is 'The Devil,' in which Andrew J. Callaghan and Harry Leonhardt will bring George Arliss to the screen, via the Associated Exhibitors.

"In addition to these attractions, there is 'Half a Chance,' 'The Riddle: Woman,' 'One Hour Before Dawn,' 'Passers By,' 'Rio Grande,' 'Other Men's Shoes' and 'The Deadlier Sex.'

"With the adding to our schedule of the Tom Santschi series and the Holman Daystories,Pathe has some of the best outdoor features it has ever issued.

"The short subjects department has been substantially responsible for the record business of our organization in the past few months, The Pathe News continues strong in the topical field. Hal Roach continues to turn out one comedy a week. 'Snub' Pollard gains in popularity with each release, while the Vanity Fair girls captivate and act as beautiful aides to Eddie Boland, comedian, in the 'Vanity Fair Girl' one-reelers. 'Topics of the Day' also have taken such a firm grasp on audiences.

"The success of Harold Lloyd continues to grow apace. With the release of 'Number, Please?' Lloyd completed the second stage of his career in two reelers. There is no episode in motion picture history so full of brilliant achievement as that of Mr. Lloyd's.

"Pathe serials will be 'The Double Adventure,' with Charles Hutchison; 'The Avenging Arrow,' with Ruth Roland; Juanita Hansen in 'The Phantom Foe' and 'Velvet Fingers,' with George B. Seitz, two current releases."

THE second class of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's training school for salesmen will open at the home office in New York Monday, January 17. Fred F. Creswell, field sales supervisor, who conducted the first class which terminated in November, will again be in charge, and the sessions of the class will run through a period of four weeks as before.

Thirty-four carefully selected men have been notified to be in attendance at the opening session Monday morning. Of these, the great majority are from within the Paramount organization, although more than 300 applications were received from outside men. The latter, however, were subjected to the most rigid entrance requirements, with the result that only the most exceptionally qualified were accepted.

Five men will attend from the exchanges in the Southern territory, which was unrepresented in the first class, and there will again be four from the Pacific Coast offices as well as representatives from nearly all of the exchanges of the Middle and Far West and East.

Continues First-Run Discussion

Woody Supplements Statement Made Last Week

"THE life period of a really worth-while picture is not to be measured by the time occupied in its first-run showings. A strong production that has made money for a theatre once, will do it again—if it is given a chance." This is the belief of John S. Woody, Realart's general manager, who was discussing the question of first and subsequent run showings.

"In discussing last week the theory of first runs it was possible to touch only on one phase of a broad and very vital subject," explained Mr. Woody. "There is much more to it than the single fact that exhibitors are coming to realize the importance of booking strong productions, whether they have had a first run or not.

"For now there are many exhibitors who are going still further. These men are using pictures that have been shown in their neighborhood before—and at their own theatres. And they are finding that the second visit of the production is as profitable as the first.

"The pictures chosen for a second showing at these houses are, of course, strong ones, otherwise no exhibitor in his right mind would dream of taking them. They are having successful runs all over the country; they are productions of known pulling power.

"Among these pictures are the Mayflower specials, released by Realart under its risk plan. Under this plan, as has been stated, exhibitors play the five specials, and then pay us what they regard as a fair proportion of the box-office receipts.

"At first exhibitors who had already shown the pictures were franky skeptical about repeating at a profit. They argued that because they had made money on them the first time it was not necessarily true that they could do it again. In fact, some of them were mighty certain they'd lose at it.

"Realart, however, had faith in the strength of the Mayflowers, and to convince exhibitors that we were sincere the play-and-pay plan was inaugurated. We said, in effect, 'take these pictures and run them. Then pay us what they are actually worth at your box-office.' Exhibitors investigated the idea, thought it over—and sent in for the pictures.

"We shipped the productions—Allan Dwan's 'Soldiers of Fortune' and 'The Luck of the Irish'! Emile Chautard's 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room'; R. A. Walsh's 'The Deep Purple,' and Charles Miller's 'The Law of the Yukon,' and that's all there was to it. The exhibitors who before had had serious doubt found themselves happily surprised. They discovered they had made money on the productions (as we were certain they would), and in their discovery they didn't forget Realart. The 'honor system' found, and is finding, a splendid response.

"A good example of successful second showing is found in Detroit. Late reports from that section indicate that twenty-nine theatres—a remarkable number for a city of its size—are subscribers to the risk plan. These houses have taken the five Mayflowers for showing—regardless of previous runs. But what is even more noteworthy is the fact that out of these twenty-nine all but four have shown one or more of the pictures before.

"These exhibitors first booked the productions on a straight rental basis. They had faith in the power of the pictures at their box-office. And then they ran them again, under the risk plan, and found them profitable on the second showing. The very fact that they could and did pay Realart on the basis of the production's box-office value is proof, I think, that the pictures were successful."

Tom Moore and Schertzinger in New York

Tom Moore, the popular Goldwyn star, slipped into New York last week with his director, Victor Schertzinger, with the ostensible intention of taking some New York scenes for the next photoplay in which Mr. Moore will appear. At present no title has been decided upon for the picture by the Goldwyn executives.

Metro Photography Is Praised by Exhibs

Appreciative response from exhibitors throughout the country upon the photographic excellence of Metro productions has been received at that company's home office in New York, at exchanges, and at the big studios in Hollywood. Unusual photography and artistic lighting are being sought through the efforts of a corps of experienced cameramen and the most complete electrical equipment and photographic devices procurable.

Broadway Beauties in "Torchy" Comedies

Two of the most beautiful girls in Broadway shows are featured in "Torchy's Night Hood," latest of the pictures from the Sewell Ford stories and starring Johnny Hines. These are Dorothy Mackaill, the young English girl, who scored a pronounced hit on the Century Roof and who is now playing in the Midnight Follies, and Dorothy Leeds, who is now a member of the "Hitchy Koo" company.

Edwin Carewe Finishes Feature for Mayer

With the shooting of some scenes on deserted Santa Rosa Island, Edwin Carewe finished the production of Anita Stewart's latest Louis B. Mayer-Associated First National attraction. The picture was produced under the working title of "The Tornado," but a new title will be announced later. Heading the supporting cast are Walter McGrail and Herbert Rawlinson.

BLANCHE SWEET in
"THAT GIRL MONTANA"

From the novel
By Marah Ellis Ryan

Director
Robert Thornby

Is it thrilling to find a timid and beautiful girl made the companion of a desperado?
Is it exciting to find her taken into an Indian tribe as the adopted daughter of the chief?
Is it gripping to find her turned out into the world as the companion of a man she never knew before?
Is it romantic to find that he is the handsomest man in the West and to know that he loves her but won't tell?
Is it entertaining when you see the timid young girl dominating everything and everybody?
It is all of these things and in addition it is Blanche Sweet in the best role she has ever appeared in. It is a sure-fire box office picture, in star, story, and pro-duction.

Charles Ray's Feature Shown to Jackies

The officers and men of the United States battleship Idaho, then at anchor off San Pedro, Cal., had a treat recently, when Charles Ray's picture, "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," was shown aboard the ship by special arrangement with the Los Angeles branch exchange of First National.

Commander C. L. Hussey was so delighted with the entertainment that he wrote in part as follows:

"The picture was very well received by the officers and men. It's a pleasure to indorse a picture of this quality. It is a pity that there are not more photoplays on the market as clean and wholesome as this one."

Boom for Educational in the Northwest

J. F. Cubberly, manager of the Minneapolis exchange of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., returned this week to his home after a week spent in conference with President E. W. Hammons. He predicted that the next two months would see the greatest gains in the history of his office.

Educational comedies are now playing the principal first-run theatres in Minneapolis, Milwaukee and other key cities in the district. These pictures have been booked solidly by Finkel and Rubenstein and a number of other chains of theatres.

"The Devil" Ready for Release

Pathe to Issue Associated Exhibitors Picture February 6

ACCORDING to an announcement from the offices of the Associated Exhibitors, "The Devil," starring George Arliss, will be released to exhibitors throughout the country on February 6th. Practically every leading theatre in the country has negotiated for the production following its pre-release showing at the Strand theatre, New York, the week beginning January 16th, Pathe announces. Several exceptional presentations are assured, and long runs in important cities are expected.

The entire sales force of the Pathe Exchange, through which the picture will be distributed, report that the exhibitors who have seen the production have spread the word of its merit and they predict phenomenal success in every part of the country.

With the premier of "The Devil" at the Strand theatre, New York City, unique exploitation aid will be utilized for the first time. Associated Exhibitors have contracted for a large quantity of portable electric signs. These signs are 36 x 22, set in a portable box and carrying a celluloid poster in four colors. Eight switch lights of various colors are set in the box and the ever changing color behind the celludoid screen gives a beautiful and striking effect. These signs will be shown first in New York.

The story of "The Devil," briefly, is as follows:

Dr. Muller, played by Mr. Arliss, was everyone's trusted friend. He visited people's homes and was the friend whom women doted upon and husbands trusted. But he was the devil incarnate. Out of the Goodness of others he made Evil.

It was at the Champs Elysees Galleries that Dr. Muller met Marie Matin and her fiance, Georges Roben. She had been admiring the newly hung painting of "The Martyr—Truth Crucified by Evil," and had remarked that the picture was wrong — Evil could never overcome Truth.

Dr. Muller, while he pretended to agree with her contention, diabolically schemed to have her, Truth, overcome by him, Evil. To that end he chose as his puppets Mimi, a beautiful model, and Paul de Veaux, an artist who had always loved Marie and was heartbroken over her betrothal to Georges Roben, who was his friend.

To bring Marie and Paul together, Dr. Muller arranged for Paul to paint a portrait of Marie as the true type of French woman. In Mimi he then aroused an interest in Paul, and a natural feminine jealousy, by insinuating that Marie was merely a heartless society woman who was trifling with Paul's affections and would ruin his wonderful career.

Mimi's interest quickly turned to love, and Paul accepted it because it helped him to forget Marie. When Marie came to have her portrait painted she reproached him for using a woman's heart.

Having caused Mimi to fall in love with Paul; kept flaming Paul's love for Marie; awakened in Marie the knowledge of Paul's love, and roused suspicions in Georges of Marie's constancy, Dr. Muller invited his human toys to a bal masque.

It was amid scenes of mirth and frivolity that he particularly loved to further his evil designs. At the height of the gaiety Dr. Muller told Georges Roben that he was standing in the way of the happiness of two people who loved each other —his fiancee, Marie, and his friend, Paul.

Because his love was great enough for the sacrifice, Georges released Marie from her engagement, but—Dr. Muller's little game had only begun, and accordingly the happiness of Paul and Marie was short lived. He so arranged that Marie found Mimi with Paul in his studio later that night. Believing Paul's love for her less than that of Georges, she went back to Georges, and hastened the wedding.

Their marriage and happiness did not discourage the malevolently mischievous Dr. Muller. Mimi was disconsolate because Paul blamed her as the cause of his losing Marie. So Dr. Muller, in his guise as tender-hearted friend, beseeched Marie to use her influence over Paul to make him forget the past and be happy with Mimi.

Marie went. But, instead of her presence firing anew Paul's love, her goodness made him see the truth. Her visit was quickly followed by Georges, who had been told by Dr. Muller that his wife was with her lover. His anger melted when he found Mimi with Paul and both owing their newfound happiness to Marie.

When the plan failed, Dr. Muller played his highest card. He lured Marie to his house and, behind locked doors, told her that he was Evil and would overcome her —Truth. Marie's Truth and Goodness, however, were steadfast. Evil gave way and fell before her great faith. Truth—Marie—triumphed and fled to the arms of her husband.

Novel Exploitation for Vitagraph Special

Vitagraph's special production, "Dead Men Tell No Tales," has proven one of the best productions for exploitation and special advertising offered within the past two or three years, in the opinion of Vitagraph officials. The unusual title of the novel by E. W. Hornung has offered all sorts of possibilities, and coupled with local movements it has almost become a national catch phrase. Vitagraph paved the way with a nation-wide teaser campaign and exhibitors generally have followed up the lead. A local tie-up with the traffic safety campaign was cleverly worked by the management of the Moon theatre, Omaha, Neb.

Stage Mask Making in Pathe Review

As an illustration of the motion picture screen's high development along the lines of the printed magazines in establishing a close contact between its patrons and the most recent accomplishments in art, industry and science, no more convincing example could be found than that offered in Pathe Review No. 89, which will take this article's usually important place on the Pathe schedule for release February 6.

This issue of the Review contains a group of views showing the designing and molding of stage masks by W. T. Benda, celebrated for his decorative sketches and the masks he has displayed on the stage this season.

The issue also contains a Hy Mayer Capitol Travelaugh, this one entitled, "In the Land of Fancy," a series of scenes in which the famous cartoonist combines his sketches with motion photographs of remarkable cloud effects. The slow-motion pictures show the New York Curb brokers, using their queer sign-language in ordering the sale or purchase of stocks. "The Bamboo Express" is the Pathe Color subject and shows views of the Tenryu River, Japan.

To Seek Screen Stories in Strange Lands

Pauline Bush has been commissioned by Allan Dwan to tour the world for story material. She will go first to China and later to Japan, India, South Africa, Egypt, Persia, France and England. Foreign buyers complain that American-made pictures "are merely variations of the same old central theme," declares Miss Bush. "They are tired of our narrow American viewpoint and treatment of drama." The world, says Miss Bush, is full of picturesque people and dramatic events, and it is to secure such material as will be a departure from the customary American scope and atmosphere that Miss Bush will tour the world in the interest of future Allan Dwan productions.

Bebe Daniels Returns to West Coast

Bebe Daniels, Realartist, is now back at the West Coast studios after a visit to her birthplace, Dallas, Texas, where she spent part of the holidays.

At the Old Mill theatre in Dallas Miss Daniels made four appearances. Each was the occasion of an ovation to which Miss Daniels responded by singing songs and telling her audience how glad she was to be home. The theatre was packed and the streets nearby filled with those unable to gain admission.

Spectacular Fire Staged

Three-Story Tenement Set Burned to Secure Realism in Metro Film

WHAT is described by Metro to be one of the most spectacular and thrilling character fire scenes ever done for the screen was staged last Friday morning at 6 o'clock on Recreation Ball Park at Long Island City, when Metro officials, and workmen, directed by Maxwell Karger, burned down a three-story tenement house as part of the action of "A Message from Mars," the forthcoming Maxwell Karger production to be made and released by Metro, starring Bert Lytell. The fire scenes came as a grand final to the Metro production which for two entire months has completely occupied the working time of Maxwell Karger.

The company of players, including Mr. Lytell, the star, had labored all night long in the effort to perfect the final scenes of the enormous production. Scheduled to take place early Thursday evening, numerous delays ensued that postponed the shooting of the final scenes while the building was in flames until day had almost dawned.

The building that was burned in the fire scene at Long Island City was part of a row of brick tenement houses specially constructed by Metro to represent a London street scene in "A Message from Mars." The set was the length of a city block and reproduced a section of the London slums—a narrow dirty street in the Whitechapel district. Here was shown the sweepings of London street life crowded in miserable squalor within the filthy walls of tenement houses.

It was to this human hive of misery that the fire came, driving its occupants out into the streets. Then the lurid glare of the fire showed the arrival of the London fire department and the rescue by Horace Parker, the principal character, portrayed by Bert Lytell, of some of the helpless inmates.

More Hodkinson First-Runs

Increase Reported in Number of First-Run Houses Booking Service

IN his persistent quest of first runs for Hodkinson pictures, General Sales Manager P. N. Brinch is getting a good deal of encouragement from his best men in the field. Reports from the latter are declared to be unanimous as to the very lively interest the first run exhibitors are showing, especially in the newer releases. Many exhibitors declare they find an element of variety in the Hodkinson pictures which in their judgment makes them specially eligible for first run houses.

Speaking on this question, a prominent Boston exhibitor, is quoted as saying that patrons go more in search of variety than ever before.

"Nowadays the public are but little attracted by trade-marks. They go shopping and every shopper loves variety—the women shoppers especially and of course we are bound to please the ladies. Your pictures give this element of variety right off the reel and that's why I am inclined to favor them for my two first run houses."

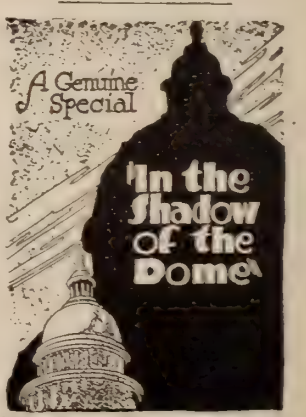
The statement of this exhibitor has been repeated in one form or another in much of the correspondence that has reached Mr. Brinch from the men in the field, it is declared.

"Before the first quarter of the new year expires," said P. N. Brinch, sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, "Hodkinson will be a name to conjure with in many hundreds of first run theatres.

"The Kid" Brings Heavy Demand for Seats

Announcement that Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid," First National six reels of joy, will be included on the program of the subscription benefit performance to be given at Carnegie Hall on January 21 by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures for the working fund of the Children's Department, has started a demand for boxes among producers and stars of motion picture companies which indicates that the house will be sold out before the doors are opened for the showing. Many applications for tickets have come from theatre owners and managers in the New York, New Jersey and Philadelphia exchanges territory.

In addition to arranging the presentation of "Passion," Mr. Rothapfel will also arrange for the entire entertainment, including the showing of "The Kid" and the remainder of the program that will be offered.



Exhibs Thank Universal for Service in 1920

Officials of the Universal salesforce are proud of a letter recently received from Tracy & Powell, exhibitors of Wellington, Ohio, newcomers in the list of Universal picture exhibitors. After many months of hard work on the part of Universal salesmen, Tracy and Powell consented to book a few Universal pictures, about a year ago.

"As the year 1920 rapidly fades into the past," wrote W. J. Powell of the Ohio Amusement firm, "we consider it eminently fitting that we should express our thanks to your company for the splendid service rendered us and for the consideration and interest you have taken in our business and our success."

"The Sage Hen" to Be Released Jan 23

Pathe Exchange, Inc., in accordance with its plans for bigger productions for the new year, has scheduled the new Edgar Lewis Production, "The Sage Hen," to head its schedule for the week of January 23. Like a majority of Edgar Lewis' Pathe features, "The Sage Hen," is an outdoor drama with a powerful emotional appeal. It is said to contrast the best with the worst; those who have exalted noble ideals with those who are the scum of the earth. Arizona, in the days of the '80s furnishes a background for the story.

Striking Local Color in "Home Stuff"

Time will roll back for many resi-dents of the big cities with their first glimpse of Viola Dana in "Home Stuff," a piquant tale of laughs and tears now being filmed as a special Metro production.

For the picture is being crowded with the all but forgotten home touches that will be recalled by every city dweller. Everything from the pet chicken that followed its mistress about the back yard, to the little opera house down on Main street, will be seen in the pro-duction, declares Metro.

Pioneer Executive to Visit Exchanges

Called away on some very impor-tant deals, Vice President and Gen-eral Manager M. H. Hoffman of the Pioneer Film Corporation has left the city to visit Cleveland, Cin-cinnati and Detroit. In all prob-ability he will also visit Chicago.

While visiting these cities Mr. Hoffman will call on the Pioneer exchanges for conference with managers and their assistants and outline to them the program of activity for Pioneer for the New Year.

Fox Special Scores on Coast

By J. C. Jessen (Special Correspondent)

THE Wm. Fox special production, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," from the Mark Twain satire of the same name, now showing at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, at 50 cents, 75 cents and $1, is by many believed to be the most unusual and highly entertaining picture shown in Los Angeles for many months, and local press critics have lauded Director Emmett J. Flynn and the cast in most extravagant terms.

The production is timely, even though the story was written many years ago, for it contains the doctrine that keeps Europe in an upheaval, namely, the divine right of kings.

The story having been brought up to date in every phase creates numerous comedy situations, keeps the big audiences in almost continuous uproar. Perhaps the biggest laughs are caused by King Arthur's knights, clad in armor, going forth to war on motorcycles built in a modern factory under the supervision of the Connecticut Yankee, but the timely use of telephones, the creation of Ford automobiles from discarded armor and the destruction of the Queen's Castle by dynamite are almost equally ludicrous.

The production may be spoken of as a spectacle for the settings, costuming, and effects giving an atmosphere of the time King Arthur's reign add a grandeur and beauty, not surpassed by films of early day atmosphere seen by the writer. There have been pictures made in which more people were used in the mob scenes, but I doubt if in any the people have been used to better advantage and dressed the sets in a more convincing manner than in this Fox film.

The completion of this production brings another director into the limelight for in the making of this Emmett J. Flynn has outdone all previous efforts and produced a real special feature worth higher rentals and box office prices for the production will not only please every one but it will create that desired mouth-to-mouth advertising wherever shown, thus adding inestimably to its value.

Superlative adjectives should be used in speaking of every member of the cast. Harry C. Meyers, whose recent work has been as heavy, is the leading man of this feature, playing the part of the Yankee in a manner most suitable for this debonair semi-light comedian role, while Pauline Stark is a most captivating heroine as Sandy and gives the best performance of her several years on the screen. Rosemary Theby interprets the role of Queen Morgan Le Fay with a vampish hauteur that brings Mark Twain's word pictures to life. Merlin, the magician, is played by Wm. D. Mong, and this well known actor does not lose a single scene. Charles Clary satisfied your imagination in his performance as King Arthur and George Siegmann as Sir Sagramore is again a heavy and gives an exceptional performance. Charles Gordon as the page rounds out a truly all star cast, while Carl Forms gives an impersonation of Mark Twain in the introduction of characters.

Of marked value to the production are the sub-titles, many which are composed of up-to-the-minute slang, which serve to contrast them with ye olde English statements of King Arthur's people. Bernard McConville is accredited with the scenario.

Since the opening of this picture at Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, it has played from three to five capacity houses daily, and it is estimated the picture will continue at this theatre at the present prices for a run of eight or ten weeks.

First Neilan Release for 1921

"Bob Hampton of Placer" Heads Schedule for 1921

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial release for 1921 will be his spectacular visualization of Randall Farrish's book, "Bob Hampton of Placer," the big production of America's frontier days in 1876, which has been in the course of production since early last summer.

Undoubtedly the most ambitious picture yet staged by this producer, declares a statement from the Neilan headquarters on the Coast, this film will mark the beginning of an active year for the Neilan producing organization. Upon his return to Hollywood from New York Mr. Neilan will finish this production for early release in the New Year. The picturization of Booth Tarkington's famous "Penrod" will then be started by the Neilan company, with Wesley Barry again in the starring role. This film will be staged in the east in order to give the picture its proper setting. Albert Payson Terhune's "The Lotus Eater" is also scheduled for early production. These three subjects indicate that Mr. Neilan will start the new year with the presentation of well known stories, staged in a big way.

For "Bob Hampton of Placer" the producer has used 1500 men and horses of the Tenth Cavalry stationed at Fort Huachuca, Arizona. In the production of these spectacular military effects the entire fort was turned over to Mr. Neilan. A thousand Blackfeet Indians in their picturesque attire are also shown and many night views with novel lighting photographed by David Kesson and Jacques Bizeul at the head of a rorps of cameraman are said to present the most artistic conceptions of Mr. Neilan's career of ten years in the producing branch of the industry.

In picturing this story Mr. Neilan has found it unnecessary to deviate from the original plot. With the exception of the creation of the character portrayed by Wesley Barry, to give comedy relief to the otherwise highly dramatic theme, he has closely followed Mr. Parrish's book, which has had such wide popularity. Marion Fairfax, who has adapted all the Neilan stories for screen presentation during the past year, has worked for months on the script of "Bob Hampton" with the idea of making this her best achievement.

In the part of "Bob," James Kirkwood is given a character that should register some of his best efforts. The mystery surrounding this character makes it a difficult one to portray. Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley, Noah Beery, Charles West and other popular Neilan players in "Go and Get It," "Dinty" and "The River's End" are assembled in the cast.

Wesley Barry forsakes his newspapers and ragged cap of "Dinty" for the hair chaps and six-shooters in "Bob Hampton of Placer."

In this production Mr. Neilan again entrusts the comedy high lights of the story to the freckle-faced youngster in a part especially written into the plot which is otherwise of great dramatic tensity throughout.

Playing opposite James Kirkwood, who portrays the title role, Wesley is always in the foreground of the action as the pard of the story's hero. "Dinty" has given the public an idea of the dramatic scope of this boy's talents, and while his work will chiefly be along a humorous vein in "Bob Hampton of Placer," there are several incidents of heart appeal in which he figures that are expected to outshine his previous efforts, including such work as he evidenced in the death scene in "Dinty," conceded to be one of the most striking bits of acting disclosed this season on the screen.

Coast Hails Betty Compson

Press Reviewers Shower Praise on Her Work in "Prisoners of Love"

BETTY COMPSON in her first starring vehicle, "Prisoners of Love," released by Goldwyn, has captured the press and public of Los Angeles, declares a statement from the Goldwyn home office. Her performance is hailed as even greater than that which she gave in "The Miracle Man." Given its initial public showing at the California theatre, January 2, "Prisoners of Love" was greeted by a record-breaking audience, including many of the most prominent men and women in California's motion picture colony, who come to see the debut of the young star at the head of her own producing company.

A dispatch from the Coast indicates that Miss Compson scored a personal triumph. Writing in the Times, Edwin Schallert said: "Miss Compson of 'Miracle Man' fame has retained every vibrant element of her charm and her presence is as enriching as the gleam of an opal, as glowing, as irresistible. The picture is a real triumph of beauty in settings and composition. Some of the views of Miss Compson are the finest portraiture. Altogether, 'Prisoners of Love' is a picture that appeals strongly."

An extract from Henry E. Dougherty's review in the Evening Express reads: "Will say here and now that Betty Compson's interpretative work in 'Prisoners of Love' is better than in 'The Miracle Man.' The sympathetic, lovable, thoroughly human work of Miss Compson cannot be denied."

May Markson wrote in the Record: "Miss Compson is superlative as Blanche Davis. The picture is a powerful and graphic exposition of the ancient truth, 'The sins of the father shall be visited upon the children;' yet told with such dramatic sincerity and beauty that even the men in the audience were compelled to stifle their emotions. Betty Compson could hardly have chosen a subject with more appeal to humanity. The picture contains unity, plausibility and suspense in exquisite proportion. It strikes home to every heart that sees it."

Another Hampton Ready

Advance Reports on "The Killer" Foretell Successful Melodrama

FROM advance reports received by Pathe, "The Killer," the Benjamin B. Hampton, which that company will release on January 30, promises to be a worthy successor to previous Hampton melodramas. "The Killer" is a Stewart Edward White story.

"The Killer" illustrated another principle rigidly adhered to by B. B. Hampton since his entrance to the field of motion picture production, it is said. His experience as an associate with another producer convinced Mr. Hampton that first of all melodrama was the one sure type of play for the screen, and with that conviction as the basis of his working policy he determined not to employ the star system. Up to his latest finished work he has stuck to his guns, for in "The Killer" he offers a melodrama with a cast which the producer asserts to be an all-star one.

The players who interpret the characters of the Stewart Edward White play are familiar through their former works on the screen and include many who have been featured and starred in successful photoplays. For the name role Mr. Hampton selected Frank Campeau. Mr. Campeau has done many heavy characterizations in picture with the Triangle Fine Arts forces and with Douglas Fairbanks.

"Doug" Breaking Records

"Mark of Zorro" Held Over for Two Days at Akron, O., Theatre

BECAUSE of the great number of Akron (Ohio) people who had not the opportunity of jamming themselves into the Allen theatre, Akron, Ohio, Manager Simons was compelled to extend the engagement of "The Mark of Zorro," the latest Fairbanks picture to be released by the United Artists, for two days. Packed houses were the rule at the Allen from the very first performance and the picture shattered all previous attendance records at the theatre, it is reported. Critics and the photoplay public were particularly loud in their praise — the people having gone away talking about the picture, and the critics did not hesitate in saying that they thought it was Fairbank's best picture.

The moving picture editor of the Lima Times said that there was "no use talking about it." "Doug" Fairbanks is surely the goods in his latest production, "The Mark of Zorro," and that hundreds of people were turned away on the first day, and those who succeeded in getting into the theatre were tremendously enthused about the production.

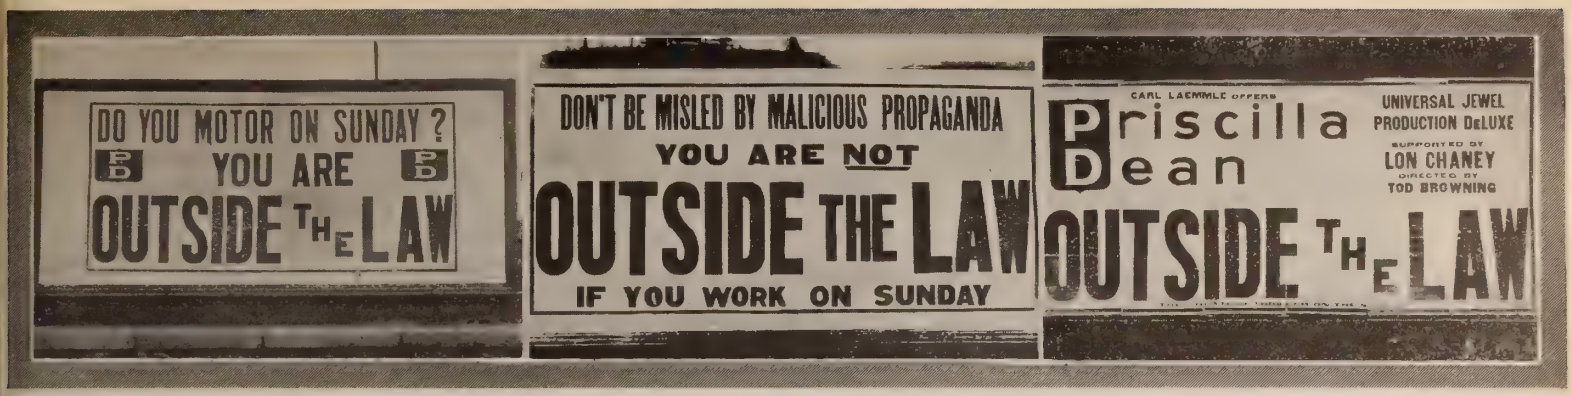
The editor of the moving picture department of the North American speaks of "Doug" Fairbank's latest picture as one of special excellence, while the critic of the Chicago Herald and Examiner states in his review that "Douglas Fairbanks always comes back with a bang, and he comes back this time with more of a bang than ever before and a much shrewder actor to boot. In the early reels of "The Mark of Zorro," where he is pretending to be an idling, spineless don — a weak-hipped lollypop who yawns and yawns in the presence of his fiery father and his disgusted fiancee, he challenges the best of the film actors, for his facial play is restrained and effective—and how he does gape; yawn doesn't express it he gapes, even when the beautiful Marguerite de la Motte, in a Spanish mantilla and sad eyes is before him, he gapes; but that is his game and to tell you why he gapes so is to take a big suspense kick out of your life. Mr. Fairbanks is irresistible in this production."

At the Majestic theatre in Springfield, Ohio, "The Mark of Zorro" did capacity business during the entire run of the picture, despite the fact that there were two rainy days. The management wired to Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists, that all their patrons were well pleased with the production and that it is the best Fairbanks production ever made.

"Time Out" to Build Sets

Elaborate Sets to Be Constructed by Bennett for "Salvation Nell"

ALL productions at the studios of Whitman Bennett, who is producing the Lionel Barrymore and other specials for Associated First National release, will be suspended for a period of the month of February, during which time, the construction of sets adequate to meet the requirements of a super-special production, "Salvation Nell" will be the only activity in the studio in Yonkers. In choosing the play written by Edgar Sheldon and used with great success as the starring vehicle of Mrs. Fiske, Whitman Bennett planned to give it most careful and artistic production for the screen.



"Salvation Nell" was produced as a play on November 23, 1908, at the Hackett theatre in New York. As it opened late in the season it enjoyed the distinction of playing twenty weeks in New York, and afterward broke all records on tour, having an uninterrupted run of eighty weeks. Charles Darnton, dramatic critic of the Evening World, gave to it the unique sentence which afterward became famous in connection with its advertising, "A divine comedy of the slums." Mrs. Fiske chose Holbrooke Blinn as leading man, and it was he who immortalized the character of "Jim." Gilda Varesi who has recently distinguished herself as author and star of "Enter Madame" portrayed a delightful Italian character in the original cast. Mrs. Fiske had previously identified herself with the characters from Ibsen, and the portrayal of Nell, was a broad departure from her usual artistic characterizations.

Pauline Stark has been selected after a search of six months, to portray the screen version of Nell. Although she is young in years she has had a great deal of screen experience. Mr. Bennett and Director Kenneth Webb were unanimous in their enthusiasm over her work after viewing several productions in which she displayed unusual talent. "Her eyes and facial expression tells a story of pathos and humanity," said Mr. Webb, "it is astounding in a girl so young and yet, it is all there, exactly what Nell should be."

Dorothy Farnum, scenarist, has completed the script. Miss Farnum's recent work in adaptations of plays includes, "The Great Adventure" and "Jim the Penman," both Whitman Bennett productions.

"The Spenders" Is Due Early in January

"The Spenders" from the well-known novel of the same name by Harry Leon Wilson, will be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation early in January. This is a Benj. B. Hampton production with an all-star cast including Claire Adams, Joseph J. Dowling, Robert McKim, Niles Welch and others.

Educational Bookings on the Increase

One of the strong points cited by Educational is that the same theatres which have been showing the two-reel Educationals are contracting for the greater portion of the single reelers, and are employing these when the length of the feature calls for a shorter fun film. Where there are two or three houses under the same ownership, Educational reports that in a greater portion of the cities its entire product, both one and two-reelers, are being booked by the same circuits and given a first showing at one of the houses in competition with the longer pictures.

Production of these pictures is well ahead of schedule, and prints of the various pictures are in all of the exchanges, so that exhibitors can see a number of them before contracting for either of the series, which alternate in weekly release. The Vanitys which are available include "Tea For Two," "Without a Wife," "His Four Fathers," "Mind Your Business" and "Ouija Did It." Among the first Gaietys are "Ain't Love Grand," "Sand Witches," "Rest in Peace" and "Blondes."

"Partners of the Tide" Prints in East

Irvin Willat has shipped to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from the West Coast the completed print on "Partners of the Tide," his second independent release. It is claimed that "Behind the Door" and "Below the Surface," two of his greatest successes of the past, have been far outdone in this new production.

Effective Stunt by Universal

Links Drive for "Outside the Law" With Blue Sunday Move

UNIVERSAL has scored again with an opportune and effective exploitation stunt. It is being used to exploit "Outside the Law," the big new underworld picture starring Priscilla Dean. It consists of an unusual and timely teaser poster campaign.

One morning, several weeks ago, a short time after the Blue Law Sunday advocates had been heralded in the press and answered by charge and countercharge, New York awoke to find a big smashing twenty-four-sheet staring from every billboard stand.

"Do You Motor on Sunday? You Are Outside the Law!" was the flaring admonition that confronted New Yorkers in letters four feet high. There were four different styles of these posters. On some the caption read: "Do You Work on Sunday?" On others: "Do You Dance on Sunday?" and "Do You Play Cards on Sunday?" On each poster was a black shield, not unlike a policeman's shield, bearing the cryptic initials "P. D." This was taken by many to stand for "Police Department."

New York was astonished. New York was shocked. New York was indignant. "These Blue Law advocates certainly have their crust!" was the wail heard on all sides. Outraged citizens wrote letters to the newspapers, denouncing the Blue Law propagandists for the posters. The Blue Law people alleged the poster campaign was launched by their enemies, to throw the Blue Law movement into disfavor.

Hardly had the Metropolitan district recovered from its first shock, when a new set of posters appeared. The old ones still remained, and in many cases the new ones appeared opposite the former ones. On the new ones was the following advice:

"Do Not Be Misled By Malicious Propaganda—
You Are Not Outside of the Law—
If You Dance on Sunday."

If New Yorkers were interested before, they were enthusiastic now. Even a dog-fight will stop traffic in the metropolis, and here was a new kind of fight—a billboard fight.

More and more attention was paid to the mysterious posters by the daily press. Pictures of the posters were reproduced and various sources attributed to them. Columnists picked up the slogan, "Outside the Law." Some took it seriously. Others treated it humorously. Vaudeville teams used it, cartoonists used it, and soon New York had made it a household phrase.

During the fifth week after the first "You Are Outside the Law" posters appeared, the teaser posters were replaced by a third stand, with the same design and the same block lettering, announcing the picture. The mysterious shield with the P D evolved into a vignette for Priscilla Dean's initials. This was followed by two more stands of the colored 24 sheets advertising the picture.

By this time, exhibitors all over the country had heard of the campaign and inquiries started coming in relative to the stunt, announces Universal. A similar poster campaign was started in Chicago, Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, and in other cities, and many exhibitors started the same campaign six weeks in advance of their play dates.

"Godless Men" for Capitol

Due at Big Theatre Week of Jan. 30; Also Booked in 39 Key Cities

GOLDWYN'S production of "Godless Men," from Ben Ames Williams' sea story of "Black Pawl," a Reginald Barker all-star production, has been booked for early showing in thirty-nine key cities and at the Capitol theatre, New York, where it will be screened the week of January 30. "Godless Men" is the production singled out by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures for first place in the four photoplays selected from current releases in its first bulletin of critique, exceptional photoplays. It has already been seen in Los Angeles where it attracted such turn-away attendance at the California theatre and aroused so much favorable comment that it was transferred to Miller's theatre for another week.

The cast which interprets this tale of human passions and virtues is considered by Goldwyn officials to be one of the greatest ever assembled for one photoplay by Goldwyn. Russell Simpson has the role of Black Pawl, James Mason that of Red Pawl, his son; Helene Chadwick is the girl, Alec B. Francis the returning missionary, Robert Kortman the tool of Red Pawl, and John Bowers the first mate. The action all takes place on board a schooner in the Pacific Ocean, and there is much beautiful photography in the picture.

"Godless Men" has already been booked at the following theatres in key cities:

Loew's Vendome theatre, Nashville, Tenn.; Republic theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.; Odeon, Savannah, Ga.; Criterion, Chattanooga, Tenn.; New Empire, Montgomery, Ala.; Avon, Utica, N. Y.; Gaiety, Springfield, Ill.; Capitol, Davenport, Ia.; Gifts, Cincinnati, Ohio; Pantheon, Toledo, Ohio; Liberty, Youngstown, Ohio; Alhambra, Canton, Ohio; Old Mill, Dallas, Texas; Empire, San Antonio, Texas; Queen, Houston, Texas; Hippodrome, Ft. Worth, Texas; Empress, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Grecian, El Paso, Texas; Gem, Little Rock, Ark.; Broadway, Muskogee, Okla.; Dixie, Galveston, Tex.; Idle Hour, Kansas City, Kans.; Majestic, Tulsa, Okla.; California, Los Angeles, Cal.; Regent, Paterson, N. J. and Strand, Albany, N. Y.

Tom Gallery Is Engaged for Viola Dana Cast

Tom Gallery has been selected by Metro to play the leading male role in Viola Dana's new special production, "Home Stuff."

WITH the new Pathe serial play announced for exhibition on release date in theatres in all parts of the country, Charles Hutchinson, serial daredevil, will make his bow to countless motion picture fans in an episode romance of stunts, thrills and excitement, when "Double Adventure" is offered on January 23rd. The film in which Hutchinson will star is a fifteen-episode play written by Jack Cunningham and produced by Robert Brunton. W. S. Van Dyke directed the picture.

"Double Adventure" is primarily a "vehicle" for the star. Its plot was contrived so as to permit the famous stunt star all the freedom possible for the performance of his daring acrobatics with motorcycles, automobiles, aeroplanes and horses.

Editorial Lauds "Edgar Series" by Tarkington

Eloquent testimony to the life-likeness, the humor, the insight and artistry of the series of two-reel comedies of American boy nature produced by Goldwyn and written by Booth Tarkington, master delineator of child types in modern American literature, is borne by the motion picture editor of the New York Times. Writing editorially on the outstanding screen developments of the year in the issue of the Times for Sunday, January 2, he says:

"The writer is inclined to regard as among the most significant works of the year the Edgar comedies from the pen of Booth Tarkington, produced under the direction of E. Mason Hopper and Mason N. Litson, with Johnny Jones as Edgar. More imaginaton has entered into the making of these comedies than may be discerned in any other production seen in 1920."

George Bunny Scoring in Capitol Comics

George Bunny, son of the famous comedian, John Bunny, is starring in the latest Capitol Comedy, "You'd Better Get It," which is being released through the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. Reports from the Goldwyn exchanges show that George Bunny is being well received. In support of the star appears Estelle Harrison.

The George Bunny series of Capitol Comedies are being directed by Mark Goldaine; and Kingsley Benedict is writing them as well as acting in them.

Roche Pens Complete Comedy in Week

Arthur Somers Roche, the latest acquisition of Metro's colony of prominent writers, set a new record by producing a complete comedy in one week. "Kissed" is the title of the story, which was written especially for May Allison, who will be seen in the production in the near future.

George Beban, in a scene from "One Man in a Million," the George Beban production distributed by Robertson-Cole

To Exploit Beban Picture

Action, Characters and Backgrounds Offer Fine Possibilities is Report

THE week following the signing of the contract between Robertson-Cole and George Beban, whereby the former undertakes the distribution of Mr. Beban's special production, "One Man in a Million," finds the work of preparing an elaborate exploitation and advertising campaign for the picture well under way, announces a statement from Robertson-Cole headquarters.

"One Man in a Million" on January 8, opened a week's engagement at the New Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., this being its national premier. Following this it will continue to play off the $100,000 in contracts which Robertson-Cole secured as part of its agreement with Mr. Beban and Sol Lesser, who was allied with Mr. Beban in making the production, declares the R.-C. statement.

Only two or three of these engagements will have been played before Robertson-Cole will present to the trade its complete campaign for putting over "One Man in a Million," and then first runs everywhere may have the picture. Bookings are now being taken by the Robertson - Cole branches in all parts of the country.

"One Man in a Million" is said to be highly adaptable to exploitation in many forms. It has several human problems mingled with its action. Its actors present such picturesque characters as a city pound master, a post-war group of Belgian waifs, a Belgian mother seeking her lost child; a combination Fagin and bootleeger, a detective who pursues his investigations along sociological angles, dozens of children in appealing roles, and scores of dogs of all sorts, not to speak of a most remarkable educated parrot.

The backgrounds of "One Man in a Million" add further to the exploitation possibilities of the picture. They include a city dog pound, and city streets wherein the dog catcher has amusing and dramatic adventures, a colorful low lunch room, a mysterious den of thievery and a secret still beneath the sidewalk, the home of the humble, big-hearted Italian, who is the picture's central figure, and other interesting scenes.

Film Tester Invented by Metro Cameraman

Jackson Rose, cameraman at the Metro studios in Hollywood, and photographer of May Allison's last three special screen productions, has perfected an apparatus whose application permits film to be printed and exposed to sunlight five minutes after exposure in the camera, declares a statement from Metro's headquarters. Mr. Rose has recorded patents on the device, and it will be used on all Metro productions.

The "cinema film tester," as the invention has been named, consists of a tiny box attached to the camera. It is so arranged that it may be used at any stage of the making of exteriors or interiors, regardless of the strength of sunlight.

All-Animal Cast for Chester Comedy

"Ladies' Pets," a Chester comedy, which is to be released through Educational exchanges early in February, is promised as one of the most unique pictures in all film history in that every important role is taken by animals, with a single exception—that of the dog-catcher.

Bebe Daniels Chosen Most Popular Star

Bebe Daniels, Realart star proved to be the most popular moving picture actress among the picture patrons in the competition recently conducted under the auspices of the Grand Rapids Herald. Bebe Daniels and Wallace Reid were chosen the most popular stars.

"Scrambled Wives" Release in January

Filming of "Scrambled Wives" the first production from the studios of Marguerite Clark, the vehicle chosen by the petite star for her return to the screen, has been completed and the finished print will be delivered to Associated First National Pictures, Inc., who will release the picture before the end of January. The cutting and titling will take somewhat longer than that of the usual production of the same length, due to a production theory held by Miss Clark.

In the cast supporting Miss Clark appear Leon P. Gendron, Ralph Bunker, Florence Martin, Virginia Lee, Alice Mann, Frank Badgley, America Cheddister, John Mayer, John Washburn, T. A. Braidon, Harry Fisher, Wesley Jenkins, Ada Neville and Emma Wilcox, Edwin H. Griffith, assisted by A. F. Bernadac, did the directing, and William McCoy and Ray June the photography.

Film Shows How New York Gets Its Food

A motion-picture produced by the Community Productions, Inc., under the auspices of the State Division of Food and Markets, shows how New York City gets its food supply. The views show the transportation of food-stuffs from the New Jersey freight yards to the New York markets in lower Manhattan. The transfer of the food-stuffs through the jobbing sections to the retail store and finally to the family's breakfast table is interestingly visualized. A portion of the production was scheduled for showing at the Rialto, New York, for the week of December 19th. Prints will be loaned without cost to theatres, schools and civic organizations, announces the Division of Food and Markets.

Charles Ray's Picture Released Feb. 7th

A smashing surprise is promised the public when Charles Ray's fourth independently produced picture, an adaptation of James Whitcomb Riley's poem, "The Old Swimmin' Hole," is released by First National February 7. According to Arthur S. Kane, who presents the star, the particular feature that is destined to make exhibitors and fans alike to stop, look and—look again, is something absolutely unique in film production.

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the record of having placed or played all the first runs in the United States on "Kismet," starring Otis Skinner, the super-special production which opened at the Strand theatre, New York City, in the middle of November. This means that the entire country has been sold first run in about six weeks.

Quite a number of first run houses have played "Kismet." Many more will do so in the weeks just ahead. Then the picture will sweep into the second runs. Upper Broadway, New York City, was "Kismet" from end to end last Sunday, as half a dozen of the great houses in the upper hotel and residential district played it day and date.

An attractive window display has been arranged between Robertson-Cole, distributors of "Kismet," and Will Rossiter, the Chicago music publisher, on Rossiter's song called "Kismet."

"Down Home" Breaks House's Records

From Jack Griswold of the Savoy theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., comes the following wire concerning "Down Home," which he played the entire week of January 2:

"'Down Home' broke all house records yesterday. Everybody conceded it to be the best picture ever shown in Syracuse. Even Monday matinee very big. Congratulations."

(Signed) "JACK GRISWOLD."

Elinor Glyn Guest of Honor at Dinner

Elinor Glyn, who is writing original screen stories for Parmount at the Hollywood studio, went last week to San Francisco where she addressed the University Fine Art Society at a gathering attended by social and literary leaders of the Bay City. She was accorded a hearty reception and was guest of honor at a noteworthy dinner party. The topic of her address was "Keeping the Aim in View."

New Christie Finished for Educational

"Man Against Woman" is the expressive title of a two-reel comedy which is just being completed by Christie for release through Educational Exchanges. Dorothy Devore and Neal Burns have the leading parts, while in the cast are Gene Corey, Bessie Delitch, H. Harry Edwards and a group of Christie beauties.

Hugo Ballin Completes "East Lynne"

Huga Ballin has completed "East Lynne," his second independent production for Hodkinson release. This picture has been in course of construction at the Ballin studio for some time past, and has just left the director's hands.

High Mark for News Weeklies

4,000 Houses Set as Mark for Opening Week of Jan. 30

FOUR thousand theatres showing the first release of the super-Kinograms is the mark set this week by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., following the announcement that with the week of January 30 it is to take over this bi-weekly news service which will absorb Gaumont News and one month later will include a service being handled by a third organization.

Release of Kinograms will mark the completion of Educational's plans to afford exhibitors everywhere full service of everything for their program with the single exception of the feature. It marks the fullest accomplishment of the organization's plans, including the establishment of exchanges through the United States and Canada in less than eight months' time.

Stress is being placed on the fact that the absorption of these three news pictorial is not simply a combination of three different services, but the acquistion of their full resources and their full possibilities. Each of the three will continue its forces in the field and the merged editorial departments will select from everywhere available the cream of the material. These pictures will be released twice weekly under the name of Kinograms.

More than fifty cameramen, placed in the key centers of the world, will be retained and in addition to this numerous special expeditions will be sent out to cover world events. A number of contracts have already been made which will assure exclusive news pictures of important happenings for Kinograms, and the plan announced anticipates considerable expenditures for events of this sort which can be anticipated. In addition each camera post is given liberal advance funds so that advantage can be taken of every sudden happening without the delay incident to communication with the home office and awaiting authorization.

Service on Kinograms will be one of the points emphasized in Educational. Since the company has devoted its entire attention to one and two-reel subjects the various branch managers have been instructed to call attention of exhibitors to the fact that its own record guarantees that each exchange will devote the same attention to the handling of the single news reel as it does with every comedy, scenic and special that it handles. Each exchangeman is instructed to emphasize this specialization in short subjects as an additional guarantee that the exhibitor will get the very news weekly that he has contracted for and on time.

"We are putting our whole guarantee behind Kinograms," commented E. W. Hammons, president of Education. "We take the utmost pride in this service because it now enables us to offer the exhibitor everything for his program fifty-two weeks in the year with the exception of the feature, a field which we have not and will never enter. We are confident that the super Kinograms will prove the greatest news weekly that has ever been put on the market, but in offering these pictures we are not content with merely promises of superior quality, but stress the point of superior service.

"From the beginning of this organization even on its rather conservative basis, we have made the point of requiring quality as the basis of our every release. Our success has been largely based on that point, so we feel confident that exhibitors generally will recognize that we have taken over these three combined news services under the name of Kinograms because we are confident that they will maintain our standards.

"Since we added one and two-reel comedies and the specials to our service, we have realized that we needed one link to complete our chain—a news service that would assure the exhibitor the very cream of the world's happenings and the features of its daily life. During the past few months we have declined a number of offers from various organizations to produce such news reels. We were not content with any one that was being produced. We wanted something more than that. But when we were given the opportunity to acquire the full product of Kinograms, the Gaumont News Weekly and the third service which we will soon announce, and to combine the three producing staffs with all of their possibilities into a single semi-weekly release, we felt that the opportunity had come."

"Wing Toy" Has Fine Settings

Stars Shirley Mason; "Flame of Youth" Going Strong

"WING TOY," which will be released the latter part of this month by Fox Film Corporation, will, according to advices from officials of that company, be one of the most noteworthy productions of the entire Fox output for the year. The settings are particularly impressive, it is stated, and their construction occupied several weeks prior to the filming of the picture.

One of the most sensational interiors ever used in a picture, it is said, is a big Chinese gambling room. This elaborate set, the decorative scheme of which carries out the motif of the Chinese woodcarver, with plenty of dragons and other grotesque figures forming the background for some of the most thrilling scenes of the story. The Chinese gambling paraphernalia used in this scene is the real thing, and represents the total hauls of several picturesque raids in Chinatown, where the instruments of chance fell into alien hands.

Another particularly striking set, declares William Fox, is a Chinese curio store, stocked with Oriental bric-a-brac and oddities.

A set representing the interior of a wealthy Chinese gambler's home represents a great amount of labor and detail in its manufacture; the woodwork being painted to get the effect of cherry wood and being richly stenciled. Above the wainscote are panels of rich Chinese fretwork, gold and vermillion, and set on a black background. The set contains twenty-five colored panels. This set alone took two weeks to build and paint, according to the statement from Fox headquarters.

A Chinese altar used in this set is the same from which Buddha glares fiercely at the Los Angeles Chinese who come to worship, as it was borrowed from the local joss house and promptly returned after the filming, declares the statement from the Fox home office. The exteriors of the picture were taken in Los Angeles' Chinatown.

The story of "Wing Toy," which was written by Pearl Doles Bell, is said to furnish Shirley Mason with the most attractive role of her career.

Despite the fact that "Wing Toy," the new Shirley Mason picture, is already receiving some very lively booking in advance of release, officials of the Fox company state that "Flame of Youth," Miss Mason's latest release, is holding on with such tenacity that it promises to be many months before the demand for this subject shows any marked abatement.

The Fox officials are in receipt of the following communication from John J. Walker, manager of the Barcli theatre, Schenectady, N. Y.:

"Gentlemen—You are to be commended for the type of picture of 'Flame of Youth,' with Shirley Mason. I have had more pleasing comments on it than any other picture I have used in a long time. It goes to show that it is the clean, wholesome thing that pay, after all. My business increased each day for three days with it, and it was very plain to see that it was the pleasant taste it left that did the advertising."

Fox News Covers Sailing of Fleet

When the Atlantic Fleet steamed out of Hampton Roads last week bound for Cuba and later for the Pacific via the Panama Canal, two thousand reels of films made up part of the cargo, announces a statement from the Fox Films Corporation. Every release of the Fox organization was included in the film supply aboard the exchange ship Prometheus, according to the statement. These pictures are to be distributed to the various vessels for showing to the crews during the long trip to the Pacific.

Six scenes from "The Oath," the R. A. Walsh production, one of the "Big Five" to be distributed by First National

Chaplin Release Is Due Jan. 23

"THE KID," Charlie Chaplin's six-reeler, will be released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., on January 23. This will be the second release of the first group of Big Five productions to be distributed by First National this year, "Passion," starring Pola Nigri being the first, with "The Oath," an R. A. Walsh production, "Sowing the Wind," with Anita Stewart, and Allen Holubar's "Man, Woman, Marriage," starring Dorothy Phillips yet to come.

"The Kid" is the comedian's initial adventure into the field of feature comedy and is said to be a revelation in Chaplin humor. It is the projection of a character such as Charlie has made famous into an intense, gripping, heart interest with a genuine plot. The picture proceeds from the start to the finish in the unraveling of the story and the action is fast and snappy, according to reports, right up to the climax.

The comedy is said to excel anything that Chaplin has ever done, and a great part of the effect is gained through the fact that none of the situations are forced to give the comedian opportunity. The logical efforts of the comedian to handle the situations into which he is carried as the story develops scintilates with natural humor.

A synopsis of the story indicates that the production is as unusual as First National found it to be when it was included in the first group of Big Fives. The play had but five characters named as The Man, The Woman, The Kid, The Tramp and The Policeman. Charlie Chaplin, dinky mustache, half sized cane, full-grown trousers, over-sized shoes and everything is the Tramp. He finds an abandoned baby against an ash can in an alley and after several atempts to make someone else take charge of it takes it to his own garret room. When the Kid has reached the age of six they have a full-fledgeed, efficient business organization running—the Kid makes a business of breaking windows, when Charles, as an itinerant glazier, is nearby to make the necessary repairs.

The contrast to make the humor more joyous is furnihsed by the pathos of the mother's search for the Kid. Charlie and the Kid become beneficiaries of her kindness with no suspicion of the actual relationship until one day when the authorities try to separate the Kid and Charlie.

The story was written by Chaplin himself, and the production of it was directed by the comedian. Jackie Coogan, hailed as a genuine discovery of juvenile acting ability plays the part of the Kid. Edna Purviance, well known for her clever work in previous Chaplin productions, has the part of the Woman; Tom Wilson, the Policeman, and Carl Miller, the Man.

The production is in six reels and will be released as a super-special.

"The Spenders" Pleases Loew Audiences

A statement from the headquarters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation declares that the enthusiasm displayed by the audiences of Marcus Loew's New York theatre during the recent showing of "The Spenders" at that theatre "was greater than that which had been accorded any other comedy-drama that ever played there."

Many Reviewers Praise "Little 'Fraid Lady"

Trade paper reviewers of many publications covering the motion picture field are at one in declaring "The Little 'Fraid Lady" in which Mae Marsh returns to the screen to be a production entirely worthy of the event. This picture is based on Marjorie Benton Cooke's "The Girl Who Lived In the Woods" and was directed by John G. Adolfi. It is released as a Robertson-Cole super-special.

In writing their criticisms of "The Little 'Fraid Lady" the reviewers invariably gave full credit to the past performances of Miss Marsh, and acknowledged the enormity of the following which she won by them in all parts of the world. Incidentally they hailed Miss Marsh's return to the screen as an event of more than passing note.

"Film-Osophy" Meeting with Success

Luke McLuke's "Film-Osophy," being served weekly by the Pioneer Film Corporation, is meeting with splendid success and is gaining headway each week in every part of the country, according to a statement from Pioneer.

"Film-Osophy" is made up of a number of "gags" written by the famous column conductor, Luke McLuke, whose quips appear in over 250 newspapers throughout the country.

Stahl to Produce for Mayer on Coast

After a three months' visit to New York, John M. Stahl, director, has returned to Los Angeles to resume production activities under the Louis B. Mayer banner. Mr. Stahl's pictures will hereafter be known as John M. Stahl Productions. They will be famous stories filmed on an elaborate scale, and will have all-star casts.

Mr. Stahl's first Louis B. Mayer-Associated First National attraction, "The Woman in His House," has created much interest in film circles in the East. Arrangements are now being made to put the picture in one of the big Broadway theatres for an extended run.

While in New York Mr. Stahl cut "Sowing the Wind," his latest picture for Louis B. Mayer. It stars Anita Stewart, and, according to the reviews of the Eastern critics, it promises to be one of the big dramatic offerings of 1921. Preparations are now under way for Mr. Stahl to begin work on the first of his signed productions that will be released by Mr. Mayer through Associated First National.

Johnny Hines Extends Tour upon Demand

So successful has been the personal appearance of Johnny Hines, star in Torchy comedies, released through Educational, in several nearby cities, the leading exhibitors in Cincinnati, Cleveland and Pittsburgh have sent urgent requests that the celebrated portrayer of Sewell Ford's red-headed office boy be sent to those cities.

Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc., has made the arrangements for these visits through President E. W. Hammons of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. The schedule as arranged provides for Cincinnati the week of January 16th, Cleveland the week of January 23rd, and then Pittsburgh the week of January 30th.

This trip is made possible only because production of Torchy comedies is well ahead of schedule.

Elinor Fair Opposite Earle Williams

Elinor Fair has been engaged to appear as leading woman for Earle Williams in his next Vitagraph production, "Loot of the Night," by Frederick J. Jackson. She has just returned to Los Angeles after finishing a picture in New York as leading woman for Eugene O'Brien. David Smith will direct the star in his production.

Hodkinson Issues Statement

"Spoils System" vs. "Merit System" His Subject

UNDER the caption of "The Spoils System in Pictures," W. W. Hodkinson, president of the W. W. Hodkinson Pictures Corporation, discusses the reports, finding frequent place in the press of late, to the effect that a lessening of production and a general incisive retrenchment are the predominant features of the prevailing situation in the motion picture industry. Says Mr. Hodkinson:

"Too many of us are trying to repress or defy the natural laws of growth, too many of us are seeking to escape the operation of inescapable laws. Here are the causes of all the 'howling and gnashing of teeth.' There are too many producer-distributor concerns in this industry built on the theory that they are capable single handed of supplying the theatres of the entire world with all the product they may need. Here begins one of the most fatal of all the errors now afflicting the industry. The producer be that their error arises merely from over-weening ambition, though it is hard to resist the belief that greed enters into the situation. Now when we have a definite number of producers, all of them releasing on a definite and fixed schedule, and all of them geared on the belief that they are the best judges of the merits of their own product, there must be an end to all sound and healthy development. One unfailing effect is the instant depreciation of quality. This depreciation will progress steadily until we reach the point where the public, ordinarily the most patient animal in God's great menagerie rebels and there ensues great distress and confusion ending in disaster for those who have set natural laws at defiance.

"Growth in this industry is possible only through the conscientious application of the selective principle. Talent must have free play—ability and genius must be made sure of their reward. How can this be done under a system which seeks to perpetuate arbitrary values and which has no use for talent or ability or genius except as these elements may fit into the rigid and unnatural scheme of producer-controlled organizations.

"I believe that we have reached the point when the public is beginning to rebel. Constructive, conscientious and competent criticism places an arbitrary value upon his product. The fact is that no producer and no group of producers is capable of determining in advance of a public verdict the honest and genuine value of any production. I do not necessarily impugn the good faith of these producers. It may has been a sore need in this industry. If we had had it in sufficient volume we might now now be confronted with the wrath of the public. The subject is tempting, but its further pursuit might lead me too far afield. The definite practical thing which concerns me and ought to concern every constructive and independent force within the industry is the result of this unfavorable verdict of the public on the man who owns the motion picture theatre.

"We are entering on the final stage of the battle between the merit system and the spoils system. The spoils system is the fated method of the producer-controlled organization, the system which lives by despoiling both the exhibitor and the public and which will become extinct within a twelve-month or less. It will be succeeded by the merit system which automatically keeps down any pictures with a taint of inferiority; the system which automatically attracts and encourages talent in the producing field; the system which relying on the play of natural forces regulated by immutable laws will always be able to serve cream instead of skimmed milk."

Pathe Films Night Scenes

New Year's Eve Celebration on B'way Highlight of Pathe News

ONE of the most picturesque features of New York's celebration of the entrance of the New Year was the enthusiasm displayed by vast street crowds in the methods employed by the Pathe News organization in depicting its highlights for issue No. 2. The camera records of these methods form an important part of the reel, and legitimately, for they were hailed by multitudes all along the Great White Way as adding an unique effect to the midnight spectacle. For the first time, Pathe claims, in the history of the News Screen, New York night life upon a great occasion was successfully filmed from a dozen different points of view.

Editor Emanuel Cohen and his staff had prepared for the occasion, in the most thorough and farsighted manner. For purposes of photography at night, powerful illumination of course was necessary, and this is accomplished only by means of heavy and cumbersome apparatus. No single street installation would meet the opportunities of a celebration covering so large an area of the city, so three huge motor trucks were employed. On one of these the illuminating apparatus—including powerful sunlight arc lamps—was placed, while the others carried the cameras with their operators and assistants.

Wherever the Pathe News studio on wheels appeared people gathered and crowds thickened as though by magic. Police officials with whom arrangements for right of way had been made estimated that more than a million persons struggled goodnaturedly to get within focus of the cameras.

Wm. Farnum Wins Popularity Competition

In a competition just concluded under the auspices of the Terre Haute Tribune, and conducted in conjunction with the Liberty theatre of that city, William Farnum polled a lead of 3,546 over his nearest competitor, announces William Fox.

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"'Black Beauty' characterized by thrills and extravagant production."

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd."

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized."

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its 'human' theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."

From the New York Sunday Telegraph Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

"The picture is just about perfect in its details."

"The picture is a high tribute to the artistic ability and the patience of its director, David Smith."

"As for 'Black Beauty' himself, Man O' War could not have played the role with more finesse."

Tribute Paid "Mark of Zorro"

Board of Review Puts Picture in Distinguished Class

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF REVIEWS OF MOTION PICTURES, in its latest issue of their official publication, Exceptional Photoplays, include as one of the three most distinguished productions ever given the public, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro," which was recently released by the United Artists Corporation, and which has been smashing box office records all over the country.

The purpose of the publication is to bring to the notice of the public —the exhibitors and all people concerned—those motion pictures which are considered to be particularly fine as photo-dramatic productions, and which are distinctive for entertainment quality.

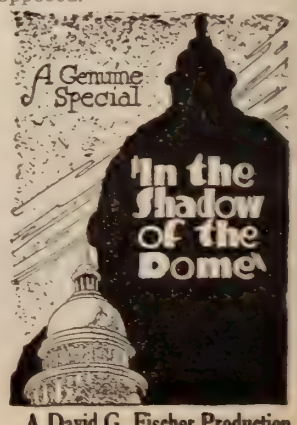
In their review of the production they speak of "The Mark of Zorro" in the following manner:

"Escape and disguise have been favorite plot devices ever since the Elizabethan beginners of dramaturgic art. With the development of the cinema plot quite naturally these traditions were translated to the screen, and we find them landing mystery, suspense, romance and clever comedy to 'The Mark of Zorro,' a photodrama in which the daring escapes of the bandit Zorro, savior of Dumas, while the marvelous swordmanship of the hero would accredit Cyrano de Bergerac.

"Southern California of nearly a century ago, when it was still a part of the Mexican State, forms the background for the exploits of the black masked Zorro, who endeavors to counteract the injustice and oppression of a corrupt government by championing the weak and wronged. Wanted, dead or alive, with a price upon his head, he will suddenly appear in the midst of a group of government officials, and, a marvelous swordsman will rescue the miserable recreant of the moment, disappearing again as mysteriously as he came, leaving his mark—a bloody 'Z'—upon the person responsible for the injustice. Who he is, whence came, no one knows. Nor would they believe it if they were told that at home the bold Zorro is none other than the weak, bloodless, almost imbecilic Don Diego Vega, son of a prominent Cabaleros. He finds courtship of the beautiful Senorita Lolita Pulido too fatiguing, in spite of the displeasure of his father who forces him to pay her his addresses. So while Lolita scorns Don Diego's indifferent attentions, she is carried away by the fire and romatic zeal of Zorro, who throws her a rose, though the troopers are almost upon him, or kisses her while he holds his rival at the point of his sword. He rescues the Pulido family from prison, punishes Captain Ramon, who is pursuing Lolita, rounds up the Cabaleros to the cause of 'Justice for All,' and forces Alvarado, the corrupt Governor, to abdicate. All this Zorro accomplishes before his identity is disclosed.

"The Photoplay is unique in type. It is difficult to place it in a definite category. Unquestionably it is comedy drama. Yet there are occasional hasty flights into melodrama, and again, as in the flagellation of the wronged Franciscan priest, there is a stroke of pathos.

"It is not merely the exploitation of the personality of Mr. Fairbanks. It is rather a play, which requires skilful acting since dual role demands the delineation of two types of character diametrically opposed."



Fine Outlook for Lloyd for New Year

Harold Lloyd, whose rise in the favor of motion-picture fans, stands out as one of the features of the film history of 1920, is giving evidences of winning continued popularity during the new year, if the newspaper reviews and exhibitors' comment on his latest comedy release, "Number, Please?" are to be taken as criteria. During its run at the Capitol and the Strand, New York, the New York dailies were liberal in their praise of the two-reeler. Says the Morning World:

"Quite the funniest cinema along Broadway this week is Harold Lloyd's, 'Number, Please.' It is shown at the Capitol. This young man with the horn-rimmed spectacles is a comparatively young comedian of the films and one of the most popular of them all at this time. Situation after situation, each carrying with it a scream of laughter, comes piling out in 'Number, Please?' Charley Chaplin, in his best days, has not appeared in a funnier play."

Roy Blair, manager of Mister Smith's theatre, Indianapolis, writes the Pathe headquarters that his business was vastly improved in a short space of time by the introduction of a Harold Lloyd Comedy into his program, and concludes Mr. Blair:

"Harold Lloyd has proven to me that he has a bigger drawing power than the feature productions that I am running or have run."

News From Our Correspondents

ST. LOUIS

The Skouras Brothers Enterprises entertained 170 of their male employes with a midnight banquet at the Hotel Jefferson the night of January 3. This is the first of a series of annual affairs to be given the members of the organization, including everyone from president to doormen. A specially arranged program by leading musicians of the city and a variety of cabaret entertainers featured the festivity. Various prominent citizens of St. Louis made short addresses commending the wonderful achievements of the three brothers who in less than six years rose from the ranks of bus boys in the very hotel in which the affair was held to the heads of one of the city's largest and most prominent motion picture enterprises. As an unusual stunt Publicity Manager Baker engaged the services of a newspaper cartoonist to draw pictures of the speakers while making their addresses.

Manager William Goldman, manager of the Missouri Famous Players Corporation, announced that Wallace Reid in "The Charm School" coupled with a Chaplin revival, "Easy Street," broke all records for attendance during the past week.

The New Grand Central drew capacity crowds during the entire week of the run of Otis Skinner's "Kismet."

A special showing of "Midsummer Madness" for newspaper and trade publication men was held at the Statler Hotel Monday night. A banquet was held by the scribes following which the feature was presented. "Midsummer Madness" will run during the entire of next week at the Missouri, Delmonte and Criterion theatres.

The Missouri Theatre Owners will convene at the Statler Hotel in St. Louis January 20, 21 and 22. The subject of censorship will be the most discussed. A formal ball, preceded by a banquet, will be held on the night of the 22nd., at which the association will entertain all persons in the city who are connected with the film industry.

St. Louis primary and high schools were recently equipped with motion picture projectors as the beginning of a movement to give weekly shows to the students not only of strictly educational features, but of presentations of the higher order.

SAN DIEGO

Erle E. Doherty, for several years associated as auditor, with the Broadway Amusement Company, owning the Bush theatres, has taken the position of manager for the James B. Mason theatres—the California and the Dream.

V. Russo, who recently secured the interests of Mrs. Anna B. McVey in the Casino theatre, has had installed a very elaborate illuminated front and sign, incorporating more than a thousand small bulbs of different colors. The front lights are arranged in the form of two great sun-bursts.

At the Plaza theatre a change has been made in the day of starting the new weekly program from Sunday to Saturday. "Shore Acres," one of the recent features at the Plaza, was shown to big houses for a week. "Buster" Keaton in "The Scarecrow," shared the honors of the seven days' run.

After being a long time dark, the Isis theatre was again opened for a two weeks' showing of "Way Down East," at prices ranging from 50 cents to $2.00. The film production was presented under the direction of Dodge & Hayward, lesees of the Isis, who also operate the Spreckels Hippodrome, showing vaudeville and occasional road shows.

The Kinema, the new motion picture theatre in Escondido, this county, was formally opened on the evening of December 23, the initial picture being "The Mark of Zorro," featuring Douglas Fairbanks. The Kinema occupies a building 50 by 140 feet, constructed of reinforced concrete. The lobby is 11 by 16 and the foyer 16 by 20 feet. The proscenium arch has a width of 28 feet and a height of 16 feet. There is a balcony 30 by 50 feet. Indirect lighting is used for the auditorium. The building is owned by A. H. Nelson and the architect was Walter P. Williams. The Kinema has a seating capacity of 1,000, and on the opening night was filled.

Hobart Bosworth and Mrs. Cecile Kibre Percival came down from Los Angeles and were married here on December 23 by Justice of the Peace Lacy D. Jennings. The event was a surprise to the groom's many friends in the motion picture circles.

CANADA

Changes in policy have been made by two of Ottawa's moving picture theatres to meet new conditions. One change, adopted by Manager MacDonald for the Family theatre, involved the extension of the programme to incorporate musical features and an increase in admission prices. This became effective on Monday, January 3, with an added attraction of a tabloid musical offering headed by Joe Carr, a former favorite of the Canadian capital. Prices were raised five cents, the new evening scale being 20 cents and 30 cents. The film feature for the occasion was Pathe's "Help Wanted, Male."

Manager Harry Pomeroy of the Strand theatre, Ottawa, also instituted a new plan at the Christmas season which consisted of the elimination of the "supper show" so that four performances would be held daily, two in the afternoon and two at night. Prices remained unchanged at the Strand.

The Fox Film Corporation has sued Mayor Moreau of Gatineau Point, Quebec, for $720 to cover the alleged cost of moving pictures which were destroyed by fire when the one and only theatre in the town was wiped out by flames a few weeks ago. Mayor Moreau was the owner and proprietor of the theatre which had the singular distinction of being probably the only theatre in Canada the patrons of which were not required to pay an amusement tax either directly or indirectly. Incidentally the big day for the mayor's show each week was Sunday.

The Fox Film Company demanded payment for the films lost in the disastrous blaze but a dispute arose over the value of the pictures, and the court action resulted.

A burglar with a leaning toward destructiveness secured entry into the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, a few nights ago and caused considerable damage to box office and other fixtures without obtaining one cent in cash as a reward for his work. The crook broke up a costly coin-changing machine, smashed the ticket chopper and wreaked other damage. The theatre is owned by Harry Brouse, one of the direct franchise-holders of the First National.

Following the abolishment of the Canadian luxury tax on practically all forms of merchandise by the Federal Department of Finance through an Order-in-Council, a number of exhibitors in the Dominion encountered difficulty because numerous patrons at theatres refused to pay the amusement tax on theatre tickets. It was believed by these people that the amusement tax had been removed along with the Federal luxury tax until it was pointed out that the theatre ticket levy was imposed by the Province or, in the case of Quebec, by the municipalities and not by the Canadian government.

The staff of the head office and of the Montreal branch of the Specialty Film Imported, Limited, Canadian distributors of Pathe and other releases, celebrated the occupation of the firm's new offices in the Albee building, the brand new moving picture exchange structure in Montreal, on December 24, by presenting L. E. Ouimet, president of the company, with a set of handsome office furniture and furnishings in mahogany. All employes of the company from coast to coast contributed for the handsome gift which was also intended to commemorate the fifteenth anniversary of Mr. Ouimet's entry into the moving picture business in Canada.

All employes of the several Allen theatres in Winnipeg, Manitoba, with their families, enjoyed a Christmas party in Manitoba Hall on Sunday evening, December 26. Presents were distributed from a large Christmas tree.

An outstanding event in the moving picture sphere in Toronto, Ontario, was the great banquet in the Walker House, Toronto, on Wednesday evening, December 29, under the auspices of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation with its subsidiary company, the Eastern Theatres, Ltd. The dinner brought together representatives from every department of the moving picture business.

The guest of the evening was Theda Bara. Mr. H. M. Thomas, formerly of Omaha, Neb., general manager of the Eastern Theatres, Ltd., was the toastmaster.

An outline of all attractions to be presented at the Imperial theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, for the first four months of 1921 has been announced by Mr. Harry Brouse, owner of the theatre, in a newspaper advertisement. The schedule of bookings listed comprises the chief attractions which will be shown during the seventeen weeks, with programs being changed weekly except in one instance when a special feature has been booked for two weeks.

A brand new Board of Moving Picture Censors for Ontario was established and became operative with the start of the New Year as a result of the decision of Hon. Peter Smith, Provincial Treasurer, to reorganize the film censorship branch of the Provincial Government.

A fresh outbreak in the battle over the subject of Sunday shows in Sherbrooke, Quebec, is expected as a result of the decision of several of the local moving picture theatres to resume the holding of Sunday performances. It appears that all but one of the citizens of Sherbrooke are heartily in favor of Sunday presentations in the local theatres. It has been claimed that the "objector" is a representative of the Lord's Day Alliance which is an organization whose apparent purpose is to limit the liberties of the people in Canada.

In reply to various rumors regarding the so-called "war tax" on theatre tickets in Manitoba, Hon. Edward Brown, Provincial Treasurer, has announced that there is no intention on the part of the Province of Manitoba to remove the ticket tax. A rumor that the tax would be abolished spread after the Dominion Government had discontinued the luxury tax on many articles of merchandise.

PROVIDENCE

"Way Down East" is the first moving picture to have ever been shown in this city more than two weeks. It began its third week on January 3, and it is the intention of the management of the house to carry it at least four weeks. The picture has run, now, ahead of what it was expected it would do. Two performances are given daily, and every seat has been sold thus far.

Charles I. Luther, for 27 years financial secretary of the Theatrical Mechanics' Association, has just been installed president of the association. Lieut. Richard H. Gamble, the amusement censor in this city, was made a life member of the organization at the annual installation.

Bert Lytell, the Metro star, will during the week of January 10 appear in person at the Rialto and Emery theatres. Manager William J. Mahoney, of the former, who succeeded in getting Lytell to come here has arranged to have him meet the governor and mayor and will entertain him royally during the short time he is here in the city.

SPOKANE

O. D. Woodward of the Woodward Theatre Company has announced the organization of a company in Spokane for the production of motion pictures, the operation of a chain of theatres and the direction of theatrical companies. The new company will be known as the Woodward Enterprises, Inc.

The Enwood Motion Picture Company of Denver, an operating concern controlled by Mr. Woodward, and the Orecal Film Company of Portland, of which Mr. Woodward is half owner, will be merged with the new Spokane concern. The object of this new company is to build and operate theatres, both moving picture and legitimate, Mr. Woodward said.

Active motion picture production work will start at the studios of the Playter Film Company in Minnehaha early in January, according to Wellington Playter, director general of the company. The studios were formerly operated by the Washington Motion Picture Company. All indebtedness of the company has been wiped out ,and Mr. Playter has secured financial support of several successful motion picture investors, he stated.

Assistant Manager Walter Fenney of the Casino has just announced five new special pictures to be shown early in the new year. "Small Town Idol" is a Mack Sennett six-reel comedy which includes his foremost stars such as Ben Turpin and Marie Prevost. Maurice Tourneur's "Last of the Mohicans" will follow. Next will be a Ralph Ince production, "Lying Lips," with House Peters. Florence Vidor and Hobart Bosworth will play in "A Thousand to One."

CLEVELAND

The Ohio exchange for Educational Films, under the management of Harry Skirboll, is cashing in big on titles of pictures. Last week Mr. Skirboll said that almost every exhibit in the territory is featuring the Educational comedy, "Dining Room, Kitchen and Sink," in connection with the Metro feature, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

Joseph Skirboll, the big chief of Associated First National Exchange in Pittsburgh, spent the holiday season in Cleveland with his sisters and brothers.

Johnny Hines, the man who made Torchy comedies famous, will spend about two weeks in and around Cleveland during January, making personal appearance at the theatres.

Christmas business was good this year in "movieland." All the exhibitors say that they have equalled the best years they have ever had, and in many instances, the report has come through that they have bettered former years. This is not only local, but includes the entire Northern Ohio territory.

One of the big features of the Christmas programs was the entire absence of any special holiday attractions. All of the theatres booked in good productions, and relied on them alone to draw the crowds. And they did. Several of the first run neighborhood houses added a singing number to the regular program. Others had a special "kiddie" matinee and gave away peanuts, popcorn and candy. The Strand and Metropolitan theatres gave a morning matinee of "Dinty," First National picture, starring Wesley Barry, on Tuesday morning as a Christmas present to the Cleveland newsboys.

ATLANTA

Announcement was made Saturday that Ralph De Bruler has been made manager of the Howard theatre, which will, in the future, be operated independently of the other Southern Enterprise theatres in Atlanta.

According to the announcement, Frank Hammond, former Atlanta publicity agent for the Southern Enterprises, will become general manager of the Rialto, Forsyth, Strand and Vaudette theatres, under N. W. Remond, state supervisor for the corporation. Appointments of managers of the various theatres are annuonced as follows: Rialto, De Sales Harrison; Forsyth, Harold Kestler; Strand, P. R. Whaley; Vaudette, Jack Kaliska.

The Southern Enterprises formerly managed the Rialto, Forsyth, Strand and Vaudette theatres under one head, with Ralph De Bruler as general manager. Later, when the Howard theatre was added to the four houses under the corporation, it was decided to administer the business of the Howard separately, due to the ambitious program scheduled for this theatre.

Mr. De Bruler's long experience and ability won him the assignment of having so'e charge of this theatre.

DETROIT

Standard Film Service takes over the distribution of the Ford Educational weekly on January 9.

Hal Smith, who has been with Special Pictures Corporation, is now manager of the Grand Victory theatre on Grand River avenue. Mr. Smith has been manager of the Ferry Field, Empire and Drury Lane theatres and is a showman of wide experience.

The new Delft theatre, in Marquette, opened Christmas Day.

A state campaign against Blue Sunday is being waged by the Michigan Exhibitors Association.

Royal A. Baker, police censor, has declared war on crime serials. He has banned "Fantomas" in Detroit, and the showing at the first run, Fox's Washington theatre, was cancelled.

INDIANAPOLIS

A new field for the activities of film and projection machine salesmen is being opened up in Indiana. It is in farming communities, far disatnt from towns where motion picture shows are located. The farmers, in several spots in Indiana are banding together to buy projection machines and rent films for exhibitions to be given in their churche and school houses. The farmers are particularly interested in educational film along agricultural and travel lines.

The latest movement of this characte is in Warren township, Clinton County where the farmer members of thre churches are getting together on thi proposition.

The new Capitol at Clinton, Ind., wa opened Dec. 24 to good business.. Th house runs feature pictures and vaude ville.

The Indiana state legislature opens th week of Jan. 3, and the battle for legal ized Sunday motion-picture shows is on

PORTLAND, ORE.

Miss Virginia Norden, representing Louis B. Mayer, prominent Los Angele producer and motion picture exhibitor spent several days in Portland. She wa the guest of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Jenser who entertained her with a highway trip as well as with other holiday festivities.

Miss Norden has been given the direct handling of the latest picture made by Mildred Harris, "A Woman in His House." While in Portland the picture was viewed by each of the manager's six first run houses.

Business and advertising interests of "Screenland," the official house organ, distributed in the Liberty, Columbia, Majestic, Peoples and Star theatres, has been sold by Jensen and Von Herberg to David H. Rosenburg of Portland.

Mr Rosenburg owns extensive orchard tracts in Oregon and will continue to devote his major interest to them. He will be represented on Screenland by F. E. March, a local attorney. William Lofland who conducts a printing establishment in this city, has directed Screenland advertising up to the present time.

The present circulation of Screenland, which is 16 pages in size, in 15,000 weekly.

From Wid's Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"'Black Beauty' characterized by thrills and extravagant production."

"The story of 'Black Beauty' is so famous in every part of the country that the title alone will be sufficient to draw a crowd."

"It is a clean, wholesome picture, a fact which you can make an especial appeal to women and children. The book is so well known that there will naturally be curiosity to see it visualized."

"The success of the picture with most audiences is going to depend on its 'human' theme, for the story of the horse holds interest only in those scenes involving fast action. Among the latter are some very good shots of a fox hunt, and a thrilling horse race at the finish which has been admirably done and will be apt to raise them off their seats."

From the New York Sunday Telegraph Review of

"BLACK BEAUTY"

"It is a picture that shines out like a good deed in a naughty world."

"The picture is just about perfect in its details."

"The picture is a high tribute to the artistic ability and the patience of its director, David Smith."

"As for 'Black Beauty' himself, Man O' War could not have played the role with more finesse."

FOR NEWSPAPER USE—FOR THEATER PROGRAMS

Live Notes from the Studios

CONDUCTED BY LILLIAN R. GALE

ABOUT DIRECTORS

GEORGE D. BAKER has some interesting things to say about 'the inevitable future."

"In attempting to peer into the motion picture future," declares the director, "we are apt to be misguided by the precedents of the past. As a matter of fact, true progress in any art is never attained until the ironbound precedents of the past are finally overthrown. Last year was a record breaker for overthrowing our ancient film idols. It marked the decline of the star and the rise of the stellar stock company. It saw the author rightly placed upon his throne, and the director's glory enhanced by the acquisiton of real story material. Heretofore the gentle art of striking out upon new paths has been frowned upon We directors have been informed that costume plays were taboo, until 'Passion' and 'Kismet' came along and proved otherwise. We have been instructed never to produce a story in which a member of the cloth was the principal character, or else the theatre patrons would leave the theatre in disgust. However, 'The Sin that was His' proved this to be a fallacy. In other words, the recent past has been fruitful in proving that even an orignal production thought, could be successful, in spite of the fact that it had never been done before. The growth of an entire industry has been stunted by the use of the oblivious and stereotyped, instead of seeking more distinctive thought-trends. This state of affairs is now happily changing for the better and the creative minds of the industry are now engaged in building a new technique, which is now being molded by the old precedents, but is being shaped by the light of pregnant originality. The future promises pictures of more than two dimensions. It will work off the banal, the sexual and the inane. It will produce optical poems as lasting as any masterpiece of Corot's. It will express beauty in terms of human reality and not as now, in terms of unreal humans. It will express life, not plots. For instance, 'Conrad in Quest of His Youth,' is the first great step forward in this respect. In the future, our actors will not act their plays—they will live them. In the directorial department, there will be less of guessing' and more of knowing. I believe the form of the motion picture will be more or less changed. There will be fewer titles and longer scenes. Drama will come more from the heart, and less from the heaving chest. It seems to me that a great many of these faults result from mediocre continuity. It is for that reason that I write my own continuity for each of the productions I direct. In the feature, 'Temple Dusk,' which I have recently completed for the Sawyer-Lubin organization, I believe I have produced a story which contains a promise of what the future presages for motion picture production."

Karla Schramm, beautiful and talented ingenue, featured in "The Return of Tarzan" and in "The Son of Tarzan," and in "The Son of Tarzan"

Webster Campbell started to shoot film for his first directorial adventure, "The Co-respondent," starring Corinne Griffith for Vitagraph, with Percy Marmont as leading man.

With the prospect of finishing the equipment of his London studios by the end of winter and beginning active producing early in the spring, J. Stuart Blackton has now nearly completed the plans for his English screen activities.

Conferences have been in progress daily at the Blackton office since the commodore's return from England, while similar conferences have taken place in London with his representatives in attendance. By the frequent exchange of cablegrams many plans begun in London have developed, and the enterprise may now be said to have been fully launched.

An announcement just received from Commodore Blackton states that his English company will be made up of many prominent players of the London stage; there will also be a number of eminent representatives of London's social and artistic life in the Blackton organization. While in London and since returning to America, the pioneer producer has been deluged with applications from prominent English actors, and from artists, decorators, costumers, etc., who are anxious to identify thmselves with the screen art.

The Brooklyn studios of Commodore Blackton have been stripped of all their lighting, fixtures and equipment, and huge cases now are ready to transport them to the new Blackton studios in London. Many of these lighting devices are either inventions of Commodore Blackton or were changed or developed by him during the years that he has worked steadily at improving lighting effects for the screen.

The Blackton party has had to postpone its sailing, and now will not leave for two weeks or more. In the meantime, several unusually strong dramatic stories for Lady Diana Manners are being worked on in the Blackton offices.

"I have done many things in the motion picture field for almost a quarter of a century," said Commodore Blackton yesterday, "but never have I looked forward to anything with such pleasure as to this work in England, doing big stories with great historical and romantic backgrounds."

Edward Dillon, who has been responsible for such notable productions as "The Amateur Wife," with Irene Castle, "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" and "The Education of Elizabeth," the latter two in which Billie Burke was feasted, will in future direct only special features for Famous.

That serial chapter-play suffers less than other forms of motion pictures from deletion by the censors is the belief of William Duncan, Vitagraph serial star and director,' who bases his statement on reports gathered from numerous censorship bodies throughout the country.

"It is significant to note," says Duncan, "that every type of motion picture which continues to find favor with picture-goers follows closely the lines laid down for the chapter-play, namely, clean, strong love interest and a gripping, fast moving plot. Producers of feature length offerings would do well to consider these elements which contribute to the ever-growing demand for this type of production, indicating that the fans as well as the censors have stamped them with their approval."

Gordon Cooper, who has been responsible for the direction of the "Chief Flynn" series and the "Bennie Leonard" serial, under supervision of Wally Van, has completed his contract for the direction of three features for the West Art Film Company.

In the filming of Metro's special production of "The Woman Who Went Away," one of the players is called upon to devour a sandwich of respectable proportions and a glass of milk with a great show of gusto.

Edith Johnson, now co-starring with William Duncan in Vitagraph serials

The scene was set for shooting shortly after noon.

"But—but I've just had a hearty lunch," mildly protested James Quinn, the possessor of the alleged appetite.

Director Wesley Ruggles nevertheless insisted and Quinn became a martyr to the extent of consuming the generous sandwich and milk for a "long shot."

"Now we'll have to repeat it for a close-up," coolly announced the director.

Quinn permitted his protest to become more vigorous this time. But, after much argument, submitted, crammed one more of the hateful orders of bread and meat, washing it down with milk.

Then it was decided that Alice Lake, who is starring in the production, should participate in the scene to the extent of watching the food being consumed. Quinn, pleading for mercy and tugging at a rapidly tightening belt, held out for some time, but finally submitted. To his credit as an actor it may be said that he gave all the appearances of a hungry man—and a sick one.

"Now, for another shot—" began the director.

But there was no other shot.

It seems particularly appropriate just now that "Wedding Bells" should have been chosen as the next Chet Withey production for Constance Talmadge, for whom wedding bells have just tolled in real life.

It was at first announced that the Hatton picture, "A Buterfly in Harness," would be the next First National feature for Constance, following "The Man from Toronto," which has just been completed, but as Mr. Withey found it necessary to take many summer scenes for this picture, it has been decided to postpone this production for a later date.

Constance Talmadge will start work on "Wedding Bells," which is a screen adaptation of Salisbury Field's play of that name, on January 12. Edgar Selwyn, under whose management the play was produced last season, has offered many interesting suggestions for the scenario

ABOUT PLAYERS

WINIFRED WESTOVER'S work in "The Fighter," opposite Conway Tearle has won the admiration of the habitues of Universal studio, as well as the star to the extent that she has been re-engaged for his next starring vehicle, "Bucking the Tiger," through her manager, Arthur H. Jacobs.

Arthur Rankin, of the famous Rankin-Drew-Barrymore association, who did such admirable work in "The Copperhead," and more recently in "The Truth About Husbands" and "The Great Adventure," will next be seen in "Jim, the Penman," a Whitman Bennett production.

Gladys Leslie, who has been associated with all-star cast productions since the completion of her contract with Vitagraph, has completed her work in "Street is the Right Road," a Cosmopolitan production under the direction of Robert G. Vignola.

Amanda Hen, who has been selected to enact an important role in Metro's special production of "Home Stuff," is one of the most attractive chickens in Hollywood.

In explanation of this broad statement, it may be said, however, that she is of the feathered and not the blonde variety, lives in a coop instead of a gilded cage, and arises rather than retires at runrise.

Amanda, who has shown rare ability in her work before the camera, owes not only her present position, but her very life to Viola Dana, who is starring in this picture. For Miss Dana carefully selected the egg from which she was set, thus making it possible for Amanda to become a screen player instead of the basic ingredient of an omelette.

On the morning that Amanda cracked her shell and peeped out into the big Metro stage that is the only world she ever has known, she was greeted by the fascinated Viola, who offered her her first meal of warm gruel. Because of the kindly ministrations of the star, Amanda has associated Viola so intimately with her three square meals a day, that the two are inseparable.

As a result of this life long relationship—as far as Amanda is concerned, at least—the cameraman and Director Al Kelley have no difficulty in finding this player whenever necessary. Moreover, Amanda has a greater value than any other member of Metro's highly paid staff.

For Amanda has provided her mistress with a fresh egg a day for nearly three weeks.

Helene Montrose, who scored so heavily with Elsie Ferguson in "The Counterfeit," and other Famous Player offerings, has been added to the cast of "Bucking the Tiger," under the direction of Henry Kolker.

James Neill, veteran stage and screen actor, now a member of the Goldwyn stock company, was arguing the other day for a "five-foot shelf" of books about the theatre, so that young and ambitious students could learn the history of their art.

"They know nothing—absolutely nothing of the traditions of the theatre," he complained bitterly. One of the group hastened to the defense, of the younger generation, but Mr. Neill was unconvinced.

"Say," he called to a young actor standing nearby, "who was Edwin Booth?"

"Why, he used to run a big oyster-packing plant in Baltimore," was the prompt reply.

Whereupon Mr. Neill smiled a small, sad, but triumphant smile.

A few years ago Polly Van scored tremendously in comedies, and then disappeared from the screen. It is of interest to know that she will return, and appear in the cast selected to support Constance Talmadge, in "Wedding Bells."

Katharine Stewart, who is portraying one of the roles at the Strand in "The Great Adventure" with Lionel Barrymore, relates a very interesting incident of how she secured her engagement in this production. Miss Stewart was having luncheon at the Beaux Arts at the same time Whitman Bennett was enjoying a repast, and he was so attracted by her type and personality, that he sent a message to her table and business was negotiated with the aforementioned result.

When "Dangerous Curve Ahead!", the Rupert Hughes comedy which is being filmed now at the Goldwyn studio, is released, anyone wishing pointers as to the correct way for a butler to deport himself, should see it. For Charles Green who is the over-servant in the picture, was not only once upon a time a butler—he was one for the royal family of England!

It was when the present king was Prince of Wales that Mr. Green served in the royal household. E. Mason Hopper, who is directing the production of "Dangerous Curve Ahead!", says it is a great relief to him not to have to tell the butler how to act—he is willing to concede that a man who was butler to a Prince of Wales knows all about what he should do in a picture.

Sylvia Breamer will remain in California for the balance of the winter, and within the next week will announce her proposed affiliation, her contract with Sydney Franklyn being concluded.

Jack Salter, the property man with the George Bunny Company, making Capitol Comedies, says that "It's a great life." Recently a call was made for roaches of the variety found around water sinks and kitchens. Poor Jack, with honesty in his eye, went to the nearest restaurant and asked the buxom lady, who is proprietress there to go into the rear and catch some roaches. It was several days later that Jack returned to the studio. He asked Mr. Goldaine, the director, in the future, please not to send him out on any such errands. He finally had to go to the beach and get sand crabs and paint them black.

"Props" also says that making dummies smoke, and trying to look like a June day on a December night, also has its tough ends.

Second Vignola Special Scores!

Robert G. Vignola's second special Vignola production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "The Passionate Pilgrim," by Samuel Mermin, made an unqualified hit at Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld's Rivoli theatre, New York, during the theatre's anniversary week, indicated by record crowds at every performance.

Chosen by Dr. Riesenfeld as the ultra attraction for the Rivoli's third anniversary, "The Passionate Pilgrim" was widely heralded and advertised a week before the showing, with the result that it drew tremendous business to the box-office Hundreds were turned away nightly.

Samuel Merwin's "The Passionate Pilgrim," is known as one of the most widely read novels in contemporary American literature. It created a sensation when it came out a few years ago and even today it is still rated among the six best sellers. Following the excerpts from the newspaper criticisms:

New York World: "'The Passionate Pilgrim,' a story by Samuel Merwin, is featured. A mixture of love and big business, through which Robert G. Vignola as director, has woven a gripping thread of interest, this photoplay ranks with the finest presented in recent weeks."

New York News: "In 'The Passionate Pilgrim' the newspaper scenes are the real thing. For the first time in my experience I have seen a— — — — — — — — —"

New York Times: "Mr. Vignola's treatment of the story is cinematographically good. Particularly his use of the cut-back is effective. The settings are excellent."

New York Globe: "Samuel Merwin's story of 'The Passionate Pilgrim' has one remarkable feature. The newspaper scenes are real. This announcement deserves to be labeled 'Wuxtry, Wuxtry,' for these are the first film shots we have seen that look like a newspaper office."

Day Picture Has Booze Smuggling Theme

More of interest than appears on the surface is contained in the announcement that Pathe, on January 30th, will release the first picture of the Holman Day Canadian Border series made from the widely read stories of that author by the Edgar Jones Productions, Inc. This first release is called "Lochinvar of the Line." While it is a love story on rather novel lines set in the midst of a forest wilderness, incidentally it presents with manifest realism one of the most vexing of current problems connected with the enforcement of the Prohibition Law, Pathe announces.

The critical scenes of the love drama are laid in a "Line House," a general goods and liquor store and residence erected on the border line of the two countries, which visible line on the floor and walls in fact locates half the building in the United States and the other half in Canada. The stock of liquors, of course, is kept on the Canadian side of the line—which is near enough the bar, however, to be handily "reached over" by thirsty persons "in the States."

ig Settings and Fine Gowns Aid Feature

Criticisms on "A Slave of Van-y," the Robertson-Cole super-ecial starring Pauline Frederick, now that no small part of the pop-arity of this remarkably success-il picture is due to the beautiful owns worn by Miss Frederick and the richness of settings through-ut the production, declares a state-ent from the Robertson-Cole eadquarters.

Newspaper clippings from the any cities and towns in which the cture has been shown remark on ese two subjects and give un-inted praise to the quality of the m in these respects, it is stated. he consensus of opinion seems to that in "A Slave of Vanity" a od story has been doubled in alue because of gorgeous settings, nd the screen star has enhanced e effect of her work by the use f a most beautiful wardrobe.

Albert A. Kaufmam Says

A SHORT talk with Albert A. Kaufman—a safe narcotic for the pessimist. For Mr. Kaufman, it is a warranted conjecture, is an optimist, personified. His success, the youthful executive attributes, in the main, to that of which he says the ambitious idealist has great need—encouragement.

In search of a theme which would offer opportunity to include some of the ideas gradually worked into what, to him, seemed almost a living thing, Mr. Kaufman hit upon a story. It developed into what will soon be known to motion picture enthusiasts as "Man, Woman and Marriage." Under the acknowledged skillful direction of Allen Holubar, will appear the popular star, Dorothy Phillips, in the leading role. It is no wonder, then, that Mr. Kaufman is highly enthusiastic over his "castle in the air" in the more concrete form of film.

But to return to "encouragement," of which Mr. Kaufman speaks glowingly, and states was the major incentive for his efforts.

"Pessimists, people who unconsciously, perhaps continually dash cold water upon hopes and ambitions, do the world an incalculable amount of harm. Sometimes plans or ideas sound most unethical, yet when put into work develop into the greatest things the world has ever known. It is so with inventions, compilations, productions, Yet, with an encouraging help along the road, one may accomplish great things.

"I have been most fortunate. My ideas have never been discounted, and I have always been able to command an audience, at least, for the presentation of a plan. However, had I not always had the encouraging knowledge that in my ability to accomplish that which I proposed, was in the minds of those approached, I presume I might not have been—well, at least the instigator of what is bound to be a marvellous photoplay. I believe, however, in having ideals and building foundations to support them, day by day. Encouragement is the one great factor needed to uphold one's efforts, so that whenever it becomes possible for me to encourage anyone in an artistic effort, no matter how fragile the plans may appear, I try to extend an encouraging hand, for encouragement was the incentive which has prompted me since the old days of my affiliation with Famous Players, to form ideas and back them up."

Mr. Kaufman, while of youthful appearance, bears the unmistakable stamp of an experienced showman. His years with Famous Players, not forgetting his activities in the institution of a Famous Players studio in England, of course stood him in good stead when the time arrived for him to gratify his pet ambition of having something so worth while that instead of having to proceed in any other than his own way of securing proper support, he could exercise his own ability to visualize.

A most congenial young man is Mr. Kaufman, alert, alive and always busy.

"The entire histrionic field could not have afforded a better star than Dorothy Phillips for this great story, had it been under military surveillance," said Mr. Kaufman. "And with Miss Phillips as his inspiration, knowing his previous work, there is nothing too much to expect of Allen Holubar. He has gone straight to the heart of the situation and has dealt with sex antagonism instead of sex attraction, and the result of his work has fulfilled the prediction made years ago when he was directing for Universal, that he would one day be among the greatest of film play directors.

"'Man, Woman and Marriage' is really something to see, rather than to talk about," concluded Mr. Kaufman. "Wait and see if I am right!"

Ray Makes No Personal Appearances

CHARLES RAY, popular star, despite the report started recently, has not yielded to the plea of theatre managers for "personal appearance," but will continue to let his pictures speak for him.

From Los Angeles came the word that after years of persistent refusal, Mr. Ray had succumbed to the "personal appearance" vogue. It was an interesting story and MOTION PICTURE NEWS was among the publications that printed it. Soon came definite information from authoritative source that the report was without foundation, in fact, that Mr. Ray, far from having been presented, personally, in any theatre, has not swerved an inch from his iron-clad non-appearance rule. He is as firmly opposed as ever.

The popular First National star, however, does not decry the personal appearance by players who have sufficient time, opportunity and inclination; his attitude is said to be that any benefit that might result to him or to the public from seeing him in a few theatres in one territory would be so small compared with the millions he is trying to reach, that he feels he must devote all his time, energy and attention to making his appeal through his pictures.

There is no one in New York so well qualified to voice Mr. Ray's opinion as Arthur S. Kane, who presents Ray productions, via First National. Mr. Kane, upon his return from Los Angeles recently, was asked to discuss Mr. Ray's attitude for MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"I am certain," said Mr. Kane, "that Mr. Ray would like to meet his countless friends face to face. He is deeply touched by the words of praise he is constantly hearing, and would be more than pleased to make personal acknowledgment to every admirer. But the physical impossibility of touching even a small part of them while he is engaged in picture making, is obvious. Should he appear at night in a theatre before as many as two thousand persons, and even do this quite often, the effect would be merely local to one territory out of twenty-five in the United States. The number thus reached would be infinitesimal compared with the twenty million American picture fans, to say nothing of the additional numbers in other countries. Manifestly, he cannot travel from territory to territory and continue to make pictures. His popularity is universal; his is a universal appeal. This must be catered to in preference to local boosting.

"It is a feeling that he should dedicate to his art, time, talents, energies and thoughts to the photoplay fan at large, outside of his hours of recreation, which every normal person and worker must have, that causes Mr. Ray to look with disfavor upon anything of a business nature that takes his attention from his great task and pleasure, that of giving of his best to the great world-wide public. Should the time ever come when he feels he has accomplished the objects he has set for himself, I know he would be glad to undertake more personal relations with the photoplay devotees the country over. Until that time, however, managers can rest assured that this star is showing no partiality and that he is not doing for one or a few what he would not do for all. Time, physical limitations, devotion to his art and to the public at large, all protest against any deviation from his rule against "personal appearance."

Scene from "Movie Mad," a Christie comedy released through Educational

Barker Production at the Capitol

Reginald Barker's production of "Bunty Pulls the Strings," from Graham Moffatt's famous comedy of Scotch village life, was screened this week at the Capitol theatre, New York. It marked the first presentation in the East of this photoplay which scored a tremendous success on its initial showing at the California theatre, Los Angeles.

Its West Coast reception was duplicated at its Capitol theatre screening. S. L. Rothapfel gave it a charming presentation of which the music, mostly Scotch in inspiration, was an important feature. "Bunty Pulls the Strings" is one of the series of "high" comedies which Goldwyn has recently screened.

Equipment Requirements for the Up-to-date Theatre

One of a Series of Articles by an Experienced Equipment Dealer

This is one of the series of instructive articles by Charles Felix Butte of the Butte Electrical Equipment Company on the subject of theatre equipment

The projection room, as stated heretofore, is really the main portion of the electrical equipment within the theatre, particularly those displaying motion pictures entirely. This room should be provided with two sources of energy independent of one another in each and every case wherever possible to obtain two such independent sources. The source of supply for the projection room machines should at all times preferably be a motor generator set operating from the primary source. In many houses two motor generator sets are provided, using the sets intermittently. The reasons for the intermittent use of the motor generator sets is to keep a set always in operating condition to safeguard the continuity of the projection room service. The arrangement of the apparatus in the projection room should receive considerable thought and should be so arranged as to give the most efficient service for the purpose to which the room will be applied. In many installations the apparatus is arranged as shown in the print herewith the dissolvers are located to the extreme left of the room with the spot and flood lights and projection machines respectively to the right. The port and lookout openings on the face of the operating room are now made a portion of the original construction. The practice in the past has been to make an opening the full length of the room and fill in this opening either with sheet iron work or ebony board, cutting in the ports and lookout openings after the machines are set. No reason exists why these openings cannot be definitely and accurately located during the construction, which makes a much neater appearing and substantial installation. The installation of these openings at the time of constructing the projection room walls overcomes the possibility of a noisy projection room, as in many cases in the past the filling in of the long opening particularly with iron construction has created a vibrating wall which carries the sound out into the auditorium. The use of exposed shutters within the projection room is fast becoming a past practice. Many of the projection rooms equipped by the writer are provided with concealed shutters similar to the shutters shown on the print herewith. The types of projection machines is a matter that should be determined in each individual case, and the writer has no desire to recommend any particular make of machine. The promiscuous installation of wires and exposed conduits within the projection room is a practice of the past and should not be tolerated in any present day equipment. The unsightliness of dangling wires should condemn this practice in itself, beside the fact that hanging wires are always a possible source of trouble and causes of interruption in service.

There are now three types of projection room arrangements in existence; namely, the individual manual operating machine —that is, the projection machine is started and stopped by means of pressing individual switches; the semimanual automatic control—that is, the first machine is stopped and the second machine started by throwing one switch; and the full automatic, which automatically stops the first machine and starts the second or third, etc. The manual needs no further description, as this type of installation has been in use for many years past. The semi-manual automatic is of recent development and primarily consists of a double-throw transfer switch, which by throwing from one side to the other starts the motor, throws in the contractor and operates the automatic dowsers. With this type of installation a perfect control is rendered and the change of machines from one to the other is hardly noticeable on the screen. The full automatic control which is of recent development and has been installed in several projection rooms, automatically stops the machine in operation and starts the next machine as soon as the film in the first machine is run through. This system is so arranged to give a perfect change from one machine to the other, and dissolves the picture on the screen, with the result that it appears as one continuous film. New developments are now taking place along these lines, with the possible result that all future installations will be provided with this type of equipment.

The recent developments along the lines of the safety act of California have called upon a new method of installation of the stage switchboard controls and the usual exposed live parts of switches and fuses on the face of the stage switchboard is now fast disappearing. The type of stage switchboard known as the "dead front panel" will soon be the standard type of installation provided in all modern theatres.

How and When the Isolated Power Plant Should Be Used

Twelve Questions and Answers That Will Help You Decide

By A. G. Cruikshank

11th Question—How does the current cost of the isolated plant compare with the cost of Central Station Service.

Answer—It will be necessary to show the several ways that arc machines may be operated on Central Station Lines in order not to make any unjust comparisons. In order to simplify calculations we will assume that you can purchase Central Station current at 10c per unit. (1 kilowatt hour or 1,000 watts.) We will use the figure of 9c per unit in figuring portable-plant current, as this figure will cover the cost of a 900 watt Mazda Lamp. When any of the smaller lamps are used the current cost will be correspondingly less. In the following example we have used the 600 watt Mazda Lamp on the slant, as this will take care of the average Motion Picture theatres, but in the "Recapitulation of costs" we have used our maximum current costs. In the comparison with the arc plant used on the Central Station Lines, it should be remembered that in the calculations on the 600 watt Mazda Lamp used in connection with the plant that only 2/3 of the output of plant is used, leaving the balance of the current output available for other illumination, or if it is not used the actual cost of lamp operation will be correspondingly less.

The following seven examples cover:

(1) A.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Resistance Method.
(2) A.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Transformer Service.
(3) A.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Rectifier Service.
(4) D.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Resistance Method.
(5) D.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Motor-Generator Set.
(6) D.C. 125 volt Central Station Line Mazda 30 volt Lamp.
(7) D.C. 125 volt Isolated Plant Service Mazda 28-30 volt Lamp.

RECAPITULATION OF COSTS

Central Station 125 Volt Lines.

(1) A.C. Arc Resistance Method Current Cost, 72c.
(2) A.C. Arc Transformer Service Current Cost, 27c.
(3) A.C. Line Rectifier; D.C. Arc Current Cost, 36c.
(4) D.C. Line Resistance Method Current Cost, 54c.
(5) D.C. Line Motor-Generator, Current Cost, 36c.
(6) D.C. Resistance Method vs Mazda 30 volt lamp Current Cost, 24c.

Isolated Plant Service 32 Volt Line.

(7) Mazda 30 volt lamp maximum current cost, 9c.

The securing of the above results are dependent upon the following five items:

1st—Density of film.
2nd—Condition and kind of screen (co-efficient of reflection, diffusion and dust.)
3rd—Condition of lamp (efficiency—hours burned.)
4th—Focus, lens, condensers, reflector.
5th—Cleanliness lens, condensers, reflector.

Motion Picture Machine Manufacturers claim that average carbon Arc for Picture Projection consumes 2000 to 4000 watts per hour. Taking the manufacturers figures and comparing them with portable plants we have:

AVERAGE ARC

2000 watts per hour
4000 watts per hour
2 K.W. x 10c; 20c
4 K.W. x 10c; 40c

Average Arc cost 30c per hour.

Average Mazda Isolated Plant cost 9c per hour.

The probable cause of the difference in figures by the manufacturers and those taken by actual observation and calculation is due to the fact that the average Motion Picture Projection Operator does not study his machine and learn to operate it economically. He is satisfied if he gets a good picture, but he does not know why or how and cares less. He does not know that he is wasting current which means a money loss.

With the Mazda Lamp and the isolated plant this loss is eliminated.

(Note—In the foregoing article very little has been said of the 400 watt Mazda 28-32 volt Projection Lamp. The reason for this is, that the 400 watt lamp is used exclusively for suit-case protable Motion Picture Projection Machines. The 600 watt lamp compares favorably with the A.C. 25 ampere carbon Arc and the 900 watt lamp with the D.C. 40 ampere carbon Arc machines.)

The facts and figures presented in the above article were gathered from the manufacturers of the various isolated 32-volt light lighting plants. In addition to these costs and requirements, if the motion picture house desires to operate house lights, fans and other devices about the theatre, they should fully explain these to the man figuring the requirements for their plant. This will require a large storage battery system and in many cases a slightly larger plant.

Intends to Install Portable Lighting Plant

M. E. Y., Cherokee, Okla.: We are going to install a lighting plant soon. I have a throw of ninety feet and a picture eleven feet three inches by fourteen feet eight inches. How many amperes should I use and what carbon combination?

I just read a letter in your department where a man was having trouble with one of his machines giving him a hazy picture. I had the same trouble and on removing my lens found a big spot on it that was almost invisible to the naked eye. I polished it and the trouble disappeared.

Reply: Assuming that you would use direct current you would need about 45 amperes to illuminate the screen you have. You should have a carbon combination consisting of a 5-8" cored upper and a 5-16" lower.

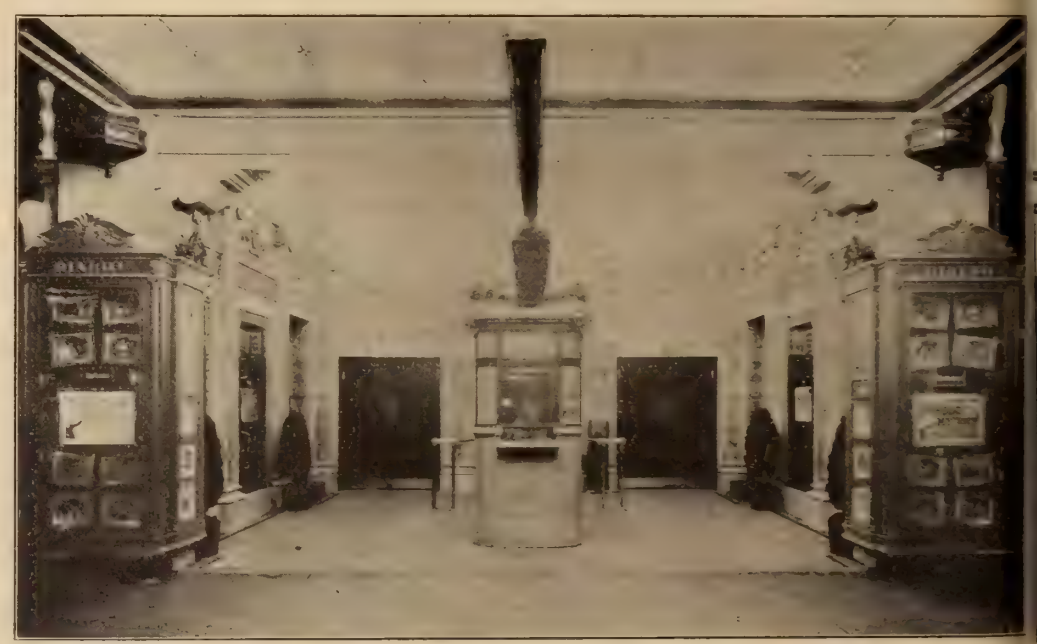
Park Theatre, Waukesha, Wis., near Completion

WORK is rapidly being completed on the Park theatre, Waukesha, Wisconsin, which is expected to cost in the neighborhood of $70,000. The theatre was designed by Brust and Phillips, Milwaukee architects, and is expected to be the last word in small town amusement places. The architects, who became especially well known in theatrical circles when they designed the Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, have combined practicability and art in the Waukesha house.

The Park, which has been leased by the Saxe Amusement Enterprise of Milwaukee, is one of the many houses that the Saxe Brothers are acquiring throughout Wisconsin. It will seat 870 persons on one floor, the theatre itself covering 60x100 feet and being situated in an office building 85x100 feet.

The theatre entrance will have an outer lobby 6 ft. 10 in. deep with swinging doors and a ticket office separating it from the inner lobby, which will be nearly 27 feet wide. From the inner lobby the theatre patrons will pass through another set of swinging doors into a long foyer running across the entire back of the auditorium and being 13 feet wide. From this foyer stairways will lead down to the basement where ladies' and gentlemen's retiring rooms are located. Fresh air, warmed in the winter time, will be poured into the theatre through fifteen 30-inch registers placed in the aisles of the theatre, while foul air will be drawn off near the ceiling. All of the registers are hooked up with a series of air ducts which connect with a large fan as shown in the accompanying plan. A stage 6 feet deep with a rest room for the musicians is included in the plans. A Wagnerian-Weickerherdt organ will be installed.

The decorative effect of the theatre will be of the Renaissance period. Large panels will be used on the walls, some of them containing bright painted canvasses of flowers. Other panels will form backgrounds for modeled clay figures. The general color scheme of the theatre will be blue. Most of the lighting will be from hidden groups of lights divided into series of three colors for producing various effects. Brackets with square silk shades are also being used on the walls. Every part of the theatre is being constructed with a view to promoting an efficient handling of crowds and thorough cleanliness at all times without sacrificing the artistic effects of the decorations.



The Park theatre it is expected will b opened December 1 and will be under th direction of L. F. Thurwachter, Milwau kee branch manager of the Triangle Di tributing corporation.

Crandall Extends Chai to Roanoke, Va.

CRANDALL'S new Rialto theatre i Roanoke, Va., open to the public o December 20th, is one of the most beauti ful, most comfortable and most commodi ous theatres in the state. Situated in th heart of the business section of the city the Rialto occupies a position of com manding strategic importance. It will b the aim of Harry M. Crandall, owner o the Crandall theatres in Washington D. C., and surrounding territory, to mak this, the twelfth addition to his chain, pre eminent among the photoplay houses bear ing his name.

The Rialto will be notable among Ro anoke theatres for a specially built, deco rative box-office occupying the center o a spacious lobby 28 feet wide by 15 fee deep. This will open through three pair of large double doors into a foyer with Caenstone walls and ceiling in ivory grays and gold, 28 feet square. The lighting in the foyer is multiple color or a system of dimmers permitting any de sired degree of brilliance in illumination

The auditorium proper measures 3 feet 4 inches by 118 feet and, with a bal cony which projects over only a third o the orchestra floor, has a total seating ca pacity of approximately 1,000. The colo scheme of the auditorium is dominated by old ivory, gray and gold, modified by a multiple-color lighting system operated on a flood principle semi-direct to the audience. The permanent house lighting for use during the projection of the pictured subjects is provided by old ivory decorative wall fixtures equipped with small-voltage lamps with delicately tinted bulbs. The auditorium is seated with leather orchestra chairs of ample size, with more than usual free space between rows.

The Rialto, in addition to presenting the finest special productions released, will afford the theatregoers of Roanoke a quality of orchestral accompaniment for the pictures that heretofore has been unknown in the city. A full orchestra has been engaged and will play as conspicuous a part in the Rialto's entertainments as the symphonies play in the Crandall houses in Washington, which are famous the country over for their music.

The Rialto was designed by E. G. Frye, a prominent architect of Roanoke, and the interior decorations were executed by J. W. Riley. The house will be operated under the general supervision of the Crandall executive staff with headquarters in the Metropolitan theatre building, Washington, and the resident managership of Allen Jenkins, whose experience in the conduct of Roanoke theatres has been comprehensive and successful.

Realistic Assistance Given to Screen by Complete Assembly of Accessories

C. C. Dahl, Formerly of N. Y. Capitol Has Developed Several New Stunts for St. Louis' Missouri Theatre

A STAGE which ranks second to none in the motion picture exhibition field is the boast of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis, the latest addition to the string of local picture houses controlled by the Famous Players-Lasky Missouri Corporation. Descriptions of various other features of St. Louis' monumental theatre have been given in the NEWS but none have dealt with the unusual stage and its equipment.

The Missouri was completed less than eight weeks ago at a cost of $1,500,000 and has a seating capacity of 4,000, which is the largest in this city and one of the largest in the entire country. The stage, which has every possible convenience and accommodation for large theatrical productions, measures 98 feet in length, 31 feet in width, and is 70 feet high. The length is several feet greater than that of the Shubert-Jefferson theatre, St. Louis' largest auditorium of the spoken drama. Its curtain length is 49½ feet. This, too, is larger than that of any theatre in the Mississippi valley.

The equipments and features of the stage were purchased at a cost of $25,000 and include everything which is necessary not only for the realistic assistance of the screen productions, but for the presentation of elaborate prologues and scenes, and even four and five-act dramatics should the circumstance warrant it.

Besides the regulation switchboards, the stage is equipped with two portable ones used for a unique signaling system. Stage Director Charles C. Dahl, who was brought to St. Louis by the Missouri Corporation from New York, has installed many advantageous features which make the Missouri picture offerings decidedly different. Dahl, who received much of his training at the Capitol theatre in New York, with various picture houses in South America, and lately with Mack Sennett, has evolved a system of adding realism to the comedies, scenics and features that is gaining much favorable comment. Seated in the wing of the stage before a large portable switchboard, Dahl can regulate drums, shot-pits, broken glass containers, and various other noise makers that lend realism to the screen. There are seven stage hands employed at the Missouri, which includes three electricians. During the pictures two men are stationed at the other end of the signal boards and their actions are controlled by Dahl, who watches the picture.

"There is nothing in the world which will add interest to a silent screen and the realism which drums and the like will. The boom of a gun coming from behind the stage and not from the drummer (and by the way the Missouri has an orchestra of 22 pieces) makes the scene appear truer. The sound of water or brok dishes, the slam of a door or the fall o victim creates more interest in comed and actually makes them funnier," D said. "I have watched during vario performances when I have omitted t realism and found that the laughs are r as continuous and hearty."

One of the outstanding features of Missouri offering is the continuity exp rienced by the audience from the risi of the curtain until the lowering. The are no breaks which come from the shi ing from a picture to a prologue, or fro one picture to another. The transition made perfect by the lighting effects and done in this way: When the end of a pi ture comes there is no break. Instead, illuminating two silken columns whi stand to either side of the screen, whi in turn is on the miniature stage at t rear of the major stage, the eye of t audience is taken away from the sce momentarily. Thus, when the next pi ture or presentation is ready for appea ance the eye wanders back slowly a does not suffer a delay in interest.

Recent developments in border lighting apply larger single units in preference to the smaller distributing units used in the past. Color screens are provided with these larger units, and in several recent installations an automatic color changing device has been attached to the border to change the color scheme automatically similar to the method used for color floodlighting. Automatic curtain controls which can be operated in many instances from the projection room, as well as from the stage have been installed. These automatic curtain devices provide for lifting the curtain, as well as drawing the draped curtain horizontally. Effective results are obtained particularly in strictly motion picture theatres by providing a velour or similar drape to be drawn over the screen while the orchestra is rendering an overture or during the intermission. These drapes are generally operated by means of an automatic curtain mechanism and controlled from the operating room. In several installations the same effect has been obtained by the use of a third dissolver, although the effectiveness of this means of curtaining the screen is not as pleasing as the draped velour effect.

In addition to the usual dimmers on the stage for the foots and borders, provision has been made in many installations to dim the house lighting system. Beautiful effects are obtained by the use of these dimmers from the fact that the house is never instantaneously and brilliantly illuminated. Changing effects from one color to the other is harmoniously accomplished by dimming the color lit and bringing up the color to be lit. In several installations the house dimmers are automatically operated and controlled from the projection room as well as from the stage. In other cases the house dimmers are located in the projection room and are manually operated from this point. In these cases the theatre is primarily used for motion pictures and not vaudeville.

The increased demand made upon theatres displaying motion pictures for musical numbers has necessitated the employment of more musicians than in the past. The music provided for many of the pictures required a great number of changes and many changes that must be made without previous arrangement. In order to successfully conduct the orchestra the leader must have some means of advising the various musicians of a change without the old habit of striking the music stand with his baton or bow. This result is obtained by the use of small signal lamps located at each musician's stand with foot switches at the leader's platform. Further signalling apparatus is required between the various points in the theatre, some of which are taken care of by the house phone system, with instruments usually located on the stage, orchestra pit, box office, projection room and manager's office. Additional signals are provided between the stage and orchestra, stage and projection room, stage and dressing rooms, stage and musicians' room, orchestra and projection room, with return signals between these points. Buzzers have been used in many instances, but the fact that the house is quiet during the running of the picture, silent signals are now provided by means of colored lamps.

The attractiveness of the exterior illumination of the theatre, particularly in relation to the marquee and sign illumination, now receives more attention than heretofore. Floodlighting of the exterior of the theatre during the night performances individualizes the location of the building, and with the attractive signs and brilliantly illuminated marque, the results obtained are very satisfactory.

The mechanical equipment, namely, the heating and ventilating, will be described in a later article.

You Can't Have too Many Brass Rails

PLUSH-COVERED seats have joined the dodo in Oblivion; velvet hangings in boxes have gone the way of all flesh. The purely decorative has given way to the highly practical, and the comfort and the safety of patrons are now uppermost in the minds of exhibitors.

Styles in theatre furnishings and equipment change to suit conditions, but brass railings have always held and always will hold their place in the sun. No substitute has been devised for these effective barriers of polished metal.

In a recent issue we reproduced a photograph of the marble and gold lobby of the new Rialto in Newark. From entrance door to inner door stretched a single brass railing. It serves to separate the ingoing from the out-coming crowds. Not all railings of this type are stationary, however. Some are equipped with removable posts or standards. When the posts are removed from the brass-lined sockets plugs of the same materials are inserted to prevent patrons from tripping.

To admit of easy ingress and egress these long railings are often provided with telescoping gates or slide-bars, invisible to the uninitiated.

Velour-covered ropes are a recent development in lobby rails. They are furnished by their manufacturer in sections, with end caps and hooks complete, ready for attaching to ornamental brass posts with heavy cast bases. Rope rails are especially valuable when the size of the enclosed space must be varied occasionally. They are less expensive than one would imagine.

Immediately in front of the box-office or ticket-booth of every ultra-modern theatre we find a double brass railing. Why is it double? Partly to prevent folks from "ducking under," mostly to strengthen the rail. It is subjected many times a day to a terrific strain, because it is designed to prevent congestion. It forms a single line automatically.

The ticket-taker should be partitioned off by a similar railing, to guard him against rushes and enable him to properly check up the audience.

If the stairway leading to the balcony or mezzanine floor is unusually wide it should be provided with a brass railing down the center to separate the crowds. Hand-rails should also be installed to assist the aged, the fat and the weary.

The orchestra pit also has its railing; the boxes are always finished off with low brass railings from which curtains are suspended. Railings form the loge boxes in many theatres. And they are used to subdivide the various orchestra and balcony sections.

Architects invariably specify them because they are strong, sanitary, durable and beautiful. Whenever you need a transparent partition, a strong, cleanly barrier, follow your architect's superior judgment in such matters and install a brass railing.

Polished brass harmonizes with any color-scheme, but it is not the only finish obtainable. The Newman Manufacturing Co., of Cincinnati, is now installing statuary bronze railings in the new Stanley theatre of Philadelphia. All other fixtures in the Stanley are in perfect accord with the railings, including the poster and photograph frames being made by the same company. Any standard finish can be had.

Ascher Bros.' Auditorium theatre (Dayton, Ohio) has been beautified with plush-covered railings. Other houses prefer oxidized brass or copper.

You can't install too many brass railings if you have an eye to the comfort and safety of your patrons.

Bijou in Fond du Lac to Be Remodelled

PLANS just announced for the re-decoration of the Bijou theatre, Fond du Lac, Wis., will make that popular amusement place one of the handsomest in Wisconsin. Manager F. R. Smith has worked out his plans with a view of adding to the pleasure and comfort of his patrons, and when the work is completed the Bijou will not only be beautiful but it will have an improved ventilating and lighting system.

The Bijou will close on January 9 in order that these changes may be made, and it is estimated that from three weeks to four weeks' time will be required for the transformation. In the event it seems desirable to speed up the work, night crews will be employed to put the job over.

The decorative scheme is to be worked out in a three-tone grey—a light grey, a medium and a dark grey being used. Both ceiling and walls are to be done in stucco. All light wires are to be placed in conduits buried in the walls, while the steam pipes are to be hidden from view in the base boards.

The ceiling effect is to be worked out in the form of three great domes, each of which will have lights of four different colors, to be blended or used separately as occasion may require. The walls and ceilings are to be paneled and the high lights brought out in silver.

A new plush curtain worked by automatic machinery will be installed. The curtain will be under control of the operator and will part in the center, the stage lights being turned out as the curtain opens and turned on as it closes at the end of the performance.

The lobby will be redecorated and beautified to correspond with the handsome interior.

The ventilation of the Bijou will be improved by the installation of a ventilator in the roof from which a ventilating flue will project ten feet above the roof. Both blower and suction fans will be installed. These with these two large fans now in operation in the rear of the theatre will give a complete ventilating system.

The stucco work will be done by the Decorating Supply Co. of Chicago and the decorations by the Thomsen Decorating Co. of this city. The wiring will be done by Frank Dufrane, Fond du Lac.

Equipment Operating— Projection Questions Answered

The Incandescent Lamp for Stereopticon Service

Describing the Theory and Principles of Silde Projection

Several months ago we published a series of articles on the subject of Incandescent projection. The author was Mr. H. F. Barnes, who is also the author of the present series, which originally appeared in one of the Bulletins of the Edison Lamp Works.

Mr. Barnes has the happy faculty of combining technical knowledge to practical application, and what is of even greater importance, of stating it in simple, easily understandable language.

Perhaps the most simple example and most familiar to us all concerning controlled projected light, is that found in the use of an ordinary reading or burning glass. When Uncle John lights his pipe with this glass, he is taking a large number of the sun rays and concentrating them, bending them, condensing them, to a small point. Such a lens or glass is known as a condensing lens and receives its name from the fact that it condenses light rays.

A condenser is somewhat analogous to a tin funnel. If we had an electric fan and placed a funnel in front of it so as to catch a portion of the breeze, the air would probably strike the sides of the funnel and be condensed and pushed out through the small end as a concentrated stream of air, or, if we were to place the funnel in the stream of water issuing from a hose nozzle the spray of water would be caught by the sides of the funnel, condensed and squirted out through the small end in a concentrated stream.

Now with our burning glass we are doing just this. It is a poor rule, however, that will not work both ways, and in practically all projection we do the opposite from what Uncle John did when he lit his pipe. In his case he was concentrating a large number of rays to a point—in projection we reverse the process, take a concentrated source of light (as near a point as we can get it), place a condensing lens in front of the light source, and then all the rays falling upon the lens are sent out in a given direction and can be accurately controlled.

Let us take a further example: when a phonograph record is made, the performer or artist sings, talks, or plays, so that a majority of the sound will enter the mouth of a large horn and be so condensed, concentrated that it will actuate a diaphragm—which in turn records the vibrations, by the aid of a sharp needle, upon a record.

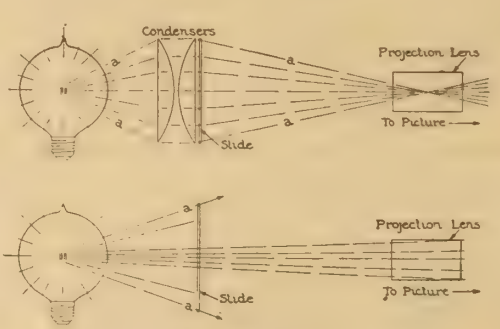
Now, in reversing this—a horn must be used to direct the sounds—without a horn, the vibrations received upon the diaphragm can barely be heard. The horn, however, takes these vibrations— coming as they do from a small concentrated source—and collects as many as possible, and directs them in the manner wished.

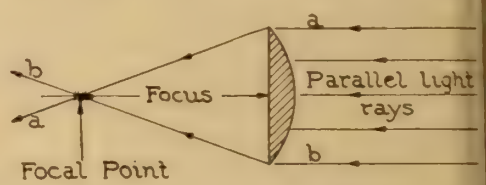
So with a lamp. It gives off light in all directions, but with the aid of a condensing or directing lens placed in front of it a large number of rays of light are collected, and directed in the manner wished. The condensing lens serves the same purpose with light as the horn does with the phonograph.

Let us consider briefly, the action of a simple lens—how does it work? An ordinary piece of window glass does not serve as a lens—and why? Because the light passes through it in a straight line. When we look at an object through the window, we see that object exactly as it is. However, we have oftentimes noticed that at certain places in the window—which we call flaws in the glass—objects may appear distorted—longer, shorter than they really are. What has happened in this case? Evidently, the rays in this case do not pass in straight lines —they have been bent—and bent by a change in the surface of the glass—from two parallel surfaces to perhaps one parallel, the other slightly curved.

This is lens action, pure and simple. Any piece of glass which does not have parallel surfaces will bend a ray of light.

Why, even then, is a lens used? Why not place a lamp directly behind the slide and do away with the condensing lens?





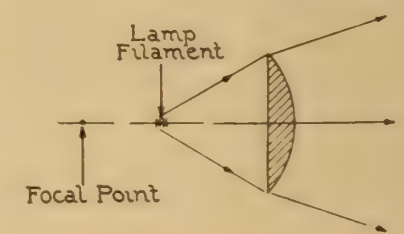


Fig. 4

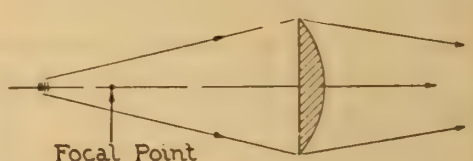
In the Upper Diagram Where the Condensers Are Shown as Used in Normal Practice, the Rays a-a Coming from Lamp, Are Bent, Pass through the Slide and subsequently through the Projection Lens. When, however, the condensers are removed, the rays a-a, while passing through the slide, are not bent and consequently do not pass through the projection lens, and are not put upon the screen. In the latter case, the projection lens will put only the central section of the slide on the screen, since only rays from the center of the slide pass through the lens

With no condenser (see illustration) only a very small percentage of the rays from the lamp would enter the projection lens; and as they come from the center of the picture, that alone would show on the screen. With a condensing lens in place those rays (a-a) are bent so that they do enter the projection lens—the amount of light picked up is thereby increased, and if the condensing lens is large enough, the whole slide is illuminated, and shown on the screen. Without the condenser the whole slide is illuminated of course, but as explained, only a small portion of these rays enter the pro-



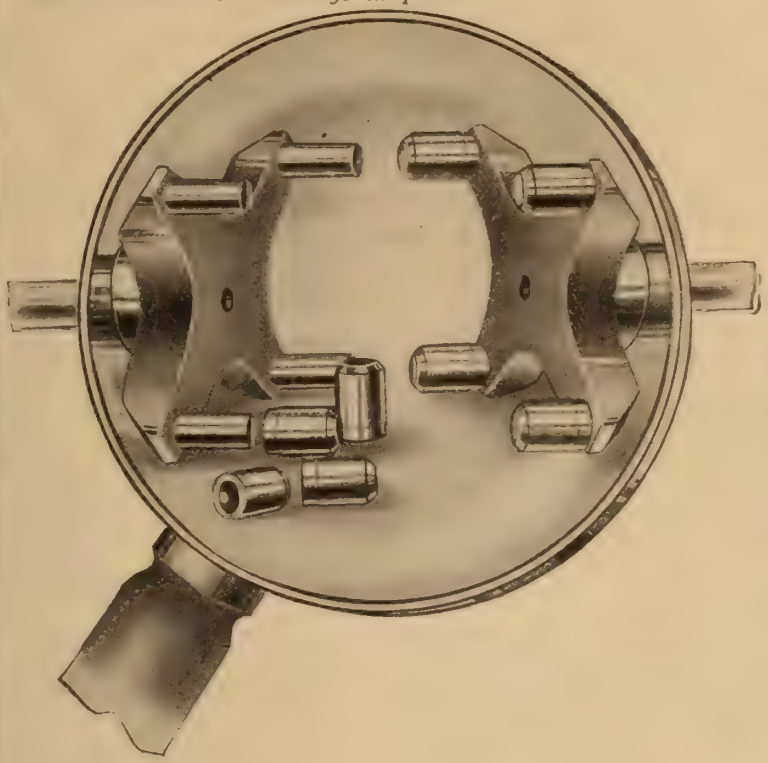


Fig. 5

As Shown in the Upper Diagram, When Parallel Light Rays Fall upon the Surface of a Convex Condenser, They Will Converge at a Point on the Opposite Side, Known as the Focal Point. The distance from this point to the condenser is known as the focus of the condenser. When a filament is placed at the focal point, the rays of light falling upon the condenser, will be sent out in parallel lines. When, however, as shown in the middle diagram, the lamp filament is placed ahead of the focal point, the light rays coming through the condenser, will diverge; while on the other hand, if it is placed behind the focal point, the lamp rays coming through the condenser will converge

POWER'S ROLLER PIN INTERMITTENT MOVEMENT

Greatest Improvement on Projectors in Ten Years

Magnified views of the roller pin with and without roller bearings in place.

The four pins are fitted with oil tempered steel sleeves which form a roller contact with the cam, thus reducing frictional wear to a minimum. Power's Roller Pin Intermittent Movement is Noiseless in Operation.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

The device first in importance, it seems to us, is the Roller Pin Movement. This is different from the former Power's cam-and-pin movement in that the pin bearings rotate upon the pins. That is, sleeves of highly polished steel are slipped over the pins of the pin-cross—the latter having been made smaller in diameter than those now used—and held in place by a disc of steel on the cam. The oil reaching under these rotatable sleeves forms a cushion, and in so doing reduces much of the noise and wear that might otherwise be caused by the impact of the cam on the pins. Naturally in a movement of this kind, where much depends on the film of oil between the bearing surfaces, it is highly important that the projectionist keep the mechanism well oiled at all times.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

An extremely important change has been made in the intermittent movement itself. This change does not alter the form of the movement, but makes for greater efficiency. The steel cross pins which engage with the cam have been reduced in diameter, and the difference has been made up by placing over each of them an oil tempered steel roller. In order to secure absolute accuracy of movement these little rollers are, after being tempered, ground both inside and out. In order to retain these rollers on the pins of the cross, a thin steel flange has been added to the actuating cam, the same being secured to its outer surface by means of four screws.

jection lens. Putting in the proper condenser bends all the rays so that they pass through the slide and enter the projection lens.

When parallel rays strike the surface of a simple lens that point on the opposite side of the lens at which the rays meet, is known as the "focal point." The "focus" of a lens is the distance from the focal point to the lens itself. In reality, it is the distance from the focal point to the optical center of the lens, which is a point within the glass itself.

Wants Data on Projection Room

L. E., Shelbyville, Indiana, writes: Please answer the following questions. We are building a theatre, the distance from booth to curtain is 140 feet. What size picture would be best to show and how much larger should the screen be than the picture?

We are wiring the booth with a threewire system. What size wire should we use? We expect to use No. 4. Is this sufficient or should we use No. 2?

We expect to use a generator. Please advise us whether it would be best to use a single or three phase and what amperage and voltage would you recommend?

Reply: Although you give us no floor plan to indicate the shape of your theatre and the seating arrangements we would judge that a 13 x 15½ ft. screen would be plenty large enough. Whatever size you decide on don't select one too large. There is a certain clique of theatre managers who believe in a super-large screen sometimes running to 24 ft. In a house like the Capitol in New York City with its balcony 200 feet away from the screen it is necessary to have a monster screen but otherwise there is every reason why they should be discountenanced. The screen should be 10 inches wider than the picture.

No. 4 wire is large enough to handle anything you would be called on to use in the projection room.

If you have three phase current available then use it by all means. Motor generator sets are supplied with motors of one, two or three phases but the three phase is preferable to the single phase because of its lower cost, its higher efficiency and the fact that the power company prefers to keep the regulation of its system as good as possible. With a motor operating on one side of a three phase system there is apt to be trouble from unbalancing.

You would want to get the 70 ampere motor generator set. This will allow you to draw that current if you need it. Whether you will or not will depend on several things; amongst them being the skill of your projectionist, the film itself and the condition of the screen. Don't worry about the voltage of the generator. Leave that to the manufacturers. The motor generator set you want is the one made for motion picture work and the voltage characteristic is such that when you adjust the set for the right current the voltage will take care of itself.

Splicing Films with Odd Frame Lines

From S. B., Crete, Neb., comes this query: I am enclosing two pieces of film which I am positive cannot be patched in such a way as to absolutely prevent a misframe. However, our other projectionist says that in a former issue of the News there was explained a method by which it may be done. If so will you please advise me. We have a Baird machine and by framing one piece of film I find it impossible to frame the other without moving the framer.

Answer: One of your pieces of film has its frame line come in the center of the perforation and the other has its line come between two perforations. It is an absolute impossibility to patch these two pieces so that the strip will remain in frame without adjustment. A few cameras still have the old non-standard frame line but they are gradually being replaced by standard instruments.

Name Plate on Generator Bothers Him

J. A., Hawaii, writes: In your Projection Department there has been running a series of lessons on Elementary Electricity. I have taken great pleasure in reading and studying them. I would like to have you explain a few questions regarding my generator. I have an Allis Chalmers direct-current generator on which is attached a plate which reads as follows:

D. C. Generator Continuous Duty.
Serial No. 3K6089.2
K. W—4. R.P.M.—1800. Volts. No Load —116
Amperes 33.3. Volts full load—120
Temp-rise, full load continuous winding—40°C. Comm.—45°C.
25% Overload—2 hrs.—Windings—55°C Comm. 60°C.

I do not understand the last two lines having to do with temperatures.

I have also noticed that there are three wires leading from the generator. I am quite sure they are positive, negative, and neutral, but as there are no marks to indicate which is positive and negative how am I to know? After finding this out to which lead should the field rheostat be connected to regulate the voltage? I have looked over the wiring diagram for a 35 amp. outfit manufactured by the G-E Co., and I noticed that the field rheostat is always connected to the positive wire. Does this apply to all makes of generators.

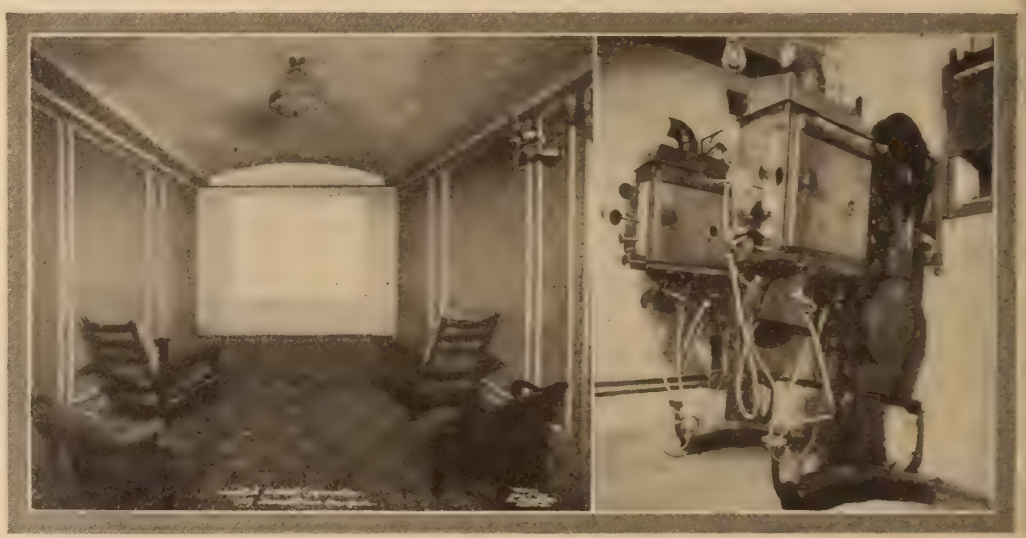
Reply: The name plate of your generator states that when you run the machine at full load for a long time (continuously) the temperature rise in the windings should not rise more than 40°C above room temperature and that the commutator should not get warmer than 45°C above the same standard. With a 25% overload for 2 hours the machine will naturally run still warmer but this, according to the name plate, should not become more than 55°C and 60°C respectively for windings and commutators. If these figures are exceeded something is wrong.

As you know a d. c. generator will rotate in either direction according to the disposition of the connecting wires. As received from the factory these machines are connected to rotate counter-clockwise when viewed from the pulley-end. To accomplish this the field connection is usually carried to the positive wire. If it is changed to the negative the rotation will be changed about.

If the field terminals are reversed the direction of rotation will be reversed, but otherwise there will be no difference in the general operation.

Get a direct current ammeter. The terminals will be marked plus and minus. Put the wires on either way, just touching one terminal with one wire. If the ammeter registers the wire on the plus terminal is plus, but if the needle on the meter tends to go backwards you have the polarity reversed.

Exchange of United Artists Is Simplexized



Among the prominent distributing companies' exchanges, located in the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh Avenue, is that of the United Artists CCorporation. This exchange, located on the ninth floor of the world's busiest film building, is that through which Mary Pickford's, Charlie Chaplin's, Douglas Fairbank's and D. W. Griffith's productions are released and distributed.

One of the features connected with this establishment is the reviewing room. This room, which is 12 feet wide by 25 feet long, is finished in old rose with artistic panelling on the walls, while the concave ceiling, lighted with indirect domes.

A group of comfortable chairs are included in the furnishings of this splendid little reviewing room, which boasts of perfect projection upon a 6 x 8 white plaster screen which is located at the extreme end of the room.

A most artistic border surrounds the picture screen, giving the exhibition a real theatrical atmosphere. It is here that private screenings are staged of all United Artists' products, for the personal attention of Mr. Hiram Abrams, the president of the organization.

The projection room connected with this reviewing room is operated under the direction of Mr. Al Kaufman, a well-known New York City projectionist, whose activities during three years' service with D. W. Griffith are well known in projection circles. In this projection room are installed two Type "S" Simplex Projectors with motor-driven attachments.

What the Cameraman Needs to Advance in His Profession

A Frank Discussion of the Subject by a Veteran Cinematographer

BY ALVIN WYCKOFF

I have often been asked why it is that seemingly very few cameramen ever rise any higher in the film profession than their position as cameramen—why they, like many in other departments, do not more often advance to a directorship.

The principal reason, which I can give, based on my observation during my term of experience in the profession, is that cameramen as a rule are apt to be too easily satisfied with themselves and are probably too prone to rest upon their laurels. Another great fault of which a cameraman must beware and which will greatly hamper his progress, is a seeming lack of desire on his part to cooperate with the directors and others in the company. This has had a great deal to do with keeping cameramen down, and is one of the principal reasons why many cameramen have not gone to the front as fast as men in other departments.

When a film corporation looks around for a new director, the most logical man to fill that position should be a cameraman, because, if he is a successful cameraman, he has already mastered many of the essentials of good directorship. For instance, if he is a good cameraman, his advice is sought by the scenario writer before the latter will attempt to write into his story some pet effect which he is not certain can be done, and whether or not this effect will be used generally rests upon the cameraman's advice and the manner in which he illustrates the effect.

Again, the technical director often calls the cameraman into a conference to get his ideas on certain problems in the construction of settings or certain color effects to be used in those settings. The electrical department confers with him regarding the necessary and special lightings for a setting and the wardrobe department gets his opinion concerning the photographic value of certain colors in costumes and fabrics. Conscientious actors are continually asking the cameraman to advise them regarding make-up, the colors they should use and in what way they will appear to the best advantage on the screen with regard to composition, lightings, etc. The director will invariably send him out to look up locations that will be suitable for certain periods or locales of the story, and will depend, in many cases, absolutely upon his ideas as to composition. Very often he is called upon to correct certain matters in the laboratory and to make suggestions regarding the printing and developing of films, etc., in order to insure the best results.

Thus, it will be readily seen how extensive is the cameraman's knowledge of the various branches of film production and why he is, of all men, one of the most logical choices for the position of director.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Alvin Wyckoff, member of the American Society of Cinematographers, director of photography at the Lasky Studio and who has photographed every Cecil B. deMille production from the earliest to the latest, contributes this article on a subject of extraordinary interest to the cameraman.

Alvin Wyckoff, supervisor of cinematography of the Lasky studio

In a great many instances, however, the successful cameraman has allowed himself to become somewhat of an egotist because of the value and constant need of his advice on the part of other departments in order to make for the betterment of the picture and has become inflated, as it were, with the idea of his own importance and thus has built around him with his own hands, the fence that has kept him shut in and prevented him from advancing. This kind of a cameraman will perhaps be responsible for splendid photography in a production and will receive praise for it, but will then lie back on his laurels, puff out his chest and dream of how great he is and how necessary he is and how the world cannot get along without him. That is the sort of stuff that stunts ambition and spoils his chances of advancement. The wise cameraman will, on the other hand, look at the finished production from a critical standpoint, finding the faults in his work, disregarding the praise that comes to him and by studying and remembering the faults, try to correct them in his succeeding pictures.

Logically, a good cameraman should be promoted and should be able to advance, either to the position of assistant to a very successful director or producer, or to the position of director, when he could first be entrusted with a small picture until he is able to build himself higher. A good cameraman who has become a director could thus be in a position to supervise the work of a cameraman who is not so successful and through his knowledge and cooperation, build up the latter until he, in turn, is ready to advance.

The cameraman should bear in mind at all times that cooperation with his director is one of the greatest requisites to the success of a production. There are, among some of the present-day directors, a few very temperamental, nervous individuals. In some instances this is entirely justified for there are actors who are exceedingly exasperating, and also many people in other departments, all of whose shortcomings the director must tolerate and bear with. But because there are so many things to upset a director, it is all the more imperative that the cameraman should cause him no worry, trouble or grief whatsoever. There are cases, however, where the cameraman has failed to cooperate properly and has even taken a false stand and thus added greatly to the director's worries. I have known of actual instances where the director was on location with a large number of extra people, when the cameraman refused to attempt to photograph a scene, because, in his judgment, he thought the light was too poor. This is an instance where cooperation is positively necessary. Even if he does think the light is too poor, he should make a try for the shot, if only to cooperate with the director and comply with his wishes. In any event he can do no harm by such a course, and can spoil nothing but a few feet of film, which represents a very, very small cost, whereas, if he should chance to be successful in getting something, he will have saved the company a great many dollars.

It is the paramount duty of every cameraman to endeavor in every possible manner to give a director anything that he asks for, without argument and with the greatest show of enthusiasm that he is capable of displaying. He must remember that although he is a very important and necessary agent in the work of film production, that there are others. The presentation or direction of the story or picture is of course most important and photography, though important, is secondary. It will perhaps sound strange, but it is nevertheless a fact that the acid test of good photography is photography which is so excellent and so good that the audience in watching the story on the screen do not even think of the photography. Everything must be secondary to the actual presentation and the photography, if too prominent or too unusual, will attract too much attention and thus divert the minds of the audience from the story and will cause an interruption or break in the thread of plot and theme. After the story has been viewed and enjoyed by the audience, then, if the photography has been excellent, this fact will come naturally to their minds.

The director depends a great deal upon the cameraman's advice and the latter should give this freely and faithfully and without allowing such dependence to give him a false sense of his own importance. In the projection room at the end of the day, while viewing the daily takes, the director will often depend absolutely upon the cameraman to tell him when the film is at fault. Some directors do not know when the scene is out of focus, some cannot tell whether the film is over or underexposed and whether the fault lies in the laboratory work or in some other stage of the work. There have been unscrupulous cameramen, who in such cases have led the director to believe that the fault lay with the laboratory or some other department, when the fault was really their own. Such a cameraman as that is a hypocrite who is too proud or too vain ever to see or admit his own faults, and will never advance to a directorship, inasmuch, as explained before, a cameraman, to advance, instead of disregarding his faults, must study them and strive to prevent the recurrence of mistakes.

Before he can advance to a directorship, a cameraman must first become a good cameraman, and so extensive is the scope of this art that he must devote a great deal of his time to study, experimental work, etc. The midnight oil is one of the greatest assets of any cameraman, if diligently burned, and joy rides and other ultra-human joys which prevent him from devoting the proper time to a study of an interest in his work may be his ruination, or at least may form a bar to his progress and advancement to a high position.

When a cameraman has reached the point where he thinks he has learned all there is to be learned about his profession and that no one can teach him anything or tell him anything to his advantage, or offer a good suggestion, then it is time that he resign his position and ask for a job as rack boy in some laboratory and start all over again, for he can never master the entire knowledge of his profession, and such self-satisfaction is dangerous. What he must learn is endless and so deep that no bottom can be found.

The cameraman, if he heeds and carefully considers these points, can advance. In fact, there are already a few cameramen who have become directors and all are making evcellent pictures and have a viewpoint that the other directors may not possess. One of our present screen directors, who has the reputation of being one of the best in the profession, made his start as a cameraman and advanced from that position to a directorship. What one can do many can do!

Winkler, cut sheet maker; Hyman Kraft, head of the New York Concert League; Jules Daiber, manager of Rosa Raisa; Charles Wagner (manager of John McCormack), and many, many others.

News Special Plans

During the conference, the NEWS will appear with some special articles of interest, and will be given to the delegates at the Hotel Astor.

Immediately following the conference, the full news, addresses, etc., will be published in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. It will be a special musical issue. It will be dated February 7, and will be in the mails February 3. It will close on January 25 for all articles, advertising, etc. Watch for it.

"The Music Trades" Says

One of the leading publications of the musical instrument and publishers—The Music Trades—in its issue of January 1 devotes its entire front page to an article about the Picture Musical Conference. Signed by its editor, the article is a call to the musical trades to co-operate with the motion picture industry for the good of the new art.

This article is read by practically every manufacturer of pianos, playerpianos, phonographs, records, string instruments, accessories, and by practically every publisher of music, etc. Also it is read by the foremost dealers in music across the country.

In part, the Music Trades says:

"A National movement has been started to enlarge the scope and improve the character of music in the movie houses. This movement has taken concrete form in the shape of a convention which is to be held on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, January 24, 25, 26, at the Astor Hotel, New York, under the auspices of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, one of the most able and important publications in the moving picture industry. The convention will be attended by managers, musicians, composers, directors of films. A number of leading members of the musical industries have already intimated their intention of being present."

"It is not alone the importance of music in the movie business, but the great opportunity which will be offered to the manufacturers and dealers in musical instruments of all kinds, when those engaged in the production and diserto in most of the houses, and which will naturally necessitate enlarged orchestras and a

That the campaign for better music in motion-picture theatres, conducted by Charles D. Isaacson through the columns of the Motion Picture News, has struck a responsive chord not only in the United States but also abroad is evinced in the following letter to Mr. Isaacson from Albert Albon Hess, manager of the Hollandasche Handelsonderneming Cinematographie, the Hague, Holland. Mr. Hess writes:

CONFERENCE OF MUSICAL AND MOTION PICTURE INTERESTS

Hotel Astor Headquarters

far better type of musical instrument than has been generally employed.

"Here is a splendid opportunity. We would suggest that those who are interested should communicate with Mr. Charles D. Isaacson, who is the editor of the Music Department in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, whose editorial offices are at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, and express their willingness to be present at the various sessions of the convention, where they will meet not only those whom we have already mentioned, but many of the grand opera and symphonic musicians, composers, conductors, members of the musical unions, also members of the various musical organizations. They will also have an opportunity, during the discussions, to express their own views and thus aid the movement, which cannot but result in great benefit to those who publish music or sell it, to those who manufacture pianos, playerpianos, organs, band instruments—in fact, this national movement opens up a field to all those engaged in the musical industries, of vast proportions. Consequently, co-operation with the moving picture people should be wholehearted.

"There are to-day, at a modest calculation, at least fourteen thousand movie houses, of which over 90 per cent are as yet not properly supplied with musical instruments and with music, which would greatly enhance the value of the films they show, and so bring in a greater revenue than they now have. The best proof of what good music means is afforded by the leading houses in this city and other cities, which are crowded daily during the entire period of the performances. Most of these houses, where they give us a higher class of films, are enabled to charge higher prices than they otherwise could, because they have found it positively paid to employ symphony orchestras.

"Among the pioneers in this regard in New York are Mr. Rothafel, of the Capitol theatre, and Mr. Hugo Riesenfeld, of the Rivoli and Rialto. These enterprising men, fully appreciating the value of music, have seen their endeavors in this direction, which were at first almost ridiculed, bring them a clientele which is surprising both in quality and quantity. Their houses are always crowded.

"For these various reasons we sincerely trust that our principal houses will be at least represented at the coming convention of the moving picture men this month, and that they will aid the enterprising publishers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, who have been active in bringing the convention about and which already promises to be one of the most successful meeting of the kind for the furtherance of a great cause ever held in this country."

Dear Editor:

I have been advised by Mr. M. Winkler to see you in reference to the Convention of Movie Theatre Musicians in which I am interested. If you have seen any copies of The Observer within the last two years, you will have seen that I have been making propaganda for community opera. As the movie theatres will in time to come be inclined to introduce one act operas of a practical nature, I feel that I may get much information for an article in The Observer from the matter coming up at this convention.

J. VAN BROEKHOVEN,
New York.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I quite appreciate the desirability and importance of cooperation between the motion picture industry and musicians, and in accordance with your request, shall be pleased to say a few words, a very few, at the conference to be held in New York on January 24-26.

OTTO H. KAHN,
New York City.

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I would like to enroll in the new Music Exchange of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I think your new department is very interesting, and what you say will do a great deal of good. I have studied organ a long time and would like to take up picture work. I am a graduate of the Rochester Conservatory of Music under George B. Penny, and am an associate member of The American Guild of Organists. I studied nearly two years with the late Mr. Edward Johnston when he was in Cornell. Last winter I did some special work under Mr. Sidney Steinheimer in New York preparing to play for moving pictures. I took about fifty lessons and worked up quite a repertoire of suitable music. If you know of any position that would be suitable for me I would appreciate it very much if you would let me know. I would prefer a small theatre in a residential suburb of some city where I could go on studying.

MISS EDNA STEBBINS,
Ithaca, N. Y.

What About the Local Union?

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am very much interested in the work you have done for motion pictures. We are running or attempting to run a metropolitan presentation of the best pictures, but we have our troubles with the music. There are no very competent musicians in Lawrence, and the local union refuses to allow any local musicians from any other town or city to come in here. The consequence is that we have to put up with whatever we can get locally. In spite of this we are going fairly well, but I want to do better. Our orchestra consists of seven pieces, drum, cornet, trombone, clarinet, two violins and a piano. The reason for the assortment is that these are the best players I can pick up, but I intend to enlarge the orchestra shortly if competent players can be obtained.

With best wishes for your success,

ANDREW COBE,
Manager,

West Englewood Theatre Chicago, Ill.

Ascher's beautiful West Englewood theatre on 63d street and Ashland ave., was to be formally opened to the public on the night of December 30th.

The West Englewood theatre, which is the newest link to Ascher's new large chain of motion picture theatres will present Ascher's unified program, comprising of photo-play master pictures, novelty features, five high class vaudeville acts culled from the best of European and American varieties, gorgeous scenic and lighting effects designed to give a color harmony to all settings and last but not least, superb musical interpretations.

Everything in the West Englewood theatre is elegant. The main lobby, upon entering, impresses one with its dignified simplicity. The entire width of the theatre, 150 feet, is uninterrupted. To the right and left of the main floor foyer are beautiful staircases leading to a large foyer on the mezzanine floor, staircases lead from the mezzanine floor to the balcony to another large lobby. The lobbies on the mezzanine and balcony floors are in the nature of lounges. Large easy chairs with tall reading lamps next to them, inviting davenports, appeal to the eye as well as to the physical comforts of the patrons. The standing lamps with their silk shades and the side bracket lamps of parchment, hand painted with color and design blend in harmony with the theatre decoration.

The West Englewood theatre has three thousand seats, 1700 on the main floor and 1300 on the mezzanine and balcony. All of them are upholstered in heavy leather. The floors are heavily carpeted with carpet that feel inches thick when one treads upon it.

A $50,000 heating and ventilating system has been installed in the theatre, insuring a constant flow of pure and tempered air. The air is washed, cooled and dried, and distributed throughout the theatre at the rate of 60,000 cubic feet per minute.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

An All American Film Line-up.

IN a resume of the year's best pictures it is our privilege to take a leaf from Walter Camp, Yale's celebrated football mentor, and present an All American team after the manner of his annual selection from the various colleges. While Dr. Camp does not hold himself in the highest authority yet his judgment of picking the star football players is held supreme by his contemporaries and the college world in general. We do not claim to be the highest authority in the selection of the year's best pictures. We only claim that our judgment is in keeping with public opinion. We take pride in the fact that our selections are supported by many of our contemporaries, picturegoers and exhibitors.

It is not our intention to list the best box-office attractions to the exclusion of those which haven't turned over a penny. In doing so we would be compelled to name offerings of average caliber which depend for their patronage upon the personality of the stars. We shall give credit to those pictures which in our judgment have enough artistic values to stand out conspicuously. In other words they must have full and complete values such as good plot material, clearly defined characterization and containing elements which appeal to every type of patron.

They must be MOVING pictures which captivate an audience for spontaneity of action and forceful interpretation. In a word they must have everything—excellent story, direction and genuine picture ingredients.

That the screen is moving FORWARD cannot be disputed in the thirty-three attractions which compose the three teams. While some of these are proving great box-office magnets, others have not been genuinely appreciated, which may be due to the fact that they are far advanced of their time. It is our privilege to give credit where credit is due. We are not looking through a glass darkly. This test is conducted through an elimination process. Comparisons and retrospections have provided the sole means of sitting in high judgment. We have endeavored to keep from showing favoritism toward any one company's products. Fair Play is the keynote of this article. We take great pleasure in presenting

First Team

"Humoresque"—(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)
"Way Down East"—(D. W. Griffith—United Artists)
"The River's End"—(Neilan-First National)
"Over the Hill"—(Fox)
"The Mark of Zorro"—(United Artists)
"Earthbound"—(Goldwyn)
"Midsummer Madness"—(Paramount)
"Passion"—(First National)
"The Last of the Mohicans"—(Tourneur-Asso. Producers)
"Kismet"—(Robertson-Cole)
"The Devil's Pass Key"—(Universal)

Second Team

"Scratch My Back"—(Goldwyn)
"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"—(Paramount-Artcraft)
"The Forbidden Thing"—(Dwan-Asso. Producers)
"The Great Redeemer"—(Metro)
"The Jack-Knife Man"—(Vidor-First National)
"Why Change Your Wife"—(Paramount)
"The Mollycoddle"—(United Artists)
"Madame X"—(Goldwyn)
"The U. P. Trail"—(Hampton-Hodkinson)
"The Servant in the House"—(Film Booking Office)
"Behind the Door"—(Ince-Paramount)

Third Team

"The Mutiny of the Elsinore"—(Metro)
"Go and Get It"—(Neilan-First National)
"The Sin That Was His"—(Selznick)
"Dead Men Tell No Tales"—(Vitagraph)
"On With the Dance"—(Paramount-Artcraft)
"The Right of Way"—(Metro)
"While New York Sleeps"—(Fox)
"The Devil's Garden"—(First National)
"The Copperhead"—(Paramount-Artcraft)
"It's a Great Life"—(Goldwyn)
"Passers By"—(Blackton-Pathe)

These teams are not presented in the order of their excellence. They have been shuffled like the cards in a deck. The reader may notice that each team is splendidly balanced—that a note of variety is well emphasized in the first team. It carries spiritual, spectacular, homespun, melodramatic, human, humorous, romantic qualities which should appeal to everyone. Those in search of tremendous heart interest can find it in "Humoresque;" those who are partial to exhilarating comedy can turn to "The Mark of Zorro;" those who cater to thrills will certainly find it in Griffith's great climax in "Way Down East," or in Tourneur's massacre in "The Last of the Mohicans." The domestic drama is represented in "Midsummer Madness;" the spiritual drama is found in "Earthbound"; the human, heart-throb has its place in "Over the Hill." We could continue giving emphasis to this note of variety.

With "Way Down East" holding down the pivotal position, bulwarked by such spectacles as "Passion" and "Kismet," with "Humoresque" and "Midsummer Madness" providing strong support—these pictures can sweep down all opposition, so that William Fox would score a touchdown with "Over the Hill" and plant his product squarely on the hearth. Or Marshall Neilan with a vigorous drive would be able to distance his rivals with "The River's End" under his arm. "The Devil's Pass Key" cannot be caught in a clear field and "Earthbound" is like a shadow on offense. "The Last of the Mohicans" resembles the Carlisle Indians, so perfect is the team play.

It is perfectly proper to endow these pictures with personalities. All possess sound hearts, red corpuscles and some have spirits. One of them, "Earthbound," has departed this life but its soul goes marching on.

There is scarcely a shade's difference between the first team and the others in point of artistic virtues. The spiritual quality of the second team is exceptionally prominent. "The Great Redeemer," "The Jack-Knife Man" (considered by many as far advanced of its time), "The Forbidden Thing," and "The Servant in the House," these vibrate with a strong spiritual force. Sex magnetism is discovered in "Why Change Your Wife." 'Behind the Door," "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde," and "The Mollycoddle" are thoroughly alive—keen for the chase and the pleasure of being alive.

The third team may be said to be the healthiest of all. The pictures which compose it have rugged constitutions. Most of them are able to take punishment from rival attractions without losing an ounce of energy. And they can administer some vital shocks in self-defense. Such vigorous personalities as "While New York Sleeps," "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," "The Devil's Garden," and "Dead Men Tell No Tales," unquestionably inspire respect. What an admirable battle any one of these teams could offer! Coached by such names as Griffith, Ince, Neilan, Dwan, Fitzmaurice, Tourneur, Stroheim, Vidor, Hunter, De Mille, Millard, Borzage, Robertson, Hampton, Olcott, and others of sound ability, they outclass anything presented on the film gridiron.

Honorable mention must be given to a representative class, some of which are conspicuous for their box-office values, others for noteworthy performances, while all possess qualities which spell entertainment. Included in this number are "Behold My Wife"—(Paramount); "In the Heart of a Fool"—(First National); "The Fortune Teller"—(Robertson-Cole); "Sex"—(Read-Hodkinson); "The Sage Brusher" — (Hodkinson); "Pollyanna" — (United Artists); "In Old Kentucky"—(First National); "Heliotrope"—(Cosmopolitan-Paramount); "The Life of the Party"—(Paramount); "Dinty"—(Neilan-First National); "Smilin' All the Way"—(Schwab); "Honest Hutch"—(Goldwyn); "Jes Call Me Jim"—(Goldwyn); "The Untamed"—(Fox); "The Woman In the Suitcase"—(Ince-Paramount); "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"—(Vitagraph); "The Cradle of Courage"—(Paramount); "The Toll Gate"—(Paramount); "The Broadway Bubble" — (Vitagraph); "Alias Jimmy Valentine"—(Metro); "Nomads of the North"—(First National); "Isobel, or the Trail's End"—(Geo. Davis-Carewe); "Once to Every Woman" (Universal);" "Trumpet Island"—(Vitagraph); "The Man Who Lost Homself"—(Selznick); "You Never Can Tell"—(Realart); "Out of the Dust"—(Apex); "39 East"—(Realart); "Hairpins"—(Ince-Paramount); "Love Madness"—(Read-Hodkinson); "A Chorus Girl's Romance"—(Metro); "Whispering Devils"—(Equity); "If I Were King"—(Fox); "Sick Abed"—(Paramount); "Homer Comes Home"—(Ince-Paramount); "A Broadway Cowboy"—(Hampton-Pathe); "The Love Expert"—(First National); "In Search of a Sinner"—(First National); "The Virgin of Stamboul"—(Universal); "Excuse My Dust"—(Paramount); "Always Audacious"—(Paramount); "Overland Red"—(Universal); "The Luck of the Irish"—(Mayflower-Realart); "The Woman in Room 13"—(Goldwyn); "The Deep Purple"—(Realart); "The City of Masks"—(Paramount); "The White Moll"—(Fox); "The Greatest Question"—(Griffith-First National); "One Hour Before Dawn" — (Hampton-Pathe); "Half a Chance"—(Hampton-Pathe); "Old Lady 31"—(Metro); "Honeymoon Ranch"—(Lubin); "Something to Think About"—(De Mille-Paramount); "Treasure Island"—(Paramount); "Below the Surface" — (Ince-Paramount); "Romance" — (United Artists); "When the Clouds Roll By"—(United Artists); "The Great Air Robbery"—(Universal); "The Devil to Pay"—(Brunton-Pathe); "The Testing Block"—(Paramount); "Dice of Destiny"—(Hampton-Pathe); "The Penalty"—(Goldwyn); "Her Elephant Man"—(Fox); "Peaceful Valley"—(First National); "Alarm Clock Andy"—(Ince-Paramount); "The Love Flower"—(Griffith-United Artists); "The White Circle"—(Paramount); "The Right to Love"—(Paramount); "Huckleberry Finn"—(Paramount); "A Man There Was"—(Swedish Biograph); "The Sporting Duchess"—(Vitagraph); "Haunting Shadows"—(Robertson-Cole); "Fighting Cressy"—(Hampton-Pathe); and "Madonnas and Men"—(Jans).

In making a classification of the best westerns, rurals, farce-comedies, adventures, romances and human interest attractions we would list them as follows: Western: "The U. P. Trail"—(Hodkinson); "Out of the Dust"—(Apex); "Honeymoon Ranch"—(Lupin); "The Testing Block"—(Paramount); "The Untamed"—(Fox); "Overland Red"—(Universal); "The Cradle of Courage"—(Paramount); "The Toll Gate"—(Paramount); "The Sage Brusher"—(Hodkinson); "3 Gold Coins"—(Fox).

The "rurals" include "Peaceful Valley"—(First National); "Way Down East"—(Griffith); "Down Home"—(Hodkinson); "Homer Comes Home"—(Ince-Paramount); and "The Jucklins"—(Paramount).

The outstanding farce comedies are "Scratch My Back"—(Goldwyn); "It's a Great Life"—(Goldwyn); "A Chorus Girl's Romance"—(Metro); "The Life of the Party"—(Paramount); "When the Clouds Roll By"—(United Artists); "In Search of a Sinner"—(First National); "Don't Ever Marry"—(Neilan-First National); "You Never Can Tell"—(Realart); "Sick Abed"—(Paramount); and "The Love Expert"—(First National).

The leading human interest pictures are "Over the Hill"—(Fox); "Humoresque"—(Cosmopolitan-Paramount); "The Jack-Knife Man"—(Vidor-First National); "The Right of Way" (Metro); "Passers By"—(Blackton-Pathe); "The Great Redeemer"—(Metro); "Heliotrope" — (Cosmopolitan - Paramount); "The Forbidden Thing"—(Dwan-Asso. Producers); and "Pollyanna"—(United Artists).

The best sea pictures would include "The Mutiny of the Elsinore"—(Metro); "The Shark"—(Fox); "Below the Surface"—(Ince-Paramount); and "The Sea Wolf"—(Paramount).

The best "snows" are "Nomads of the North"—(First National); "Isabel"—(Geo. Davis-Carewe); "The River's End"—(Neilan-First National); "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"—(Vitagraph).

Conspicuous among the leading "adventures" are "The Mark of Zorro"—(United Artists); "The Mollycoddle"—(United Artists); "The City of Masks"—(Paramount); "Trumpet Island"—(Vitagraph); "Dead Men Tell No Tales"—(Vitagraph); "Behold My Wife"—(Paramount); and "The Right to Love"—(Paramount).

Deserving of mention among the "domestics" are "Why Change Your Wife"—(Paramount); "Midsummer Madness"—(Paramount); "Hairpins"—(Ince-Paramount); "The Devil's Pass Key"—(Universal); "On With the Dance"—(Paramount); and "Sex"—(Read-Hodkinson).

Character studies must include "The Penalty"—(Goldwyn); "The Copperhead"—(Paramount); "Huckleberry Finn"—(Paramount); "Honest Hutch"—(Goldwyn); "Alarm Clock Andy"—(Paramount); and "Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde"—(Paramount).

The best "mysteries" are "My Lady's Garter"—(Paramount); "One Hour Before Dawn"—(Hampton-Pathe); "The Woman in Room 13"—(Goldwyn); "The Deep Purple"—(Realart); "While New York Sleeps"—(Fox); "The White Moll"—(Fox); "Someone in the House"—(Metro); "Partners of the Night"—Goldwyn); and "Dice of Destiny"—(Hampton-Pathe).

The conspicuous romances are "39 East"—(Realart); "Romance"—(United Artists); and "Conrad in Quest of His Youth"—(Paramount).

In conclusion we will present the best performances which have been selected after careful consideration. A number of the portrayals are so exceptional that they uplift the stories. The players are not chosen in the order of their excellence but as they appear to us in the résumé. Thus we introduce Emma Dunn in "Old Lady 31," Wesley Barry in "Dinty," Fred Burton in "Heliotrope," Mary Pickford in "Suds," Douglas Fairbanks in "The Mark of Zorro," Doris Keane in "Romance," Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," Pauline Frederick in "Madame X," Henry Walthall in "A Splendid Hazard," Charles Ray in "Homer Comes Home," William S. Hart in "The Toll Gate," Marc MacDermott in "While New York Sleeps," Lewis Stone in "The River's End," Victor Seastrom in "A Man There Was," Will Rogers in "Honest Hutch," Fred Turner in "The Jack Knife Man," House Peters in "The Great Redeemer," Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller," Wyndham Standing in "Earthbound," Conway Tearle in "Whispering Devils," Robert McKim in "The U. P. Trail," Wallace Beery in "The Last of the Mohicans," Theodore Roberts in "Something to Think About," Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child," William Farnum in "If I Were King," Blanche Sweet in "Fighting Cressy," Fritz Lieber in "If I Were King," Norma Talmadge in "Yes or No."

Elaborating further we discover George Fawcett in "Bab's Candidate," Noah Beery in "The Mutiny of the Elsinore," Enid Bennett in "Hairpins," William Welch in "Over the Hill," Mary Carr in "Over the Hill," Lionel Barrymore in "The Devil's Garden" and "The Copperhead," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Vera Gordon in "Humoresque," Lillian Gish in "Way Down East," Pola Negri in "Passion," Lon Chaney in "The Penalty," Hobart Bosworth in "Behind the Door," James Kirkwood in "The Forbidden Thing," Ina Claire in "Polly With a Past," Sessue Hayakawa in "An Arabian Knight," Gareth Hughes in "A Chorus Girl's Romance," Viola Dana in "A Chorus Girl's Romance," Otis Skinner in "Kismet," Frank Keenan in "Dollar for Dollar," William Faversham in "The Sin That Was His," Jack Curtis in "The Servant in the House," and W. J. Ferguson in "Deep Purple."

Can You Qualify for Screen Authorship?

A NATIONAL educational institution to train photoplaywrights by correspondence during spare time at home has been established in Los Angeles to meet the needs of the motion picture industry.

This institution is directed by experienced writers and sponsored by Cecil B. DeMille, Thos. H. Ince and other prominent producers.

The field for photoplaywrights is lucrative and applicants drawn from every walk of life respond to the call.

Only persons naturally endowed with the gift of creative imagination and dramatic insight, however, can hope for success in this profession, and applicants must be selected accordingly.

All applicants, therefore, are requested to apply by mail to Frederick Palmer, Director of Education, for the Palmer Home-Test Questionnaire to determine their fitness to undertake this course of vocational training.

This questionnaire, scientifically compiled by Professor Malcolm Shaw MacLean, A.M., formerly a Northwestern University instructor of English composition, in collaboration with H. H. Van Loan, noted photoplay author-producer, is the first test of its kind ever adopted by an educational institution.

The purpose of this questionnaire is to help applicants determine the degree of creative imagination possessed by them and consequently their eligibility to enroll in this curriculum.

If successful in making this home test, the Palmer Plan of Instruction in Photoplay Writing is available to you.

"THE INSIDE OF THE CUP"
(Cosmopolitan-Paramount)

Conventional Melodrama Effectively Staged

THE picturization of Winston Churchill's vital story, "The Inside of the Cup," does not assume the magnitude expected, when one considers the message, the spiritual flavor of the theme. The author's idea based upon the biblical text that the body should be cleansed inside as well as out stands only as a thin skeleton in the screen version. Director Capellani has become old-fashioned here and has constructed a picture which bears all the earmarks of stereotyped melodrama. It strikes us that he missed an opportunity to score a ten-strike with a simple yet spiritual story which might transport the spectator and make him truly wonder. What is revealed is a series of highly melodramatic scenes which defy logic, even though they have value in sustaining interest through moving with adequate tempo.

"The Inside of the Cup" as picturized is not Winston Churchill's story of the indictment of the modern church. It is Albert Capellani's melodrama which contains stock tricks and time-worn details—a melodrama of such quick-changing scenes that realities are missing. The offering is presented on a lavish scale. It is not big in any other way. A powerful pillar of the church sends his son and daughter from his house. He causes the dismissal of a faithful cashier from his bank; he resorts to hypocritical practises which are within the law. He is bound in his conduct through pride and respectability. The depicting of these scenes are extremely hectic. The son sinks to the gutter; the working girl takes up a life of easy virtue; the cashier is ejected from his house and becomes a derelict, although being an experienced man it should have been no trouble for him to find another position; the weak minister is discharged; another is engaged in his place, who learns of the dregs inside the ecclesiastical cup of his church.

A counter conflict is given up to the age-old problem of Capital versus Labor, with the representatives of the latter class storming the church and demanding privilege. A false touch is the whispered and talkative agitation that occurs when the rector calls a spade a spade. They would have the presence of mind to carry inscrutable expressions so as not to give themselves away. In the twinkling of an eye, the weak find redemption, and Labor triumphs over Capital. But the chief pharisee remains unyielding until a bullet from the cashier's revolver brings him to his death-bed and thus does he see the light. There is so much to be told, so many characters to be represented that "The Inside of the Cup" makes difficult material to be condensed into terms of simplicity. Mr. Capellani has utilized some pretentious sets, the church scene being impressive and artistic. The interpretation is taken care of by a capable cast with Richard Carlyle contributing the most effective performance as the cashier. The various extras are thoroughly in character. The picture will be well patronized because of its exploitation possibilities and certainly possesses interesting moments.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What is considered to be one of the most powerful pictures of the season will be shown at the ———— theatre next ———— when Albert Capellani's production of Winston Churchill's celebrated story, "The Inside of the Cup," is presented. This indictment of the modern church, its expose of hypocrisy among wealthy churchgoers caused wide discussion with readers in both England and America. The picture is said to be powerful and artistic enough to cause discussion. It will undoubtedly be pronounced one of the artistic treats of the year.

The story deals with the Rector of a fashionable church who turns upon his wealthy parishioners when he discovers them parading under a mask of hypocrisy and invites the common people to the church. Eldon Parr, a vestryman, unscrupulous and tyrranical, alienates his son and daughter through his stubborn pride and smug respectability and is finally killed by a man whom he has ruined. The picture is remarkably strong in its message and the force of its logic is brought home through scenes wonderfully well acted.

PROGRAM READER

A photoplay of tremendous force and sweeping action is "The Inside of the Cup," a Paramount picture which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— for an extended run. It is a picturization of Winston Churchill's famous and widely discussed novel of the same name, the publication of which provoked a world-wide controversy. The story is dramatic, the action thrilling, and the love interest exceedingly appealing. The picture is directed by Albert Capellani, a man of artistic appreciation and is finely acted by a cast that includes William P. Carleton, Edith Hallor and many others.

CATCH LINES

See "The Inside of the Cup," a powerful picture from a tremendous novel.

"THE LOVE LIGHT"
(United Artists)

Production Overshadows the Star Who Is Not Any Too Well Cast

TO criticize a picture that is going to be played by every exhibitor who can get it and which most people who go to the theatre will see is heresy, but all the same "The Love Light" viewed as a Mary Pickford production presents some opportunities for fault finding as well as praise, and perhaps no feature which this star has sponsored under a United Artists banner is going to call forth such a wide diversity of individual opinion. It wll please some people who seldom find much entertainment in a Pickford picture. It will get a panning at the hands of some more who usually call Mary's offerings entirely satisfactory.

"The Love Light," or some four or five reels of it which has to do with the actual plot, is frankly melodrama—melodrama that is not especially original either in story or in the incident used in developing it. Miss Pickford is not any too well cast in the role of "Angela," nor is her part of sufficient importance to make her the dominating character. In fact the picture impresses as a production and would be just as pleasing with any capable actress who can "emote" in the leading role. There are many scenes in which the star does not appear. There are many more where other characters have the best end of the opportunities. In the shipwreck sequences Miss Marion falls short of what audiences have been educated to expect, and consequently this technical climax is comparatively tame.

Against this array of criticism, all more or less valueless for the reasons given, is to be found quite as much that is worthy of enthusiastic praise. The first reel or so of the offering is replete with highly original incident and carefully planned scenes that carry most excellent atmosphere. Throughout the picture a cast so good that it could be termed all star, gives Miss Pickford perfect support. The star herself has never shown a wider range of real histrionic talent. All the interiors are rare bits of stage craft and the exteriors are unusually beautiful. The photography is faultless. The direction, except for the shipwreck scenes, is first class. There is considerable comedy in the first few reels and a cute baby earns some laughs.—Length, 8 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Pickford, "America's Sweetheart," in her latest United Artist production, "The Love Light," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"The Love Light" presents Miss Pickford in an entirely new part, and in an entirely different sort of a vehicle than she has had recently. The star plays the part of an Italian girl residing on the coast of sunny Italy, who after having given two brothers to the war, found that her supposedly American husband is a German spy and who later jumps from a cliff to his death rather than be taken prisoner, has her baby taken from her because people think she is crazy, at last finds happiness with the faithful village lover.

It is an extremely dramatic role and in it Miss Pickford demonstrates once again that she is America's great screen actress. In support of the star is a cast so perfect that the production might well be termed all star. There is plenty of good comedy provided, especially in the early reels, and a thrilling shipwreck scene. The story was written by Frances Marion, Miss Pickford's director for the production. The costuming and atmosphere provided are revelations in the art of picture making. It is scarcely believable that such a picture so perfect in every detail could have been made in America.

The engagement at the ———— is limited and patrons are advised to plan their visit well in advance of the last day of the showing.

PROGRAM READER

Once more the ———— is able to present America's greatest screen star, Mary Pickford, in her latest production, "The Love Light," a melodramatic story of sunny Italy, for a ———— days' engagement beginning ————.

"The Love Light" has been hailed by critics as one of Miss Pickford's most notable achievements. Although she is still the Mary of the curls and the pretty sweet ways, her role calls for a wide range of dramatic expression. She must portray light comedy as she romps with her brothers, and tragedy as she weeps over her loss in the world war, the knowledge that her husband was a German spy and that her baby is to be taken from her.

"The Love Light" is also a picture that recommends itself as a production. It has a strong dramatic story with a thrilling shipwreck staged in the last reels. It also has plenty of comedy, especially in the early sequences. Much entirely new "business" has been provided. All in all it is a picture that even Mary Pickford may be proud. You will like "The Love Light." Come and see it.

SUGGESTIONS

An especially attractive press book for "The Love Light" has been prepared by the United Artists' publicity department. We cannot improve on these exploitation suggestions. Get this press book and read it carefully.

CATCH LINES

America's sweetheart in a new kind of a picture and in a new role. "The Love Light" presents Miss Pickford as an Italian girl in a melodramatic story of peasant life in Italy.

Feature Subjects of Short Length

"The Ranger and the Law"

(Capital Film Company, Inc.)

HERE we have a Western with a plausible story, good acting and fast and furious action, enough action in fact to be the basis for a serial in fifteen episodes, and action is what the lovers of Westerns want.

Lester Cuneo in the role of Dick Dawson, a rich man's son, who prefers the life of the great outdoors to a prosaic business career and luxury backed by his parent's millions, gets a job as a forest ranger and reports for duty at a mountain camp located in a district infested by whisky runners.

The story is one constant whirl of vigorous action and thrilling incidents until having subdued the whisky smuggling gang, he is shown proposing marriage to the little mountain girl in the closing fadeout.

Cuneo in this picture proves his right to be classed as one of the leading portrayers of western roles and the fights he indulges in during the unfolding of the plot are some of the most spectacular and realistic seen on the screen and his portrayal of the ranger throughout is marked by good touches of comedy as well as strength in serious situations.

Francelia Billington, as Ann Hobbs, the daughter of the leader of the whisky runners, is appealing and pretty and does some very good acting. The other characters are well drawn.

Locations were evidently chosen with more than usual care and the woodland and mountain backgrounds are worthy of especially favorable comment. Cameramen also did their work in first-class shape and the photography is excellent. Well-worded art titles are used and aid materially the development of the story.

This is an excellent western which we predict should appeal strongly to the admirers of this class of entertainments; 5 reels.—L. H. MASON.

"In the Days of St. Patrick"

(Kelwin Film Company—Six Reels)

THIS production was made in Ireland with an all-Irish cast, and is not intended for consumption in the American theatre. It is a historical and religious picture which should find an appreciative audience in Catholic and Irish societies. It has, however, no reference to the present political struggle in the Emerald Isle. In other words, it is not anti-British, but it will interest only those interested in Ireland or Ireland's history.

From a production standpoint, it is far below American standards. Mr. Kelly, owner of the film, announces that most of the cast served without pay. They are certainly decidedly amateurish in the acting, but they are evidently sincere in their efforts to put on the screen the life history of their patron. The photography, considering the difficulties which must have arisen because of the varying climatic conditions in Ireland, is quite good. No interior scenes are noticeable, and the director gives only a few close-ups throughout the entire picture.

Despite its crude production, the audience at the Lexington theatre, a typical Irish gathering, burst forth into applause at the scene where St. Patrick first sets foot on Irish soil, and other places as well. So it will probably please the people it is expected to reach.

The story simply pictures the traditions and legends which surround the life of the Irish patron. It shows him sold as a slave and brought from Gaul to Ireland; his escape, and eventual return as a bishop to convert his former captives. Other familiar incidents of his life are shown on the screen.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Ireland in Revolt"

(Five Reels of Scenes Taken Recently in Ireland by Captain Edwin F. Weigle. Sponsored by the Chicago Tribune. Released on States Rights Basis)

"IRELAND IN REVOLT" is a remarkable camera story of the conditions that exist in Ireland, especially in the districts where the disorder is the most extreme, presented without bias, by a photographer who was able to get many interesting shots and who has evidently gone to great pains to make his pictures not only a mere box office attraction for the time being but a historic document that has a strong educational and scenic appeal to people who have no particular interest in the political or industrial fate of the Emerald Isle.

Captain Edwin F. Weigle, under assignment for the Chicago Tribune, is responsible for the series of views that have been taken. What he has obtained would illustrate the head lines of the newspapers for the months of August, September and October, in relation to the Irish question. He has "faked" nothing. What he shows is authentic, ruins of shops, factories, homes, and public buildings, barbed wire entanglements, "Black and Tan" troops, mobs of both factions, machine gun squads, armored motor cars and all the other things that the papers have described in print but which the imagination can not paint so vividly as does Captain Weigle's camera. All this however after a sort of a scenic prologue that shows some of peaceful and historic Ireland as yet untouched by the hand of either faction.

Some of the scenes shown have been given some attention in the current events releases, for instance, MacSwinney's funeral, but Captain Weigle has been able to obtain a better camera record in each instance and usually his scenes are more intimate and better from a technical angle. Another feature of the picture is that for the most of its fire reels, the photography is very good. Some of the scenic shots are truly beautiful and probably will some day find their way into a one reeler.

As a box office attraction there can be no question of the fact that this will draw. Stress should be laid on the self evident fact that it is not propoganda for either side. It is a "take a trip to Ireland to see for yourself what has happened," picture. It will not incite a pro-Irish audience to throwing stones through your screen. It has an appeal for all classes and should be found suitable for all theatres. Length, 5 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Price of Silence"

(Sunrise Pictures—State Rights)

Re-editing and titling gives a different aspect to this Peggy Hyland feature, the first which this star has offered to exhibitors in some time. Realizing, evidently, that the mystery element is the feature's greatest appeal. Sunrise has injected into this picture suspense of the very best kind. Anyone can build up a murder st and make it apparent that a sympathetic ch acter has committed the crime. The art o is the unraveling of the mystery and clea the supposed criminal in a novel, and sufficie logical fashion. "The Price of Silence" d this. The old man was killed by a stroke lightning, and, although the sympathetic ch acter attempted to rob him, he was not murderer. A sketch of the combat has b etched upon the plate glass door when lightning struck. This is certainly novel, is also scientifically possible, as anyone v understands the tricks that lightning plays realize. "The Price of Silence" is a likea mystery story, with a likeable star, which v hold the interest of all except the most bl type of picture fan. Length, 6 reels.—MA THEW A. TAYLOR.

"The North Woods"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox)

THE old trick of leaving Mutt and Jeff h drawn, and therefore crippled, is used this half-reel comic. Jeff is minus a leg, a Mutt finds himself without an arm. So the fellow draws himself an arm, and with his p furnishes Jeff with a leg entirely out of prop tion with his body. This is cleverly drawn, a furnishes the funniest spot in the subject.

The two pals then decide to draw themsel the North woods, and become trappers. J draws a bear, who becomes unruly and tu upon his maker. The perspective drawing, the bear chases the two over mountain and t tops, is well done. The human artist fina comes to the rescue of the two by putting l hand on the screen and erasing the hungry be —MATTHEW. A. TAYLOR.

Twenty-Seventh Series Movie Chats

(Urban)

This one starts with the news that herdsm have disappeared in the high Alpine mountai which necessitates a rescue party being form immediately, armed with ropes and other hel ful hints when a rescue is desired. The sear covers many interesting points, includes sor hazardous stunts which are natural happenin and holds the interest to the second part of t short subject which tells the tale of the "Pra ing Mantis." This is a saintly looking inse which like all hypocritical species, represen himself as harmless and proves most deadly, b in the case of the mantis, the "female of t species is more deadly than the male" is illu trated. Mr. Mantis has no difficulty handli his prey until he starts looking about for cor pany. If the female resents his advances, sl simply kills and eats him. Therefore, there not a deal of affection wasted among the grasshopper resembling creatures. While sm comparatively, their strength is enormous. large caterpiller has no chance and a cham leon's fight is a short one. This is one of t most interesting of the series devoted to scie tific research and is decidedly informative. Th the shots of the actual "killings" are obtaine and the stealthy preparation for striking, is in deed out of the ordinary.—LILLIAN GALE.

"BLACK BEAUTY"
(Vitagraph)

Entertaining Picture Made from Famous Classic

IN picturizing Anna Sewall's famous classic, "Black Beauty," Vitagraph is deserving of unbounded praise. The lovable story, which has been translated into many languages and read by millions all over the globe, has been visualized with genuine artistic appreciation and should meet with popular approval everywhere. Certain liberties have been taken with the tale which were absolutely necessary, but one cannot say that it is a false representation. On the contrary it approaches the original with remarkable fidelity. It has been necessary for Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester to incorporate an "inside" story which would strengthen the "outside" story and give it dramatic expression.

One would never guess in remembering the contents that it contained picture material. In fact the story of the horse itself would have proved a bit of sentimental propaganda. So the "outside" incident—the career of the noble steed—has been fortified with what might have taken place inside the house of his owner. The tale the Chesters have written is a simple one of heart interest and romance and harmonizes perfectly with the life of the horse. The dovetailing of these stories shows splendid workmanship—a difficult task at best. Yet William Courtney's continuity is marked for an even line of action which develops with a correct tempo. Appreciating the fact that "Black Beauty" is remembered even to this day, it is a credit to Vitagraph that it has been able to command and hold the attention by emphasizing the pathos, stressing the sympathy and incorporating a requisite amount of melodramatic incident.

Special attention has been paid to giving it proper atmosphere which is brought out in effective details and artistic backgrounds. Indeed, the camera work and photography are excellent. Only the pleasant side of Black Beauty's life is told, the sad side being eliminated except for a subtitle or two. Such a course is entirely proper. Depicting actualities would have been unnecessarily cruel. The sponsors have united the two stories in an artistic and novel manner—a method which keeps the continuity even and progressive. The human sequences are revealed through lifting a curtain which is dropped when the animal scenes are shown. The action here develops through inserts across the printed page. Director Smith has treated the animal episodes like a born trainer. And his handling of the players calls for a word of praise. Jean Paige, who is featured, seemingly steps from an old miniature, and her performance is graceful and charming. John Steppling, James Morrison, Bobby Mack and others are thorough in character and costume. The picture carries a thrill in the burning barn episode and another in the horse race across country. "Black Beauty" certainly possesses exploitation possibilities. Those who haven't read it have surely heard of it. And the exhibitor should have no trouble in playing to capacity.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A screen version of Anna Sewell's famous classic, "Black Beauty," has been offered by Vitagraph and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester who adapted the story, have kept faith with the original although for the purposes of giving it a romantic substance they have introduced a story not found in "Black Beauty." The episodes of the horse could not very well be shown to the exclusion of dramatic ingredients. The owner's life is depicted.

Vitagraph has provided a capable cast that is headed by Jean Paige and contains such well known players as James Morrison, George Webb, John Steppling, Adele Farrington and Mollie McConnell. The two stories are wonderfully blended and the pathos, charm and sentiment are vividly brought forth. The picture carries exceptional atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

The memorable and lovable tale of the horse, "Black Beauty," has been visualized upon the screen and will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Nearly every man, woman and child is familiar with this book. It has been translated in many languages and is considered a classic. Vitagraph has done wonders in transferring the lovable book to the silversheet. Indeed, Black Beauty lives again. A romance accompanies the story of the horse—a romance quite in keeping with the life of the animal. A cast that includes Jean Paige and James Morrison renders perfect support. Come early to the ———— and see one of the season's treats.

"THE GREAT ADVENTURE"
(Bennett-First National)

More Interesting Via the Printed Page

THE most hasn't been made from Arnold Bennett's quaintly humorous study of a sensitive soul, "Buried Alive," a study which captivated through its quiet fun, its subtle charm, and novelty of characterization. As a picture the quaint highlights are missing. Bennett, being a master of detail and description, it must be rather difficult to translate him effectively for the screen. The director here has resorted to various samples of slapstick which are not found in the original. The idea might have been enlarged upon and more emphasis given to the romantic phase.

It is a fairly true adaptation at that, but somehow misses fire as clever entertainment. The gentle comedy of the book is replaced by broad and not very effective farce. The picture is likely to cause some discussion as to whether Lionel Barrymore is equipped by nature to play broad comedy. After the memorable portrayal in "The Devil's Garden" it would seem that his forte lies in powerful dramatic roles. As an exponent of such parts he could dominate the screen. But in "The Great Adventure" he shows plainly that he is out of his element in attempting to draw a slapstick characterization. The shy, bashful artist who retires within himself—who shrinks from public gaze and adulation is never brought out in the screen version. Perhaps Mr. Barrymore is artist enough to play comedy as well as drama, but we know he CAN STAND SUPREME in character roles similar to that of "The Devil's Garden," or "The Copperhead."

There is one clever scene in the present offering. It is found in the funeral of the "deceased" artist who submerges his identity, becomes his own valet while the latter is the dead body. Westminster is filled with hero-worshippers and the shy hero takes his place among the mourners. He suddenly spies a persistent admirer and beats a hasty retreat to the organ loft. His ejection from the church is slapstick to the finish, but it has its compensation in being the big highlight of the offering. The church scene is as fine as anything which has been contributed to the screen in this direction. It is a very excellent reproduction and appears to be genuine. The latter reels are given over to a romance which is exceedingly quiet in action and humor. In fact it never reaches out and conquers because it lacks spontaneity and charm. A subtle story of whimsicalties, its picturization is too sharp.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Arnold Bennett's famous story which captivated readers with its charm and humor, "Buried Alive," has reached the screen and will appear as a picture at the ———— theatre next ———— with Lionel Barrymore as the star. Certain events which enter one's life are sometimes stranger than fiction. The tale here NEVER could happen, but it DID, according to Arnold Bennett. Mr. Barrymore has an opportunity to show his comedy skill in the part of the illustrious artist of England who shuns publicity and love.

When he returns to his native home after years of absence, his valet is taken ill and dies and the artist sees an opportunity to pose as the servant while the latter is supposed to be the great Farll. The painter attends his own funeral and is ejected for creating a disturbance. But though he can avoid publicity he can't avoid love and indulges in a romance wtth the valet's sweetheart whom he had won through a matrimonial agency. Naturally he has to paint to keep the wolves from the door and in due time his masquerade is discovered. The picture carries acceptable humor and is well staged and acted. Kenneth Webb directed.

PROGRAM READER

How would you like to be buried alive, or rather, how would you like to think that your friends feel that you are under the earth? That is the sensation that comes to Lionel Barrymore in "The Great Adventure," the First National picture which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. Adapted from Arnold Bennett's interesting story, "Buried Alive," it furnishes an hour of solid entertainment. The part played by the star draws upon his comedy skill and he reveals without a doubt that he is as talented in this direction as in the depiction of dramatic figures. He had himself "buried" for a reason. What this reason is will be left for you next ————. Don't miss it. A rare treat.

SUGGESTIONS

With the name of one of the greatest of present day authors—with the name of one of the greatest actors on the American stage and screen—with a corking title—you have some groundwork for exploitation. You can use fac-similes of the book for newspaper space and can dwell upon the fact that as a stage play, "The Great Adventure" scored a big success. Tell something of Arnold Bennett. Tell of his versatility. Treat your copy in a humorous fashion. You can stage a prologue much after the fashion of the Strand, New York, which presented an artist singing before an easel or rather a frame of a full length portrait of a girl and have that girl come to life. She can be shaded effectively with proper lighting. Make use of catch lines and a teaser campaign.

CATCH LINES

He attended his own funeral and mourned the loss of himself. He would rather be dead than enjoy publicity and romance. See "The Great Adventure."

"OUTSIDE THE LAW"
(Universal)

Best Straight Melodrama in Many a Day

JANUARY 6 is rather early to make predictions for twelve months, but if "Outside the Law" doesn't prove to be the best straight melodrama of the year then 1921 will see the release of more great pictures than any preceding period of equal length.

Beginning with some carefully planned scenes that succeed in giving the production atmosphere and establishing sympathy for the leading characters, especially Miss Dean and Wheeler Oakman, the picture builds from sequence to sequence with perfect suspense, good incident and excellent action until its dramatic and thrilling climax almost at the tag of the eighth and last reel, a free for all fight in which Lon Chaney, Mr. Oakman and a dozen others, including Miss Dean, mix it in a way that carries the spectator off his feet and makes him forget that he is looking at a picture and view the melee as the real thing.

The star has a good role, one eminently suited to her talents, but the picture is in no sense a vehicle. In fact Wheeler Oakman and Lon Chaney both have parts that present equal opportunities for acting and both deliver in a way that gives them a real right to billing honors. From a story angle "Outside the Law" is one of the most logical productions of all time. There are no tricks in the matter of construction and each sequence carries its full measure of suspense and dramatic interest. The continuity except for one rather abrupt jump is perfect. Tod Browning's direction maintains a highly dramatic tempo. There is scarcely a scene in the whole picture that could be eliminated without hurting the story. Elaborate sets, especially those showing scenes in San Francisco's Chinatown, have been provided. The titles are faultless, although some of them are rather long. Through the dramatic action of the story is interwoven a theme that can be summed up in the oft quoted "And a little child shall lead them," for it is through a child—by the way one of the cleverest baby actors ever presented—that Miss Dean as the crook heroine comes to decide that the straight road is the best road.

The plot of "Outside the Law" is rather too complicated for a synopsis in the space allowed for reviews. Suffice to state that it concerns the reformation of a trio of crooks, with dramatic situations enough for a half dozen ordinary pictures. If they like action and real drama and thrills they will like this. It is there from every angle.—Length, 8 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

What has been termed one of the greatest screen melodramas of all time, "Outside the Law," with Priscilla Dean starred and Lon Chaney and Wheeler Oakman in exceptionally strong roles comes to the ———— for a ———— day engagement beginning ————.

"Outside the Law" is a perfectly builded story of the reformation of three crooks with much that is dramatic and interesting provided as incident in the unfolding of the plot.

The locale of the picture is in San Francisco's Chinatown with Miss Dean as a criminal, who finally finds that the straight road is best. The drama is provided by the machinations of Lon Chaney as another crook who plans to "frame" the girl and scenes showing how a jewel robbery was pulled off, the hunt of the police to bring the guilty to justice and how paying the penalty of the crime was avoided.

"Outside the Law" has a fight that surpasses even that long remembered battle of "The Spoilers." It has all the other things too that go to make a great picture, especially a great melodrama—action, suspense, heart interest and a theme—a theme that never grows old, the love of a woman for a child and the wonders it performs in changing her character.

PROGRAM READER

Once in the while a picture is produced that to use a theatrical term has everything. Such a feature is "Outside the Law," a melodrama starring Priscilla Dean with Lon Chaney and Wheeler Oakman playing parts equal in importance, which will be the major attraction at this theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————.

"Outside the Law" is one picture that the management feels certain every one will praise. It has more thrills than the best serial ever made, as unique and fascinating a story as any O. Henry ever wrote, the action of "The Barrier" or another great Universal picture that many of you will remember "Hell Morgan's Girl," a theme as vital as that of "The Miracle Man" and a love story as sweet as that of "Romance."

"Outside the Law" is a picture big enough to stand on its own feet as a production, to be viewed with no thought of who is playing in it, but all the same the fact that such popular stars as Miss Dean, Lon Chaney and Wheeler Oakman, to say nothing of others equally as prominent in the film world, have fine parts will be found interesting. The story of "Outside the Law" concerns the reformation of three crooks, burglars to be exact, through the teachings of a Chinese follower of Confucius and the influence of a little child and the drama is provided by relating what happened when a super crook framed one of his pals for a prison sentence and attempted to railroad "Silky Moll" for a jewel robbery.

Interesting Moments in Mystery Story

THERE is no question about this feature carrying entertaining qualities since it possesses the elements of mystery, suspense, surprise and picturesque characterization. Adapted from one of Maurice Leblanc's Arsene Lupin stories which revolve around the colorful personality of a master criminal, it furnishes the spectator opportunity to show his deductive processes of mind as well as enlivening his imagination. The role of Arsene Lupin has been intrusted to Wedgewood Nowell, who, because of his resemblance to a Latin type and the fact that he can adapt himself to polite roles, gives an effective study. Sympathy is his from the start.

The suspense is achieved in his efforts to hoodwink his enemies. One wonders if he will be captured by the police or his plans outwitted by equal resourceful criminals. The offering takes on the form of a serial at times. There is the usual representation of secret doors and panels and mysterious figures and all have been given the necessary emphasis. The keen-witted Lupin, of course, succeeds in eluding his pursuers by "doubling or even tripling in brass." He resorts to various disguises, one of which is so easy to penetrate, that the stupidity of the gendarmes assumes a colossal aspect. He even tells them that he is their prefect and they are none the wiser. There is a note of stark melodrama in a murder scene or two. Since Lupin makes it plain that he never commits such a crime and since the evidence points to him as the assassin it is his task to prove his innocence. How he establishes it provides the mystery, the meat and sauce of this picture.

There is humor in the scene which shows a small army determined to capture him. The house is surrounded, but the work of investigation is left to a small number. At the psychological moment Lupin proves his identity and shows that he is really co-operating with them to save the honor of France against German spies. The murderer is discovered, but Lupin covers his tracks by escaping through a secret panel. The final shot shows the master crook of Paris in his country's uniform—in the Colonial army of Algeria. The picture is told principally against interiors and these are effective in building the sequences. The incident, the mysterious movements of Lupin, the action and suspesse, and capable acting by the star and a well-balanced cast—these provide the entertaining qualities. "813" is a first rate crook melodrama.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A picture characterized as an exceedingly clever mystery story is "813," founded upon Maurice Leblanc's Arsene Lupin novels in which Wedgewood Nowell appears in the stellar role and it will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre next ————. The story of the play is steeped in mystery and action. Arsene Lupin, an attractive gentleman burglar who also poses as a detective, steals only from those who can afford to lose. He had never been known to kill.

In "813" a wealthy and influential man is found dead, and Lupin is accused. He determines to aid the police in finding the real murderer, at the same time keeping out of reach himself. His adventures and escapades from this point are said to be extremely rich in suspense. Four criminals are on the same mission bent as Lupin and for once he finds that he has met a wit as great as his own. Mr. Nowell, in the part of Lupin, adds to his record as a clever portrayer of foreign types. He gives a polished performance. A finely balanced cast which contains such well known players as Wallace Beery, Ralph Lewis, Kathryn Adams and J. P. Lockney, renders capable assistance. Scott Sidney directed.

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember the famous Arsene Lupin stories? Written by Maurice Leblanc? Well, one of them has been adapted to the screen and affords a most interesting and exciting hour in the theatre. "813" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— featuring Wedgewood Nowell as Arsene Lupin, the master criminal of Paris. Mr. Nowell possesses an enviable record as a delineator of foreign types and his impersonation of the French gentleman burglar is a study in rich expression. The picture is one of the most entertaining mystery melodramas which has ever been offered at the ————. Thrills and suspense, action and romance are contained in full measure. Don't miss it.

"THE FRONTIER OF THE STARS"
(Paramount)

Interesting Story of a Crook's Redemption

IT is a very effective picture which Thomas Meighan has in "The Frontier of the Stars"—effective in its sure-fire incident and manner of creating sympathy and holding the attention. Besides it offers the star with a role which is not unlike his "Miracle Man" study. He can do the crook characterization a trifle better than his contemporaries. His poise and repression and knack of keeping himself within emotional bounds—these traits make such a character as he depicts genuinely fascinating.

The story itself is just another version of the crook who finds redemption through love. The setting is novel which naturally keeps it from becoming stereotyped. But despite the obviousness or the fact that the conclusion is foreseen one is kept interested. Charles Maigne has seen to that. Also Thomas Meighan. The protagonist of the Albert Payson Terhune story is a leader of an East Side gang. It happens that he is very much wanted by Headquarters, and if not captured in a certain length of time a certain detective's job is in jeopardy. Now this detective has a crippled sister whose power of locomotion is destroyed. Hence she ekes out a rocking chair existence on the roof-tops of the tenement. In fleeing from the police the hero runs to the roof and his encounter with the girl is the spark which causes his redemption.

The fact that he frequents her society for months does not speak well for the detective force who might easily have covered his tracks. And it isn't likely that being an intelligent crook that he wouldn't know anything about the explosive power of chemicals. He is caught but escapes through using a good fist—escapes to the roof where the girl, in her eagerness to help him, discovers that she can walk. This is the only flaw in the pattern. Screen cures are effected too miraculously through love. A thrill is sent out when the tenement catches fire—a fire which looks like the real thing and the hero saves his little sweetheart. He is rewarded with his freedom, although his act takes him to the hospital. Mr. Maigne has constructed a good continuity from which the scenes progress in an even manner with no padding discernible. The picture has its humorous side, too, which is shown in the Coney Island talk which appeals to the girl's imagination. The night scenes on the rooftops are effective. A backdrop of Brooklyn Bridge provides good atmosphere and the lighting is highly effective. Faire Binney presents a charming study of the heroine. The picture should be a winner everywhere.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Thomas Meighan, Paramount's popular star, will be seen at the ———— theatre in "The Frontier of the Stars," written by Albert Payson Terhune. The picture is said to be ideal for the expression of Mr. Meighan's talent and affords him opportunities to show his skill at crook characterization. The star has the role of Buck Leslie, gangster and gunman, who is the leader of his gang through his cleverness, utter disregard of danger and two fists. He tries to stop a fight between Gregory, a chemist and a Bowery tough, with the result that Hoyt, a detective, catches Buck with Gregory's gun, making a clear case of circumstantial evidence against him.

The crook escapes to the rooftops, and there runs upon Hilda Shea, sister-in-law of the detective, a cripple, who has spent most of her life in a wheel chair. From then on is unfolded an interesting study in two entirely different personalities. The girl, with her sweet philosophy of life and her belief in the inherent goodness of mankind, and Buck with just as firm a conviction that everything is evil. Faire Binney, the sister of Constance Binney, plays opposite the star and contributes a performance marked for its charm and wistfulness. There are numerous thrilling scenes in the development of the story which have been admirably handled by director and players.

PROGRAM READER

He was a gangster who had never known what it was to live straight. A certain detective was determined to "frame" him, but when Buck, in escaping from him stumbled upon his crippled sister—well, fate took a hand and his redemption was certain. How Buck painted life to her—how he decided to go straight—how he was caught in the clutches of the law—how he saved himself and found happiness is told in an exceedingly interesting way in "The Frontier of the Stars," the newest Paramount picture to star Thomas Meighan. The star has a role similar to his part in "The Miracle Man" and he gives a fine performance. The picture has great heart interest and romance, as well as exciting moments. At this theatre next ————.

CATCH LINES

He was a dangerous criminal and the despair of the police. But he escaped detection by fleeing to the roof. How he finds redemption is told in a most appealing manner. See "The Frontier of the Stars."

"LURE OF YOUTH"
(Metro)

Acting Is Better Than the Story

"REHASHED and warmed over drama very nicely served," is the way this could be labeled on the menu you hand your patrons. For Luther Reed's story is a familiar story of an innocent little country lad, who, at the age of twenty-two is writing plays, and a very worldly-wise actress who grows to love him. It ends with the young man a successful playwright, returning to his small town sweetheart, and the actress going to the arms of her lover, a suave man of the world. In between is mildly interesting drama which will make it an acceptable audience picture.

In the cast are Gareth Hughes, who gives a splendid characterization of the idealistic, enthusiastic youth of the small town; Cleo Madison, entirely satisfactory as the idol of the stage; and William Conklin, pleasing as a wealthy broker. There is an elaborate production as a background for the story. Interior theatre scenes, cabaret scenes, and midnight suppers grace its six reels.

The story concerns Florentire Fair, an actress, who goes to a small town for a rest after a theatrical season. She meets and falls in love with the embryonic young author, and takes him to New York in order that he may be more successful in writing his plays. The actress' lover, becoming jealous, tries to convince the boy's parents that their son is in the hands of an adventuress. The boy, however, refuses to leave her. Then the jealous lover insinuates that the actress is a shady character. The small town playwright goes back to his home and "having loved and suffered," produces a dramatic masterpiece, which is an instant success. The actress, however, having helped him to realize his ambitions, gives him up, and demands that he serve none other but success. So she marries her first lover. Just whether the actress is a reformed adventuress or not is at times in doubt, although the impression given is that she is not. It appears that the film editor found it necessary to slightly alter the original version. Gareth Hughes' work is the best thing in the picture. It will satisfy the majority who see it.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Lure of Youth," the Metro special production, which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, is a picture which combines the atmosphere of the New York stage with the quiet peace of a small up-State village. It is a drama that faithfully touches all the springs of human emotion, and enacted by a very capable cast, it is a motion picture of the highest class, which will win the favor of every type of picture lover.

"Lure of Youth" stars no particular player, but in its cast are Cleo Madison, Gareth Hughes and William Conklin, each of whom is well enough known and sufficiently capable to be the featured player in any production.

The story is from the pen of Luther Reed, one of the best known of screen writers. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

PROGRAM READER

Engrossing drama is the keynote of "The Lure of Youth;" which will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This picture was produced by Metro from the story by Luther Reed, well known newspaperman and author. No player is featured, but the production is one of all-star calibre. The drama is laid in a small New York state village and in the Metropolis itself. The heroine, played by the celebrated beauty, Cleo Madison, is the idol of the New York stage. Gareth Hughes, one of the rising stars of picturedom, plays the hero—an ambitious young playwright who lives in a small town with dreams of the New York stage. The story is a thrilling one of a woman's sacrifice for the sake of helping youth cherish its illusions, and of a jaded man of the world who is purified and uplifted by her example. It works up to a thrilling climax which will not soon fade from the memory.

SUGGESTIONS

Dramas of the stage are usually filled with a certain appeal to a picture audience. As the heroine of this picture is a great actress you can play up the stage idea in your copy. Luther Reed is a writer with a reputation and his name will be known to the close followers of the screen. In the cast Gareth Hughes and Cleo Madison and William Conklin will be remembered by some. Hughes should be remembered by those who saw "A Chorus Girl's Romance."

CATCH LINES

A story of three people—a celebrated actress, weary of the shallow flattery and pretty nonsense that engulfs her; a jaded man of the world, and an unsophisticated country youth seeking the realization of his ideals.

A stirring drama of the New York stage, with a cast which includes Gareth Hughes, Cleo Madison and William Conklin.

"ROMANTIC ADVENTURESS"
(Paramount)

This One Looks Like a Vehicle

SO orthodox is the story furnished Dorothy Dalton, and so uninspired the direction that "A Romantic Adventuress" takes on the appearance of a vehicle. Every incident is cut and dried and anticipated far in advance. But the chief fault of the offering is the moss-covered plot which has performed its duty too often on the screen. The idea is presented in the character of an innocent girl who is offered in the marriage market to the highest bidder by a scheming mother. The action travels over a period of twenty years and takes in New Orleans, New York, and some watering place in Europe.

This lapse of time apparently means nothing to mother and daughter who greet each other and ask no questions. The girl has been brought up in ignorance of the world by her father, who was deserted by his wife, when a show troupe stranded in New Orleans. She has been educated for the stage—particularly as a dancer, and upon the death of the father is permitted to join her mother in New York. This woman commands no sympathy since she is depicted as lacking any motherly feeling. This is an unnatural touch, and painting the girl in an innocent color doesn't tend to improve the theatrical story. The picture offers episodes which have nothing much in common with the main idea. A flash of a street carnival is apparently taken from a news weekly. The same may be said of a big football game. This last scene is necessary to introduce the hero, the captain of the Yale team.

The action then jumps to the Europeon watering place after mother has discouraged daughter from developing her stage career. And coincidence or convenience has it that the romancers meet, although for the purposes of the story the scheming dowager is led to believe that the football player is wealthy. The girl has a galaxy of suitors, one of whom is blackmailed by the plotters. But the romance enables the lovers to have their own way and mother is forced to acknowledge her defeat. The story is false in characterization and moves slowly and has little excuse as entertainment. It also presents Dorothy Dalton in a wrong light since her personality is not adaptable for the expression of unsophisticated girlhood. Twenty years doesn't count much in the mother's life. Augusta Anderson, who plays the part, hasn't added one line of age to her face. There are numerous characters who are unnecessary to the development of the plot. Their introduction shows up the slow moving action. The only twist to the ancient plot is giving a slap at a certain type of stage mother.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Dalton, the talented Paramount star, will appear at the ———— theatre next ———— in "A Romantic Adventuress." This is a contribution by Charles Belmont Davis, which has been directed by Harley Knoles, and it affords the star with plentiful opportunity to display her effective pantomime. This picture places her in the role of a young woman educated for the stage, who upon the death of her father is placed on the marriage market to be sold to the highest bidder.

Alice, as she is called, has never known much of romance. Consequently when she goes out into the world her imagination paints her pleasant fancies. Her mother and a certain parasite are determined to make themselves wealthy at her expense. She doesn't realize the net of intrigue which involves her, but she does fall in love with a dashing athlete who is pictured as having considerable wealth. When he reveals himself as a man of ordinary circumstances, this fact is a terrific blow to the mother. But Alice, loving him, has no worries about his income. The picture unfolds an appealing vein of romance as well as dramatic conflict and is capably acted by the star and a competent cast.

PROGRAM READER

She had been brought up in a life of seclusion, although educated for the stage. Her father realized that he would not always be around to care for her and he wanted to make her independent. But being ignorant of the ways of the world she found herself in a net of intrigue, woven by an unscrupulous mother. In other words she was to be bartered off to the highest bidder. How she saves herself—how she realizes that romance can destroy selfishness—how the tables are turned on the scheming mother, these are sequences which build up a fascinating picture. "A Romantic Adventuress" comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with the popular and talented Dorothy Dalton as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Since this plot has been done often it would be well to use the soft pedal on detailing it. Simply concentrate upon the star and use her name in all your exploitations. Make mention that Dorothy Dalton has a recognized following. Tell that she created a sensation on the speaking stage in "Aphrodite." Play up the title. It should appeal to those who delight in romance. Bill it as an entertaining romance, which is certain in its appeal. For a prologue you might present a ballet group or a single ballet dancer. This would be in harmony with the scenes of the picture. Mention the other players.

"THE MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING"
(Goldwyn)

Story and Generally Good Production Will Get It By

EXCEPT that Jack Pickford is always a lot more convincing in a role of the homespun hero type than the gay young blade sowing his wild oats, this possesses excellent audience qualifications and as a program offering should prove satisfactory.

The fault that we find with the star, is that he does not bring much that is likeable in personality to his part, nor does he play with sufficient finesse to counteract the effect of the unsympathetic bits of business necessary to get over the theme of the story, which by the way is only another version of the oft told tale of the rich, but wild young man, loved by the sweet and winsome maid to whom he pays no attention until the last hundred feet of the final reel.

Our reason for claiming that the picture will get by is that this well known but ever popular plot has been given rather unusual development, with many excellent bits of business, some good for laughs, the acting of a very excellent supporting cast and a generally meritorious production from all angles. In fact to get down to brass tacks this is a good picture in spite of the star, for he is very badly cast and delivers little that entitles him to praise.

In acting honors, Alec B. Francis, who plays a genteel blind beggar, with a penchant for handing out good advice as to how to reform wayward youths, Shannon Day as a "vamp," and Lionel Belmore as a self made man who can make a success of everything but his own son's life, are entitled to praise for their characterizations. Priscilla Bonner is a pretty heroine but doesn't have much to do except register that with all his faults she loves Jack. All the technical part of the picture is up to standard.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Jack Pickford, one of the youngest and most popular of screen stars, will play the leading role in "The Man Who Had Everything," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. This is a Goldwyn production which gives the youthful star one of the best roles of his screen career. As Harry Bullway, son of a multi-millionaire, he runs riot with his father's fortune and lays at the feet of Lionel Penell, the baby vamp, gifts of fabulous price.

To carry out this idea the property rooms of the Goldwyn studios were made to yield their most precious treasures. The paintings hanging on the walls of the Bullway mansion are genuine antiques costing thousands of dollars.

The story of "The Man Who Had Everything" is by Ben Ames Williams, one of the most popular authors in America today. In the screen version the star is supported by a capable cast, including Priscilla Bonner, Lionel Belmore and Alec B. Francis and Shannon Day. The production was directed by Al Green.

PROGRAM READER

"This is my curse," said the old blind man, "may you always have everything you want." Not much of a curse, say you? But Harry Bullway, with his father's millions all for himself, had everything he wanted, found it more of a curse than a blessing. Harry Bullway is Jack Pickford and the picture is "The Man Who Had Everything," which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. It is a Goldwyn production and is announced as "Jack Pickford's king-pin picture." This youthful star has had one of the most brilliant careers of any actor in picturedom. In this story by Ben Ames Williams, Pickford has a role which suits him to perfection. He is supported by a most capable cast, which includes such players as Priscilla Bonner, Lionel Belmore, Alec Francis and Shannon Day. It will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days.

SUGGESTIONS

Profitable tie-ups should be possible with this picture. The title suggests one with a men's furnishing store. They could use such a sign as "The man who had everything bought his goods here. We have everything, too." A separate card should announce the picture at the theatre. Play up Pickford liberally in your copy and do not neglect the author, Ben Ames Williams. This blind man incident could be made use of by having a man, posing as a beggar, giving away throw-aways at the theatre door. Mention also Shannon Day, as the baby vamp.

CATCH LINES

Could anyone sicken of money? Old Mr. Bullway thought so, and he gave his son millions to spend. Whereupon young Harry bought motors and bulldogs for himself, and diamond earrings and shoe buckles for the baby vamp. It was a blind man made him see the light. This is Pickford's best picture.

CATCH LINES

She was brought up for a career upon the stage. She scored a success that was offered to the highest bidder. See Dorothy Dalton in "A Romantic Adventuress."

See Dorothy Dalton in "A Romantic Adventuress." A picture of charm and romance. A picture with a vital theme and wonderfully acted.

"TIGER TRUE"
(Universal)

Rather Crude, But Carries a Punch

UNIVERSAL has given Frank Mayo a picture which tests his pugilistic ability in "Tiger True." The star plays one of those virile characters who craves excitement and who is resourceful enough to take care of himself in times of danger. There is not much logic to this offering of a hero who has hunted big game in Africa and who journeys to the lower East Side of Manhattan to satisfy his love for adventure. It seems to us that an Alaskan "honky-tonk" would be more fitting than to represent a New York tough saloon presided over by a girl—a saloon frequented by gangsters and cut-throats. The scene which shows the star's introduction to the district is a study in brutality. For that matter the entire picture is given over to showing the violent side of life.

The hero is attracted to the girl and wanders into her "dive" for the purpose of encouraging trouble. And he doesn't have to wait for it. There is a "knock-'em down and drag 'em out" fight on the sawdust floor. The hero wins naturally, but shows punishment in his face. A subsequent scene reveals his wounds entirely healed, although Nature couldn't have gotten in his work in such short time. For his reward he is given the job of bouncer and is called "The Tiger" by the girl and the denizens of the saloon. The action becomes rather quiet while the development of the story takes up the introduction of divers characters and the romantic phase.

However, when "The Baboon" is introduced, violence is resorted to again. This vicious gangster dominates the district and browbeats the girl into submission. It is "The Tiger's" duty to show him his place. So another battle royal is flashed, this time on the cold pavement. And the hero emerges with no sign of punishment. If the director had allowed some realism to creep in, or if Mr. Mayo had allowed himself to get mussed up a bit, the picture would have carried truer characterization. There is no reason for presenting the concluding scene unless it is to give Fritzi Brunette a chance to wear evening clothes. A title states that whatever the hero does is accepted in society. So his wife is taken into the smart set. The story finds its idea in the fact that once a man has engaged in the strenuous life he must continue to do so. The star plays with his customary vigor. He doesn't have much chance to appear romantic. Walter Long makes a good "heavy" and Fritzi Brunette is an acceptable heroine. This picture will not score with the ladies, but will probably please the workingman.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is a generally acknowledged fact that a man who has lived the strenuous life and returns to a life of quietude is never satisfied until he takes up the strenuosities again. This is the idea behind "Tiger True," the Frank Mayo picture which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. The popular Universal star plays the part of a society man who has hunted wild game in Africa. After his return to civilization he finds time rather heavy on his hands and is determined to find excitement. Consequently he journeys to the lower East Side in his craving for adventure.

Jack Lodge, as he is called, hasn't forgotten how to take care of himself and he administers punishment to the bouncer of a cheap cafe. He had entered this place to be near a girl who had attracted him by her ability to defend herself. Thus she rewards him with the defeated man's position. A time comes when he is advised to go away or be killed, but he stands his ground and succeeds in defending himself. The picture carries a deal of stirring action which builds good suspense and offers interesting moments of romance. The offering contains effective backgrounds which suggest appropriate atmosphere and is capably acted by a cast that includes Walter Long and Fritzi Brunette.

PROGRAM READER

He had hunted big game in Africa and longed to hunt it again. When a man has killed a tiger he reverts to the primitive and longs to match his strength again with the beasts of the jungle. Now Jack Lodge didn't return to Africa. Instead he went to a notorious dive on the East Side of New York under the impression that human tigers might be encountered. He had his wish. How he defended himself against overwhelming odds—how he discovered romance—how he cleaned up the place and his opponents at the same time is told in five reels of stirring action in "Tiger True" which comes to the ———— theatre next ———— with Frank Mayo as the star.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this picture as of the "he-man" brand. Tell them it offers five reels of stirring action—the kind of action which makes the pulse beat faster and makes the skin tingle. Tell them it is founded upon a genuine idea—that once a man has hunted big game he never gets over his desire to be in the thick of the chase. Dwell upon the fact that Frank Mayo has his work cut out for him here and succeeds in giving a rich performance. Dwell upon the popularity and drawing power of the star and state that it is his most virile picture since "The Brute Breaker." Tell that it is a story of the manly art—the art of self-defense with one's two fists.

CATCH LINES

See "Tiger True" and learn how a man can defend himself through his knowledge of the manly art. See Frank Mayo at his best.

"THE SAGE HEN"
(Edgar Lewis-Pathe)

A Well-Produced Dramatic Story of the West

IT would not be quite fair to call this Edgar Lewis merely "a western." That name implies a certain type of picture which is below "The Sage Hen" in point of drama and artistry. So, while Mr. Lewis has produced a feature, the story of which is laid in Arizona in the 80's, he has given the screen something more than a thriller. There is not a startling big idea behind "The Sage Hen," and basically the story of the woman, wronged by gossiping tongues, whose son is taken from her in the first reel and restored to her in the last, twenty years later, could have been used by a less capable producer with disastrous effects. But "The Sage Hen" is well acted, and great attention has been given to perfection of detail, so that it reaches the screen a highly likeable audience picture which should please the majority of picturegoers. One of its best points is its even continuity, which prevents the interest from taking any lapses.

It is not the familiar boozing, gambling Western town which opens the picture. Instead it is a more or less peaceful village of the early settlers. "The Sage Hen," a strange woman who has come with her baby boy from some unknown place to live, is the object of the wrath of the Home Purity League of the town. So she is stoned out of town and starts across the desert in a borrowed horse and buggy. Indians attack her and in desperation she straps her little boy across the horse's back, sending the animal back to the town. When she is rescued she is unable to locate her son. The story skips twenty years, with Gladys Brockwell, the "sage hen," doing the best acting we have ever seen from her as the middle aged woman hiding her past. A romance develops between her adopted daughter and her real son, whom Fate and Mr. Solter bring back into the story. There is a villainous gambler, excellently played by James Mason.

Do not think there is no physical action in the picture. There is a shot of a man going through the rapids of a river in a canoe which is a wonder. Lillian Rich and Wallace MacDonald have not much chance to impress.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

An Edgar Lewis production, "The Sage Hen," will be the attraction at the ———— theatre on ————, when it will open for a ———— day run. Mr. Lewis, one of the best known producers in the motion picture field today, has here turned out another masterful drama which will add to his laurels. Reality is its keynote. It faithfully depicts life in Arizona in the eighties, with stirring drama as well as thrilling scenes, from beginning to end.

Mr. Lewis is a producer who does not believe in starring any particular player. Instead of selecting a story to fit one actress, he selects an all-star cast to fit a story which he realizes will please the vast majority of picture audiences in America. This he has done in "The Sage Hen," and it is this that makes the picture a worthy successor of "Lahoma" and "The Beggar in Purple," two of Mr. Lewis' latest screen hits.

The peculiar title of this picture is derived from the name which it was customary to give women of doubtful character back in the days when the gold fever hit one Arizona town after another. In this all-star cast are Gladys Brockwell, formerly a star in her own right, Wallace MacDonald, Lillian Rich, Arthur Morrison and James Mason.

PROGRAM READER

Did you ever hear of "a sage hen?" This is the name of the new Edgar Lewis production which will be the feature attraction at the ———— theatre on ————. "Sage hen" was the term applied to certain women of doubtful character back in the days of the last century when Arizona was in the midst of its gold fever. This production is clean, straightforward drama—the kind of a play that will find favor with the majority of picture goers in America. It stars no particular player, for Mr. Lewis, who produced the feature, believes that the story is the most important thing in any picture. So he has selected a sterling story and secured for it a cast of the same standard. Gladys Brockwell plays the title role. She will be well remembered for her work as a star in numerous Fox features, which won for her a host of followers. Others in the cast are Wallace MacDonald, Lillian Rich, James Mason and Arthur Morrison, all of whom will be well known to picturegoers. Few pictures combine the appeal of the great outdoors with the soul stirring drama, as is done in "The Sage Hen." It is a production you cannot afford to miss.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a picture here, the story of which is laid in the West, but which should not be advertised as a "Western thriller." For it is above that type of picture. You can promise your patrons a stirring drama laid in the West and they will not be disappointed. In the cast there is Gladys Brockwell, the last of whose starring pictures have not been released so long ago that an audience will have forgotten her. So play up her name in your copy. Lillian Rich and Wallace MacDonald will also be recognized. If you have shown "Lahoma" or "The Beggar in Purple," two other Lewis productions, it would be well to recall them. It is also possible to create a whole lot of interest from the title—"The Sage Hen." Few, if any, will know what it means, but it will attract them by its very strangeness. A teaser campaign would heighten the suspense.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last sixteen weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to October 1, 1920.

ALWAYS AUDACIOUS (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID ..... NOV. 20
"Clever twists make interesting crook story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a sure-fire box office attraction. Audiences seemed well pleased." "Story little impossible but business was big. Some fine double exposures in this and picture one of his best." "An entertaining feature which drew well." "Great in story and in production. Wally Reid always has good following and great stories. Went over big." "Better than average business." "An unusually pleasing picture which ran to exceptionally big houses all week. Star an excellent drawing card. Everybody pleased. Good story, well done." "Wallace Reid is very popular with our patrons and 'Always Audacious' pleased our audiences. Did good business for the week." "Entertaining picture. Business was very good during run." "Drew large crowds and met with the favor of home-going audiences." "A good production having entertaining story. Box-office receipts good."

ARE ALL MEN ALIKE? (METRO) MAY ALLISON ..... NOV. 6
"Rather inconsequental for feature length."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair business with a picture that was hard to tell what it was about."

BAIT, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) HOPE HAMPTON ..... JAN. 15
"Rather hectic but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BEAUTIFULLY TRIMMED (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS ..... DEC. 11
"Mediocre picture on a hackneyed theme."—M. P. News.

BEGGAR IN PURPLE, A (EDGAR LEWIS-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST ..... NOV. 13
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

"Novel story given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One theatre considered it such a success that it held it over for a second week." "Splendid production which was well liked by my patrons. Sure-fire box-office attraction." "Very good picture playing to good business. Held for second week." "Undoubtedly one of the best and most successful pictures of the year. Played to exceptionally big business for seven days." "Interesting picture and well put on which appealed to both men and women patrons. Did more than average business for a week." "Doing good business second week. Everyone agrees it's the kind of picture to hold the attention spellbound." "One of the best pictures of the year. Went big all week." "A good picture and box-office attraction which has been held for a second week at the highest class theatre in the city." "With the aid of exploitation, including a prologue, this picture went over big and brought good business." "Held over for a two weeks' run, and did big business throughout. Critics pronounce it one of the best of the year."

BEWARE OF THE BRIDE (FOX) EILEEN PERCY ..... OCT. 30
"This would look better as a two-reel slapstick."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Favorably received and good program picture. Average business three days."

BILLIONS (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA ..... DEC. 11
"Very weak picture material in Nazimova's latest."—M. P. News.

BLACKBIRDS (REALART) JUSTINE JOHNSTONE ..... DEC. 25
"Justine Johnstone is a welcome screen figure in crook melodrama."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A mediocre picture. Star not particularly attractive, but played to good business for reasons unknown."

BLACKMAIL (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... OCT. 16
"Viola Dana gives color to familiar story."—M. P. News.

BLIND WIVES (FOX) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Another episode picture of certain appeal."—P. P. News.

BODY AND SOUL (METRO) ALICE LAKE ..... OCT. 23
"Story of dual personality fairly interesting."—M. P. News.

BRANDING IRON, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... OCT. 23
"Story of primitive passions is rather overdone."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture. Fair box-office results." "Brought a normal business, something unusual for pre-Christmas days."

BROADWAY BUBBLE, THE (VITAGRAPH) CORINNE GRIFFITH ..... NOV. 27
"Corinne Griffith does excellent work in dual role."—M. P. News.
"Did better than average business at two first-run houses simultaneously. Just melodramatic enough to attract, and not too emotional, so as to offend." "Opened big and kept up big all week. A picture that pleased everybody because it is logical."

BROKEN GATE, THE (FROTHINGHAM-HODKINSON) BESSIE BARRISCALE ..... JAN. 1
"Sob sister story is highly theatrical."—M. P. News.

BRUTE MASTER, THE (HODKINSON) HOBART BOSWORTH .... NOV. 6
"Hobart Bosworth scores in vigorous story of the sea."—M. P. News.

BUNTY PULLS THE STRINGS (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST ..... JAN. 15
"Fine production given famous stage comedy."—M. P. News.

CHALLENGE OF THE LAW, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL .... OCT. 23
"Russell at his best; a real entertaining drama."—M. P. News.

CHARM SCHOOL, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WALLACE REID ..... JAN. 8
"Wallace Reid has another winner here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitors Comment.—"Fine picture, pleasing, entertaining, and brought good business." "Wallace Reid went over big in this picture. Our patrons thought it was one of the best of this popular star's productions. Played to excellent business the week preceding New Year's."

CHEATER REFORMED, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL ..... JAN. 15
"William Russell has an entertaining crook picture here."—M. P. News.

CINDERELLA'S TWIN (METRO) VIOLA DANA ..... JAN. 8
"Just misses being very commonplace."—M. P. News.

CITY SPARROW, A (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON ..... DEC. 4
"Weak in drama, but strong in sentiment."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened with usual audiences, but business grew last few days and it went over big." "Mediocre picture lifted from mediocrity by good acting of Ethel Clayton and by splendid direction." "When I put out a poster advertising Ethel Clayton, I sit back and wait for the money to roll in—for she is one of the biggest favorites here on the paramount list. This is one of her weaker stories, but it went over in great shape."

COAST OF OPPORTUNITY, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN ..... DEC. 25
"Picturesque story with Kerrigan in heroic role."—M. P. News.

"Delightful story is enriched on the screen."—M. P. News.

CURTAIN (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD ..... OCT. 16
"Lifelike story suffers from mechanical development."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to exceptional business. Katherine McDonald appears to be growing more popular." "Katherine MacDonald gave entire satisfaction. Picture well produced. Splendid supporting cast. Business very good." "It's by far the best acting Katherine MacDonald has ever done. People liked it well enough to fill two houses for a week simultaneously. Good entertainment." "Averagely pleasing story. Poor ending. Star's work shows improvement." "Very pleasing audience picture to good business. Miss MacDonald's best picture. Story at least for her rational and she is livening up considerably." "Good picture. Did excellent business every day of its engagement." "A fairly good picture which drew well. Katherine MacDonald is very good to look at, but is rather cold."

DANGEROUS BUSINESS (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE ..... DEC. 11
"Rather frail but fairly amusing."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine production which seemed to please and brought fine business."

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST .... NOV. 13
"Vivid, 'punchy' story; production excellent."—M. P. News.

DEVIL TO PAY, THE (BRUNTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Strong mystery story carries interest."—M. P. News.

DEVIL'S GARDEN, THE (BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE .....NOV. 6
"Rather gruesome story, well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment.—"Appeals to the highly sophisticated audience. Opened to very big business." "Its too heavy for the average audience. And it's too gloomy. For those who go to the theatre to see fine acting, this will be a splendid attraction, but not for the vast majority who go only to be amused."

DICE OF DESTINY (HAMPTON-PATHE) H. B. WARNER.....DEC. 11
"H. B. Warner puts 'punch' into strong dramatic story."—M. P. News.

DINTY (NEILAN-FIRST NATIONAL) WESLEY BARRY.....DEC. 4
"Melodrama and Sentiment put this one over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Wesley Barry in this picture is proving a worthy attraction and causing favorable comment." "Big business all week. The public wants plays of this kind." "Picture proved very average drawing card. Work of Wesley Barry considered very good but story as a whole failed to please. Almost too melodramatic." "Good picture. Splendid vacation attraction. Big and little folks all like Wesley Barry." "Personally, think this is better than 'Go and Get It,' but it didn't make quite as much money for me. It's a wonderful picture, and they all liked it." "Made a big hit at this theatre, pulling capacity crowds at each performance. Broke house record." "This is a fine picture and brought good business for me." "Played to increasing business each day. Wonderful kid picture."

DISCARDED WOMAN, THE (HALLMARK) SPECIAL CAST.....JULY 10
"Hectic melodrama with familiar stock situations."—M P. News.

DOWN HOME (WILLART-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 6
"Some interesting moments in this rustic story."—M. N. News.

DRAG HARLAN (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....NOV. 6
"If they like Farnum, it's a good bet."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Our patrons were very glad to see William Farnum back in the good old Western stuff." "More than usual business. Patrons seemed entertained." "William Farnum has a good box office value. Picture liked and box-office returns fine." "Farnum always goes over big in a Western picture." "This is the type of picture they like Farnum in. Extra big business three days."

EMPIRE OF DIAMONDS, THE (PERRET-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST) .....DEC. 25
"A splendid production given mystery story."—M. P. News.

EYES OF THE HEART (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....NOV. 13
"Mary Miles Minter scores in story of pathos and sentiment."—M. P. News.

FACE AT YOUR WINDOW, THE (WILLIAM FOX) SPECIAL CAST .....NOV. 13
"Propaganda picture developed along orthodox lines."—M. P. News.

FATAL HOUR, THE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Crude melodrama makes mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent. Very funny and pleases the patrons who enjoy high class comedy." "A rather poor picture to poor business one day."

FLAME OF YOUTH, THE (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"A pleasing, simple romance with Shirley Mason."—M. P. News.

FLYING PAT (NEW ART-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY GISH .....JAN. 1
"Fairly pleasing offering with Dorothy Gish."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fair picture. Business very good."

FOOD FOR SCANDAL (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....NOV. 13
"Very obvious, but fairly interesting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Light, pleasing little comedy. They came because they liked Wanda—and they did not register a kick. Box-office just fair." "This sure did go over big and the picture deserved it, for it is interesting and entertaining." "Fair picture with only average box-office receipts."

FORBIDDEN THING, THE (DWAN-ASSO. PRODUCERS).....NOV. 27
"Vivid and vital story rich in spiritual quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture to fair business." "A fine production. People stood in line all week to see this picture. Big success." "Well acted and produced but rather long-drawn out; exploitation put it over to big business."

FORBIDDEN VALLEY (BLACKTON-PATHE) MAY MCAVOY-BRUCE GORDON.....OCT. 16
"An exciting story concerning a Kentucky feud."—M. P. News.

FRISKY MRS. JOHNSON, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) BILLIE BURKE .....JAN. 8
"Play seems old-fashioned as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Typical Burke picture, very pleasing, fair business due to holidays."

FURNACE, THE (REALART) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Talky picture has little appeal."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"One of the best pictures I have seen. It has strength and purpose and is wonderfully portrayed by excellent cast. Exceptionally good business." "An absolute sensation. A knockout. Had S. R. O. sign up from opening day till finish of week. One of the best picture I've ever seen." "Unusually good audience picture. Everybody liked it. Opened to big Sunday business." "Very big production. Business better than average." "The plot of the picture is good but the details are not well worked out. It is fair. Average receipts."

GILDED DREAM, THE (UNIVERSAL) CARMEL MYERS.....OCT. 23
"Commonplace story developed along traditional lines."—M. P. News.

GIRL IN THE WEB, THE (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET .....JULY 31
"A splendid production from all angles."—M. P. News
Exhibitor Comment—"A good story. It drew well. Two days to average business." "Fair. Don't think Blanche Sweet belongs in these silly namby-pamby roles. She is one of the best emotional actresses on the screen—but wasted in drivel like this. Box-office only fair."

GIRL OF MY HEART (FOX) SHIRLEY MASON.....DEC. 18
"Star fails to enliven very dull story."—M. P. News.

GIRL WITH THE JAZZ HEART, THE (GOLDWYN) MADGE KENNEDY .....JAN. 8
"Madge Kennedy plays two roles exceptionally well."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This was a corker. I think it the best thing Madge Kennedy has yet done. They all liked it, and I played to capacity houses all week."

GOOD-BAD WIFE, THE (VERA McCORD PRODS.-FILM BOOKING OFFICE) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 30
"Good production given rather illogical story."—M. P. News.

GOOD REFERENCES (FIRST NATIONAL) CONSTANCE TALMADGE .....OCT. 16
"Stars popularity may get it by."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Brought crowded houses as do all Talmadge pictures, either Constance or Norma." "Above the ordinary Constance Talmadge productions, and was well patronized." "Pleases star's followers. Opened to excellent business."

GREAT LOVER, THE (GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Slow Moving that depends largely on titles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A poor picture. Average box-office reecipts." 'Fine picture with some very excellent acting and interesting story. Played to better than average business for week."

GUILTY OF LOVE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOROTHY DALTON .....OCT. 9
"Star gives splendid portrayal of mis-led girl."—M P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is an average picture but drew more than usual business." "Picture fairly popular. Dorothy Dalton very well carries off her emotional role." "Good picture which brought about the usual audiences." "Pleased some classes while some resented it."

HALF A CHANCE (JESSE D. HAMPTON-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST).OCT. 30
"Well acted and directed, but development suffers."—M. P. News.

HARRIET AND THE PIPER (MAYER-FIRST NATIONAL) ANITA STEWART .....OCT. 30
"Favorite formula given rich production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regarded this as just a fair picture and drew average houses." "The entertaining value of this picture is good, and drew more than usual business." "This picture pleased. Business normal. Anita Stewart is only fairly popular." "They liked it—but did not do capacity business. Just fair. Wherever Miss Stewart is popular it should should be a knockout." "A rather poorly motivated play based on an old theme. Anita Stewart's charm and ability help to make it an average drawing card."

HEADIN' HOME (YANKEE-KESSEL & BAUMAN-STATE RIGHTS) BABE RUTH .....OCT. 9
"Babe Ruth makes debut and scores a hit."—M. P. News.

HEARTS ARE TRUMPS (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 11
"A complex melodrama very well produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"There is nothing startling about this production. Ranks about average."

HEARTS UP (UNIVERSAL) HARRY CAREY.....JAN. 1
"Harry Carey has satisfying offering here."—M. P. News.

HELD BY THE ENEMY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 9
"Civil war romance looks good as a picture."—M. P. News.

"A different picture here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fairly entertaining picture given a good production and attracting good business for week run." "Good picture well worth seeing, which was attested by my houses, which were pretty well crowded." "Did well and held over second week. Like most second-weekers here unless they are far above the average or highly advertised it petered out." "An excellent picture in every respect and business grew all week." "One of the season's finest pictures, in my estimation—and my opinion backed up by the fact that it played to capacity business in a house seating twenty-seven hundred. Consider it an excellent production from every angle." "A good picture but did not draw well at my house." "Splendid production. Well liked by audience. Did capacity business during its entire run."

HER BELOVED VILLAIN (REALART) WANDA HAWLEY.....DEC. 18
"French farce adaptation that falls short in American requirements."—M.P. News.
Exhbitor Comment—"A good picture to average business three days."

HER UNWILLING HUSBAND (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET .....NOV. 27
"Good production given average story."—M. P. News.

HONEYMOON RANCH (BERT LUBIN-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 23
"Old time western full of real cowboys and has action galore."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Played to standing room. Strong posters pulled in crowds. Allene Ray pleasing as star. Picture very well received. Best Western shown here for long time. Patrons asked for others like it. Full of action and suspense and the kind that draws crowds back to see more of the same kind."

HOUSE OF WHISPERS, THE (BRUNTON-HODKINSON) J. WARREN KERRIGAN .....OCT. 2
"Kerrigan has another interesting mystery story."—M. P. News.

HUNDREDTH CHANCE, THE (STOLL-PATHE) SPECIAL CAST...JAN. 8
"Familiar story is well picturized."—M. P. News.

IDOLS OF CLAY (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MAE MURRAY....NOV. 27
"Colorful production marked by good incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew 13,000 paid admissions the day it opened. A wonderful drawing card." "Opening week equalled 'On with the Dance.' Held for second week. Picture makes 'em talk." "Went over big. Certainly a sure fire production, both as to entertainment and box office value." "Big business second week. Thrilling. Gorgeous sets and sensational title are big attractions." "A good picture filled with sex appeal that did a good business." "Opened up extra big and continued so during week run." "This picture brought very good business and people seemed attracted to it because of title." "Elaborate production and fine photography. Story seemed to hold the interest of our patrons. Played to above average for a week." "Carried fair houses and did enough business to warrant a second week's booking." "Somewhat gruesome. Did big business. Held over second week." "Picture is quite fair. Good business during run."

IN THE HEART OF A FOOL (DWAN-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 23
"Very good entertainment in this complicated story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good audience picture. Its many leading love themes are apt to be confusing but it opened very big." "Good productions, which brought the crowds." "A rather complicated theme which kept up the suspense until the end. However, a bit too melodramatic in spots."

IRON RIDER, THE (FOX) WILLIAM RUSSELL.....DEC. 4
"Below William Russell's previous work; only slightly interesting.—M. P. News.

JUCKLINS, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST DEC. 25
"Rural story rich in detail and atmosphere."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pleased those who saw it, but the title not well known enough at this date, with result that it carried no popular appeal."

JAILBIRD, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) DOUGLAS MACLEAN.....OCT. 9
"Rather obvious, but fairly diverting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"MacLean does good work in a typical Charles Ray part—but it was not his sort of role, at all. May very good, also." "Disappointing after seeing '23½ Hours Leave.' Fair business." "Very bad for the star and weak story. Business was poor." "Picture started big, slumped, and then ended big. But on the whole it's a lemon." "A usual Doug. MacLean and Doris May production which did the business. Both of these actors have been very popular in this city since appearing in '23½ Hours' Leave.'"

JUST PALS (FOX) BUCK JONES.....NOV. 27
"Jones in new type of story; good entertainment."—M. P. News.

KISMET (ROBERTSON-COLE) OTIS SKINNER.....NOV. 6
"Otis Skinner gives superb performance in lavish production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Unable to handle the crowds. Broke house record even at advanced prices." "Opened fine and improved daily. Wonderful acting on part of Otis Skinner. Marvelous sets." "Wonderful picture. Consistently large attendance. A masterpiece, according to general talk around town." "Broke all attendance records. The kind of picture that points to big things in 1921 picturedom. A remarkable production in every way." "Wonderful picture. Brought great box office reports."

LAST OF THE MOHICANS, THE (TOURNEUR-ASSO. PRODUCERS) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"A Masterpiece of its kind."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"It's certainly a screen classic. Wonderful realism throughout. Exceptionally good cast. Crowded houses from the first performance of opening day right through the week." "Opened to great business. Assured of great success. Don't miss this one."

LEOPARD WOMAN, THE (ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS).....OCT. 16
"Melodramatic romance adapted from adventure story."—M. P. News.

"Fun and hokum in Fatty Arbuckle's Latest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An entertaining feature and a good box office attraction." "A laugh-getting Arbuckle comedy which played to good business for one week with an increased attendance the last part of the engagement." "Fine picture. Splendid business. Excellent entertainment. The kind of show it's a pleasure to run. Everybody comes into the theatre expecting to have a good time and go out happy."

LIGHT WOMAN, THE (AMERICAN) HELEN JEROME EDDY .....OCT. 9
"Not above the average."—M. P. News.

LITTLE 'FRAID LADY, THE (ROBERTSON-COLE) MAE MARSH..DEC. 4
"Mae Marsh returns to screen, ideally cast."—M. P. News.

LITTLE GREY MOUSE, THE (FOX) LOUISE LOVELY.....NOV. 13
"New star's first picture mildly interesting."—M. P. News.

LOVE (J. PARKER READ, JR.-ASSO. PRODUCERS) LOUISE GLAUM .....DEC. 11
"Louise Glaum scores in familiar picture, sumptuously mounted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The title's enough to bring all the women. It's thrilling and surprising, but never offensive. Good business at two simultaneous first-run houses." "Fair picture; did average business three consensus days." "Good picture, good puller."

LOVE'S FLAME (FIDELITY PICTURES CO.) THOS. J. CARRIGAN-VIVIENNE OSBORNE .....OCT. 16
"Story has distinctive appeal."—M. P. News.

LURE OF CROONING WATER, THE (STOLL-PATHE) IVY DUKE-GUY NEWELL .....JAN. 15
"Interesting exposition of eternal triangle."—M. P. News.

MAD LOVE (VICTOR KREMER PRODUCTION) LINA CAVALIERI .....NOV. 6
"Average production stars Cavalieri."—M. P. News.

MADAME PEACOCK (NAZIMOVA-METRO) NAZIMOVA.....OCT. 16
"Picture looks artificial through poor direction and acting."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew big houses each day. This city has large number of Nazimova 'fans' and these liked the film. The women were exceptionally pleased with it." "Nazimova popular here. House did a normal business only. Lack of punch in previous Nazimova picturets has affected the box office." "The crowds came to see this picture because they are enthusiastic about the star, Nazimova. Drew well for entire week. "Worst Nazimova picture ever produced and shows plainly lack of direction and lack of judgment in picking story. Another picture like this and Nazimova is finished." "One of the best money-getters I've had in a long time. Personally, did not care for the picture, so why worry?" "Poor picture, business fair. Believe Nazimova is falling back in her stories. If she keeps this up she's liable to lose her popularity."

MADAM X (GOLDWYN) PAULINE FREDERICK..... .....OCT. 9
"Tremendous drama faultlessly acted and skillfully produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to very poor business; competition to circus and Fair as well. But has built steadily up etver since. Business, total, very good. A fine picture—a classic." "Not up to the standard of Nazimova pictures. There are moments in the picture that do not ring true. However, Nazimova followers seemed satisfied." "An average production. Box office returns fair." "Despite the fact that most persons who saw it seemed to like it, it didn't reach expectations. Crowds were only average all week, and my report is only 'fair.'" "Pleased immensely. Star at her best. Went big all week."

"Fairbanks puts over another surefire attraction."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Big box-office attraction on account of star's popularity. Very good picture." "Great picture. Drew packed houses. Well received and well liked." "Best picture Douglas Fairbanks ever made. We have had such big business during its two weeks run that we are holding it over for a third week." "Very good picture to fine business." "This picture makes a hit with the men. The women do not seem as enthusiastic. Drawing big matinees. Will hold over for another week.'" "Sure did go over well. And the picture is worth it. Had crowded houses during run."
Consensus—"Excellent picture, big puller."

MARRIAGE PIT, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO.....OCT. 16
"Interesting story of big business and feminine pride."—M. P. News.

MASTER MIND, THE (FIRST NATIONAL) LIONEL BARRYMORE .....OCT. 9
"Melodrama of interesting quality."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An artistic picture which played to only average houses." "Barrymore is a great favorite. The picture pleased." "Large audiences. Very good attraction." "Powerful and very high grade picture which did better than average business." "Business very good all week. Fair entertainment qualities. Star the real drawing card." "This picture was nothing out of the ordinary but it drew very well." "Fairly good picture. More than usual business." "Big attraction. Picture full of interest. Box office receipts large."

"Perfectly constructed picture stamps De Mille as master director."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A splendid production. Great business. Held for second week on demand."

MISLEADING LADY, THE (METRO) BERT LYTELL.....JAN. 1
"Stage adaptation is fairly successful as picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The production was not much above average, but the audience seemed to like it."

MODERN SALOME, A (HOPE HAMPTON-METRO) HOPE HAMPTON (FEB. 1).....JAN. 31
"Satisfied from all angles."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An average picture which did big business for three days." "My patrons did not like this one at all." "This is a very poor offering, and we had dull business during run."
Consensus—"Average picture, average puller."

MONEY-CHANGERS, THE (BENJ. B. HAMPTON-PATHE).....NOV. 6
"Hectic melodrama may draw in the neighborhood houses."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—consistently satisfactory business all week." "Went over in fine shape. Corking good story with plenty of action, and it scored nicely."

MR. WU (STOLL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA) LANG-M'CARTHY .....JAN. 1
"Unique and strongly dramatic from plot angle."—M. P. News.

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

NEW YORK IDEA, THE (REALART) ALICE BRADY.....DEC. 18
"Stage success not so good as a picture."—M. P. News.

NINETEEN AND PHYLLIS (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY .....JAN. 8
"Ray scores again with pleasing study of small town life."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good entertainment. Ray at his best. Average business throughout week."

NOMADS OF THE NORTH (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST..OCT. 9
"Colorful backgrounds and vivid action in this picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good, played to better than average business. Lots of action. The big scenes, especially those in which the animals participated, made a big hit." "Not up to some of the other Curwood stories but was liked. Average business." "ood business on this picture, which seemed to please." "Splendid picture which did big business for us although it played the week of Christmas." "A good picture with some excellent scenic effects and an interesting story." "Certainly a sure-fire box office attraction. Just packed 'em in. As to picture value, it is very entertaining indeed."

NORTH WIND'S MALICE, THE (REX BEACH-GOLDWYN) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 30
"Probably the best Beach picture yet produced."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not much. Did fair business." "Good picture of the cold Northwest which did excellent business for two weeks, having been held over a second week on account of the large crowds it drew the first seven days." "A very good picture, to very good business considering the fact that it is the week before Christmas." "This is the sort of picture they seem to like. Went over big three days."

OFFICER 666 (GOLDWYN) TOM MOORE.....NOV. 13
"Fair entertainment, but titles earn most of the laughs."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"The combination of Moore and a popular stage success won. Public praised the picture." "Not up to Tom Moore's standard, although it did fair business for a week." "Fine picture and box-office returns while not especially great were satisfying." "This feature brought more than usual business and seemed to please my patrons." "Good picture and sure-fire box-office attraction. Crowds packed the house every performance." "A very clever adaptation of the stage success. Tom Moore at his best, but as in the case of all previous stage and stock productions, business far below average."

OH, LADY, LADY (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....JAN. 1
"Rather light but entertaining."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"An excellent picture. Bebe Daniels has become very popular here in her short career as a star. This picture has lost nothing; it is transition to the movies." "Good picture to average business." "Great. Bebe certainly has a great following here, and this picture went over 100% better than her first. Believe she is going to be one of the biggest drawing cards among stellar-folk." "Good picture and business was very good during run."

OLD FASHIONED BOY, AN (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) CHARLES RAY .....NOV. 13
"Not much to the story, but Ray puts it over."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good—but last two Ray pictures not up to Ray standard." "Ray always good and does not fall down on this. Had more than usual business." "Should have been called the Whirling Dervish. Ray runs around and whirls like he was crazy. Only fair business." "Consider this an average picture. Business about as usual." "A good show. Comfortable entertainment. Played to steady business all week. (Middle West.)" "One of the poorest things Ray has ever done. They came because it was Ray—but they didn't enjoy it." "An amusing farce, but not quite up to some of Ray's recent efforts. A good box-office attraction, howeve." "Audience greatly enjoyed star in this picture ,which attracted overflow business during holidays." "Not up to the usual Ray picture and after opening business dwindled."

ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN (HOLUBAR-UNIVERSAL) DOROTHY PHILLIPS .....OCT. 16
"Absorbing story well produced and acted."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dorothy Phillips does some of the best work of her career in this picture, which is interesting and handsomely produced. Did splendid business at this theatre." "Just completed second and very successful week. I make a practice of one week runs, or even three days, but this picture played to two weeks' capacity business." "A poor attraction, very little to redeem it. Business far below normal." "Established a new record for our box office and received more favorable comments than any picture ever played." "Capacity business all the week. Picture pleased all." "Broke all records. Turned them away Sunday." "Ran this picture a week and never at any time have had anything more pleasing or which made more friends." "Record business for the week. One of the few pictures that we really could give the public to combat the opening of a big new house in opposition." "Story and star met with great applause which is excellent evidence of their satisfaction." "This is one of the finest pictures I have shown this year."

PAGAN LOVE (BALLIN-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 4
"Magazine story developed into mediocre picture."—M. P. News.

PASSION (FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 23
"German picture is spectacular; wonderfully acted."—M. P. News.

PASSIONATE PILGRIM, THE (COSMOPOLITAN-PARAMOUNT) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Better than average picture from well known novel."—M. P. News.

PASSION'S PLAYGROUND (FIRST NATIONAL) KATHERINE MACDONALD .....OCT. 16
"An artificial story holds it back."—M. P. News.

PEACEFUL VALLEY (KANE-FIRST NATIONAL) CHARLES RAY..OCT. 23
"Humorous incident, rustic settings and Charles Ray—enough."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Registered a big hit. A real Ray triumph. Audiences applaud enthusiastically." "Very good week. Ray always sure of big business. This considered much better than '45 Minutes from Broadway.'" "Charles Ray in any story is enough to pack this house. In 'Peaceful Valley' he is cast in a role that his admirers want to see him in. The picture attracted capacity houses for a seven-day run." "Did very well. Picture entertaining and box-office results good." "A pleasing feature which took well in my theatre. As to box-office value it is a pretty good bet." "An improvement over "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." but not his best by any means. Usual business."

PEDDLER OF LIES, THE (UNIVERSAL) FRANK MAYO (MAR. 1) .....JAN. 31
"Good production of mechanical and unreal plot."—M. P. News.

PENALTY, THE (GOLDWYN-EMINENT AUTHORS) SPECIAL CAST .....NOV. 27
"Great vehicle for Lon Chaney, but falls short in many ways."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture, although some women were shocked at the idea of Lon Chaney with legs cut off." "Very good. Chaney's work is wonderful. Average business four days." "Wonderful story and very fine acting on Chaney's part. Good business." "A great picture. It went over exceedingly well. Was well liked, and brought big box-office returns."

PINK TIGHTS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....SEPT. 25
"Slight story, but entertaining incident, in circus picture." M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Great picture. Turned them away at night." "The boiled down opinions on this picture is 'Old Stuff.'"

PLUNGER, THE (FOX) GEORGE WALSH.....NOV. 20
"Story of frenzied finance makes ordinary picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is a surprise. First time Walsh has been tried out for a week here. Even in the week before Christmas it drew."

POLLY WITH A PAST (METRO) INA CLAIRE.....DEC. 18
"Ina Claire's rare artistry makes her a welcome screen figure."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Only fair. The picture is entertaining but lacks pep."

PRAIRIE TRAILS (FOX) TOM MIX.....JAN. 1
"Trivial story, senseless action and a few good thrills."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Regular Mix picture. Well liked. Big crowds, mostly men." "A fine picture which brought more than usual business."

PREY, THE (VITAGRAPH) ALICE JOYCE.....OCT. 9
"Alice Joyce has highly involved story here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Patrons did not like this one. Two days to average and poor business." "One of the best Alice Joyce subjects this year. Did unusually well at the box-office." "Average production, nothing out of ordinary. Business fair."

RISKY BUSINESS (UNIVERSAL) GLADYS WALTON.....DEC. 4
"Good combination makes interesting picture."—M. P. News.

ROGUES AND ROMANCE (PATHE) SEITZ-CAPRICE-COURTOT..JAN. 1
"Good production given thrilling story."—M. P. News.

ROOKIE'S RETURN, THE (INCE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) MACLEAN-MAY .....JAN. 8
"Quite frail but fairly pleasing."—M. P. News.

SCUTTLERS, THE (FOX) WILLIAM FARNUM.....DEC. 25
"Farnum has a 'He-Man' role in story of the sea."—M. P. News.

SHE PLAYED AND PAID (JOAN FILM SALES) FANNIE WARD..NOV. 27
"Fannie Ward's acting the redeeming feature here."—M. P. News.

SHOCKING NIGHT, A (UNIVERSAL) LYONS-MORAN.....JAN. 15
"Not substantial enough for five reels."—M. P. News.

SILVER LINING, THE (METRO) JEWEL CARMEN.....JAN. 15
"Interesting crook play brings Jewel Carmen back to the screen."—M. P. News.

SINS OF ROSANNE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) ETHEL CLAYTON .....OCT. 23
"Very little appeal in this wildly fantastic story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Pretty good business. Satisfactory to people willing to accept story as just movie. Rather good drawing qualities. Many liked it."

SLAVE OF VANITY, A (ROBERTSON-COLE) PAULINE FREDERICK .....OCT. 30
"Big from a production and acting standpoint."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good business. The picture satisfied a critical audience." "Fair picture, business very good."

SMILING ALL THE WAY (D. N. SCHWAB-STATE RIGHTS) DAVID BUTLER .....NOV. 27
"Butler's third is well produced and thoroughly interested."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"David Butler's popularity growing with each picture. There was nothing spectacular about this—but it was a clean little picture, well received."

SO LONG LETTY (CHRISTIE-ROBERTSON-COLE) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 30
"Famous stage success intelligently adapted to screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Street car scene where bathing girls disrobe should be cut out by all exhibitors that run it, as it has some bad morals."

SOMEONE IN THE HOUSE (METRO) SPECIAL CAST.....NOV. 13
"Interesting crook story, well directed and acted."—M. P. News.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT (DE MILLE-PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 30
"Impressive moments in this artistic production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Excellent production in every way." "A great picture and drew like house afire." "Now here is a picture. Typical De Mille cast, direction and all. Not as enjoyable throughout, of course, as 'Why Change Your Wife,' but finely built for contrast of action and suspense. Big business carried over another week." "Drew very good houses to excellent business during fourth week of its run. Crowds continued." "Picture so good business grows. Held for a third week." "This picture is entertaining and sure did go over extra big. House crowded every performance." "Holding for second week in a one-week house which tells the story."

SONG OF THE SOUL, THE (MESSMORE KENDALL-GOLDWYN) VIVIAN MARTIN.....OCT. 23
"Fine basic plot, but lacks action and incident."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a great picture but Vivian Martin's charm and cleverness put it over. Played to good business for a week."

SPENDERS, THE (HAMPTON-HODKINSON) SPECIAL CAST.....JAN. 15
"Quite interesting picture made from best seller."—M. P. News.

SQUANDERED LIVES (STOLL FILM COMPANY OF AMERICA)..JAN. 1
"Viewed from all angles, rather a notable film"—M. P. News.

STAR ROVER, THE (SHURTLEFF-METRO) COURTNEY FOOT-THELMA PERCY .....NOV. 27
"Artistic production, but disappointing for a London story."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good. The plot is well put together and the details are worked out well."

SWEET LAVENDER (REALART) MARY MILES MINTER.....OCT. 16
"Ideal vehicle for star, though it lacks substance."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Drew well all week. Audiences like the plot." "One of the greatest surprises of the season. Considered the poorest picture this star has ever played in—yet it did capacity business."

SUNSET SPRAGUE (FOX) BUCK JONES.....OCT. 9
"Having enough thrills, it makes a good western."—M. P. News.

39 EAST (REALART) CONSTANCE BINNEY.....SEPT. 25
"Entertaining picture made from stage success."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Fine picture. Brought good business." "Great picture. A sure fire money getter. Drew large crowds with large box-office results." "Not very well liked. No box-office value." "By far the best thing this star has done. She always draws well for me, but never so well as in this. Would like as many more like it as I can get." "Great stuff." "An average picture, with fair business." "Fine! Acting splendid. Subtitles are a scream. People who had seen the play said the picture was better. Picture brings out the comedy to better advantage. Good cast all the way through." "Fairly interesting picture, usual patronage."

TESTING BLOCK, THE (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT) WILLIAM S. HART .....DEC. 18
"Sure fire western with star in the kind of role that made him famous."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Certainly a fine picture and a sure-fire box-office attraction. Picture seemed to please and went fine all week." "Best Bill had done to date." "An average picture which went over big. Hart great favorite here." "Best picture Hart's made in a long while. Marks his return to the sort he does best and that people want. Fine business."

TEXAN, THE (FOX) TOM MIX.....NOV. 27
"Average entertainment in this Mix offering."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Tom Mix still popular. Picture pleases though not as good as other recent ones. We boosted a Clyde Cook comedy to help business."

THAT GIRL MONTANA (HAMPTON-PATHE) BLANCHE SWEET..JAN. 8
"Star dominates pleasing production."—M. P. News.

THIEF, THE (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....DEC. 11
Fairly interesting, with Pearl White scoring a hit."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Thoroughly pleased audiences, with result that picture got good box-office play. Pearl White feature our audiences liked."

THOUGHTLESS WOMEN (GOODMAN-PIONEER) ALMA RUBENS.NOV. 27
"Human document with real life-like touches."—M. P. News.

THOUSAND TO ONE, A (J. PARKER READ-ASSO. PRODUCERS) HOBART BOSWORTH .....DEC. 25
"Arbitrary plot and coincidence hinder the values here."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good picture. Virile. Interesting. Steady business all week in spite of proximity to Christmas." "A great picture but poor business on account of the holiday season."

TIGER'S CUB (FOX) PEARL WHITE.....OCT. 16
"Pearl White makes thoroughly interesting Alaskan picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This is the second Pearl White feature. It failed to draw, so a Harold Lloyd comedy was added to the program." "Very entertaining picture and went well with my patrons."
Consensus—Good picture, good puller."

TO PLEASE ONE WOMAN (LOIS WEBER PRODUCTIONS-PARA-MOUNT .....JAN. 1
"Falls rather short for a Lois Weber production."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Not a big picture ,but up to the average. Played to fair business." "Picture only fair; business good because of the fact that it is a holiday week."

TORRENT, THE (UNIVERSAL) EVA NOVAK.....JAN. 8
"Orthodox story makes rather colorful picture."—M. P. News.

TRUANT HUSBAND, THE (ROCKETT FILM CORP.) SPECIAL CAST .....OCT. 23
"Simple and human is this contribution."—M. P. News.

TRUMPET ISLAND (VITAGRAPH) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 16
"Spectacular melodrama is rich in action and thrills"—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A fine picture, pleasing and entertaining. Drew more than usual business." "Very fine picture. Spectacular and exciting. Did exceptional business first week of showing, with indications for a big second week. Broke house records second Sunday." "Good business. Pictures liked, especially the comedy parts in the beginning. The ending slightly changed, which gives it more credence." "A nice picture that generally satisfied. Fairly good houses all week." "Pleased big audiences." "Splendid picture, full of thrills and box box-office attraction. Broke house record during two weeks' run."

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS, THE (WHITMAN BENNETT-FIRST NATIONAL) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 25
"Orthodox but careful production of well-known play."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Opened to good business. Audience seemed delighted with it." "Drew very strongly at the box office and my people liked the picture."

PICTURE BRAND STAR RELEASED PLAN BOOK

"Famous stage success scores a hit on the screen."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Audiences laughed long and heartily. Seemed to give entire satisfaction." "Spicy advertising helped to keep the ticket sellers busy." "Excellent polite comedy. Nothing risque in it, but always spicy. Splendid week's business." "One of the best comedies I have played in a long time. Went over great. Box-office receipts entirely satisfactory for week's run." "Carter de Haven at his best, but many did not like it. Poor business due to holidays." "Another stage farce gone wrong. A good program picture. Business about average."

TWO KINDS OF LOVE (UNIVERSAL) SPECIAL CAST.....DEC. 25
"Rather crude, but has moments of interest."—M. P. News.

TWO MOONS (FOX) BUCK JONES.....JAN. 8
"Jones in a story of gunplay and hard riding."—M. P. News.

UNCLE SAM OF FREEDOM RIDGE (HARRY LEVEY-STATE RIGHTS) SPECIAL CAST.....OCT. 9
"Propaganda picture doubtful as to entertainment."—M. P. News.

UNFORTUNATE SEX, THE (FRANK GERSTEN, INC.-STATE RIGHTS) FRANCES EDMONDE-GEORGE LARKIN.....NOV. 6
"Theme has pulling power, but it drags towards the end."—M. P. News.

"Very ordinary western for Carey."—M. P. News.

WHEN WE WERE TWENTY-ONT (HAMPTON-PATHE) H. B. WARNER .....JAN. 15
"H. B. Warner excels in entertaining comedy-drama."—M. P. News.

WHITE YOUTH (UNIVERSAL) EDITH ROBERTS.....DEC. 18
"Edith Roberts has frail and obvious picture here."—M. P. News.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL (REALART) BEBE DANIELS.....OCT. 16
"A real success from every angle."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"This picture is very pleasing, box-office receipts about average." "A very pleasing little picture; star has made a place for herself and this picture suits her to a 'T'." "Bebe Daniels shows that she is a real actress. She had a good production and drew well." "Business poor on account of weather. The best and most entertaining picture we have had in months."
Consensus—"Pleasing picture, average puller."

"Flashbacks" on Earlier Releases

"Black Is White" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Good feature; gave satisfaction."

"A Damsel in Distress" (June Caprice)—"Did not please here. Poor business one day."

"Humoresque" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Excellent picture. Several liked it better than "The Miracle Man." Big business one day."

"Young Mrs. Winthrop" (Paramount-Artcraft)—"Fair feature. Clayton not popular here. Average business one day."

"Bright Skyes" (Robertson-Cole)—"Very good picture. Only average business."

"The Amazing Woman" (Selznick)—"Good picture to big business for two days."

"Polly of the Storm Country" (First National)—"A very good picture. Played two days to big business. Audience pleased."

"The Third Generation" (Robertson-Cole)—"Fair picture; nothing out of the ordinary. Average business two days."

"A Man's Plaything" (Selznick)—"Two days to average business."

"Married Life" (Sennett)—"Funny—it had interest of audiences throughout. Big to average business two days."

"Nurse Marjorie" (Realart)—"Good program picture; mildly pleasing." "Average business one day."

"Suds" (Pickford)—"Well directed, consistent characterization. Finish probably follows book but weak for picture audiences. Pleased fifty per cent of patrons. Big business two days."

"Why Change Your Wife" (Paramount)—"Fine and drew big. Big business two days."

"Darling Mine" (Select)—"Good picture. Poor business on account of rain."

"Dangerous Talent" (American)—"Good-poor business for one day."

"Everywoman" (Paramount)—"Return date. Average business one day."

"Dr. Jekyll & Mr. Hyde" (Paramount)—"Too gruesome, none of the ladies liked it. Public wants pleasant subjects in pictures. Extra big to average business two days."

"The Greatest Question" (First National)—"Very good. Extra big business two days."

"In Folly's Trail" (Universal)—"Very good. Extra big business two days."

"Evangeline" (Fox)—"A good production to big business for two days."

Leadership

¶ Motion Picture News takes pardonable pride in leading the way to the First Nation-Wide Motion Picture and Musical Conference.

¶ Next Monday, January 24th, at the Hotel Astor, New York City, and for the two days following, there will be gathered leaders of motion picture and musical thought.

¶ Aiming at cooperative discussion and exchange of thought that will weld the two arts in strong cohesion.

¶ You are invited; your presence will help.

First Impressions

Posters form the first contact between the exhibitor and the public. While prospective patrons are only thinking of attending the performance, they are actually seeing the posters. The first impression is being made, and that is the impression upon which they will probably act. In other words the posters will either make or lose a sale. A poster that is either poor, cheap or mediocre, will look cheap, poor, or mediocre,—and the public will unconsciously associate the same identical qualities with the photo-play so advertised. Whether or not the suspicion is correct does not matter. The result is the same. The ticket sale is lost for the exhibitor is not in a position to personally argue the matter. That is the function of the poster—and the cheap,—poor,—or mediocre poster cannot do it convincingly. But a great poster,—a RITCHEY poster,—can, and does carry conviction. It puts the public in a responsive mood. It imparts a keen curiosity that can only be satisfied by seeing the film itself,—for whether or not a man's heart can be reached through his stomach, his purse can certainly be touched through his curiosity,—and the surest way to arouse that curiosity is through the use of RITCHEY posters.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in "THE TRAVELING SALESMAN"

James Forbes' world famous farce comedy adapted to Arbuckle's own particular brand of fun, and directed by Joseph Henabery, who made "Brewster's Millions" and "The Life of the Party."

Cosmopolitan production "THE WILD GOOSE" by Gouverneur Morris

Played by Mary MacLaren, Norman Kerry, Holmes Herbert and Dorothy Bernard. Personally directed by Albert Capellani.

Thomas Meighan in "BILLY KANE"

John D. Swain's delightfully humorous story which ran serially in Munsey's Magazine. Meighan plays a crook who reforms when he inherits money, and mingles socially with the same people he used to burglarize. A whimsical romance laid in Paris and New York.

Thomas H. Ince special "THE BRONZE BELL" by Louis Joseph Vance

The famous writer's best-selling tale of adventurous romance, made up of countless surprises and thrills. Acted by a typical Ince cast, and personally supervised by the producer.

"APPEARANCES"

A Donald Crisp production, taken from Edward Knoblock's first original screen story. Made in beautiful English settings with a wonderful cast of English stars, and featuring David Powell, hero of "On with the Dance," "The Right to Love" and "Idols of Clay."

Douglas MacLean in "ONE A MINUTE"

A Thomas H. Ince production adapted from Fred Jackson's famous farce. Directed by Jack Nelson, who did "The Rookie's Return."

Ethel Clayton in "SHAM"

Henrietta Crosman's greatest stage success, written by Elmer Harris and Geraldine Bonner. A wholesome, spontaneous, exciting and timely drama with a wonderful cast, directed by Thomas Heffron.

William DeMille's production "THE LOST ROMANCE" by Edward Knoblock

A combination of director and author working on a super-special of extraordinary interest. The author of "Kismet," "Appearances" and other pieces is working directly with the great director of "The Prince Chap," "Midsummer Madness" and "What Every Woman Knows."

"MARRIED STRANGERS" a Lois Weber production

The greatest yet to come from Lois Weber. A timely and all-absorbing insight into real married life, played by a cast in every way equal to all the accomplished Weber players.

Cosmopolitan Production "THE BRIDE'S PLAY," with Marion Davies

This picture is a gem of spectacular beauty both as to gorgeous gowns, magnificent sets (designed by Josef Urban), and wholesome, absorbing story by Donn Byrne. Wyndham Standing is the leading man.

WALLACE REID in a new production

Particulars of which will soon be announced.

DOROTHY DALTON in an adaptation of E. Phillips Oppenheim's romantic story-drama, "Jeanne of the Marshes."

"THE MYSTERY ROAD" with David Powell

A Famous Players-British Producer's production, specially directed by Paul Powell, director of "Pollyanna," with a great cast including Marion May, brilliant Russo-Italian star. Scenes on the Riviera, in French villages and in London are in this great melodrama by E. Phillips Oppenheim.

William A. Brady's production "LIFE"

A spectacular presentation of the tremendous melodrama by Thompson Buchanan, which ran a year at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, and was pronounced the most gigantic dramatic production ever staged.

Two more productions for release in July to be announced

Cosmopolitan Production "GET RICH QUICK WALLINGFORD"

George Randolph Chester's great character, put into films by Luther Reed with Sam Hardy and Norman Kerry. Directed by Frank Borzage, director of "Humoresque."

William S. Hart in "TRAVELING ON"

A William S. Hart production that marks the highest point of that great western actor's career.

Douglas MacLean in "BELL BOY 13"

The tentative title of a Thomas H. Ince production with MacLean in the sort of role it takes him to play.

Thomas Meighan in "TALL TIMBERS"

From a story written especially for Mr. Meighan by A. B. Scherer and therefore giving the Good Luck Star every opportunity for another great piece of human acting.

"THE PRINCESS OF NEW YORK"

A Famous Players-British production, adapted from Cosmo Hamilton's famous novel, staged in England with well known British actors.

Ethel Clayton in "THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR"

Another big real-life story by Cosmo Hamilton, author of "Midsummer Madness" and other successful screen plays. Miss Clayton plays a struggling young artist in New York's Bohemian quarter.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle in "CRAZY TO MARRY"

From a Saturday Evening Post story by Frank Condon. A roaring farce with as much fun in it as "The Life of the Party" and "Brewster's Millions."

"YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE"

Christie Comedies are built around "youth."

Al. Christie's name has been identified with comedies since the introduction of this form of entertainment into the motion picture industry.

Exhibitors have made Christie Comedies popular with motion picture audiences. Exhibitors have made the public know Christie as a man who makes good comedies. Christie's success is due to two elements—first, he always makes consistently good comedies; second, the exhibitor himself, recognizing this fact, has booked Christie's product consistently for better prices year after year. This has forced Christie's product to the attention of the theatre-going public.

EDDY ECKELS - Gen Mgr
RICHARD ROBERTSON DIRECTOR OF EXPLOITATION

WORLD DISTRIBUTORS — EXPLOITATION SECTION

The Key To Independence

This is the year that the independents are going to do either one thing of two things. They will either build themselves an everlasting monument or else dig their own grave. It is the year of the State Right men's biggest opportunity. If they watch their step the open market will be so everlastingly established in another twelve months that nothing can shake it. There are four things for independent exchanges to do. First, and most important, they must strengthen themselves financially It is going to take a bankroll to play the game the way its got to be played in the next twelve months. Its going to take a bankroll so big that all drafts and C. O. D's may be met fully and promptly. The money that goes into that channel is the money that will keep the life blood flowing in the veins of the producers who are specializing on the independent market, and turning out the kind of pictures that make money for the State Right exchanges.

Another thing, independents must play clean ball. Sharp shooters and shyserts play straight clean ball or get kicked out. Tricky dealings will not be tolerated. Leave that to the program monopoly. The exhibitor is for you. Show him you are square shooters and he will play you fifty-fifty.

Adjustments with exhibitors must be made with record breaking speed. Verbal and written contracts must be kept to the letter. If the independents refuse to buy junk, they will not be required to sell it. Let 1921 sound the death knell of this kind of stuff. Buy on the basis of quality and merit. Buy nothing but good pictures. You'll find a big demand for them.

Remember: You don't have to take somebody else's leavings this year unless you choose to do so. The selective privilege is yours. Exercise it! Watch your step and you have got the enemy licked and yourself established with your feet on solid rock. That's where the independent market has it over the program monopoly forty ways.

EXPLOITATION HITHERTO UNAPPROACHED

THIS IS FOR INDEPENDENT FILM ASSOCIATION EXCHANGES AND EXHIBITORS DOING BUSINESS WITH THEM.

The Independent Films Association has in Richard Robertson, Harry Rice and Eddy Eckels, a committee on advertising and exploitation not to be equalled by any distributing organization in the industry.

This statement is not made by either of the three gentlemen mentioned, and only allowed to appear after much solicitation on the part of the writer. However, facts are facts. All three of these gentlemen have done big things in this particular field, Mr. Robertson on the Coast, Mr. Eckels in Chicago, and Mr. Rice in New York, as director of publicity of Universal Film Mfg. Company.

Most of the Independent Films Association franchise holders have been notified of the "BIG IDEA." This idea unquestionably is the biggest publicity and exploitation stunt ever attempted by any company. It will unqestionably scoop the industry. It is still a secret. All you have to do is to tell us that you will use it exclusively for Neal Hart, and the secret will be unfolded to you.

Already those in line are as follows: Illinois & Indiana Film Exchange, Chicago; Commonwealh Film Corporation, New York; Cresent Film Company, Kansas City; S. & S. Film & Supply Company, Pittsburgh; Twentieth Century Film Company, Philadelphia; and United Film Service, St. Louis.

Don't forget that this is the "BIG IDEAL!" It is absolutely new.

MAX ROBERT'S COMEDIES

Eddy Eckels and other officers of the Independent Films Association, together with several of the franchise holders, a number of Chicago exhibitors and newspaper men, saw four two reel comedies starring Max Roberts. The unanimous verdict was that all four of them were as good as any on the market. The Independent Films Association immediately contracted with Max Roberts to appear in Pinnacle Comedies. They will be released one every two weeks. Max Roberts will replace Leo White as the leading comedian of the Pinnacle Comedies. This product has been seen and the Independent Films Association places its stamp of approval on them. The company will be headed by Samuel Klein as president and Mr. J. Heintius as vice-president. Exploitation hitherto unapproached will be given these comedies. Release date will be announced later.

NEAL HART IN "DANGER VALLEY"

Little did we appreciate the hardships and risk of life and property that was experienced by the Neal Hart company in entering Death Valley to take the scenes that go to make up the thrilling "DANGER VALLEY."

He comes to us with the information that Neal Hart would not repeat his experience for $50,000 or more. Mr. Woody states that he would not under any circumstances undertake to send another company to Death Valley for any amount. He would not take the moral responsibility of sending people almost to certain death. He has laid so much stress on the dangers of this expedition that you can't expect us to be harping on it for sometime to ome as a real achievement in motion picture production.

NEVER BEFORE! Anywhere—for any picture! Not less than four of Broadway's biggest houses opening on one-and-the-same night, Sunday, Jan. 16th, with Priscilla Dean in "OUTSIDE THE LAW." A startling opening—a more-than-startling picture—the most amazing American Melodrama ever screened. How do you know that we know that such an unprecedented first-showing is worth while?

Read the paragraph immediately below.

Any picture that can make two dollars grow where only one dollar grew before is worth showing in every theatre on Broadway—and yours, first of all.

Grosses in a 670 Seat house in Los Angeles in one week

$9466.15

The Most Amazing AMERICAN MELODRAMA ever Screened

ONE year ago, at the Superba in Los Angeles, "The Great Air Robbery" grossed the unequalled total of $5259.00 for 670 seats in only one week. This year, week ending Jan. 1st, "OUTSIDE THE LAW" grossed $9466.15 in the same theatre. In other words, for every dollar you took in on "The Great Air Robbery," that great record-smasher of a year ago, you stand to gross two dollars on "OUTSIDE THE LAW."

Warning!

NOW that the whole trade knows the tremendous money-winning power of Priscilla Dean—now that everyone knows that this remarkable actress has the greatest puller of her comet-like career in that amazing American melodrama, " OUTSIDE THE LAW," the star-stealers are getting busy again.

It is time to stop this sharp-practice.

And it will be stopped, so far as Universal is concerned. Time was when it might have been considered a delicate compliment to the player—or a perfectly bully subject for an " ad "—but that day has passed. Universal does not propose to allow any company, or agent, or individual to jeopardize its investments—or to cause you, our client, loss through disruption of your playing schedule.

Universal hereby gives the star-stealers, professional and amateur, fair warning that it will take immediate action in the event of any approach on their part which results, or tends to result, in misunderstanding between Universal and those players with which it has made honorable agreement.

Universal does not anticipate such misunderstandings. Universal is simply telling the trade how it proposes to safeguard you and itself and every one of us.

DID you ever realize that an International beat is generally worth more to you than a competitor's scoop?

The reason is—a "scoop" can be something so ordinary as to be neglected by other news gatherers, but a beat is something that all News Reels are eager to show—only International generally shows it first.

IN 1920, International gave you beats that were ahead of all competitors by 50 days, 28 days, 23 days, 18 days, 15 days—and so on down to 2 days—some thirty in all, or one every two weeks.

In addition to these exclusives, International gave you some thirty beats—news happenings which we put on your screen anywhere from two to fifty days sooner than our competitors put them on the screen of your competitors. This is what we call "SERVICE"—because not one of these exclusives or beats cost you one penny in excess of what you contracted to pay for your year's showings.

First I want to thank you for selling the Fotoplayer to me, as we have done away with a great deal of musicians' grief, and the music is better than when we used a 3 piece orchestra.

I can safely recommend the Fotoplayer to a brother exhibitor who is running a straight picture house as being better than the orchestra that the small town manager can afford to keep in his theatre, and you can have music to suit the action of the screen, which is impossible to get with an orchestra and a daily change of pictures.

Vivid Drama of Life and Love

LYING LIPS

By MAY EDINGTON

"Stop! In the sight of God I am another man's wife!"

A wondrously beautiful girl pledged to marry a man she can never love. The same beautiful girl, on a sinking ship and with an hour to live, touches the lips of the man she really loves—and they face death together.

The girl is rescued. The lover remains on the raft. A battleship blows up the drifting derelict. Was Nance Abbott a murderess? At the steps of the chancel, with a thousand wedding guests assembled, the girl revolts; fights before a multitude the battle with her conscience—

Romance. Love. Beauty. Melodrama. Spectacular and sensational episode and incident. A thrilling rescue enacted by the battleship "Minneapolis" and its entire crew. The challenging and beautiful Court of Neptune.

A production of tremendous scope and dimension. A story of the bitter and the sweet from the cup of life. Personally produced and its smashing big scenes personally directed by Thomas H. Ince, who pronounces it to be bigger than his own great picture, "Civilization."

I have taken five months to produce for the exhibitors of America "Lying Lips," which I announce to you as one of the big, enduring pictures of screen history. Months of my personal effort, supplementing the work of the ablest organization in motion picture production has resulted in a production that will bring millions of dollars into the theatre box-offices of the nation.—THOMAS H. Announcing a Bonus—

REALART has produced another picture which qualifies as one of the great Specials of the year. It is built of the stuff that crowds are made of.

"ALL SOULS' EVE"

WITH

MARY MILES MINTER

A powerful story of love that knows no barriers. Three women were in love with a man. One was his wife, whose love was like some rare and beautiful flower. The second was a woman, passion-torn, whose love was like a searing iron. The third was the wistful-eyed nurse girl, whose love was that of a Madonna.

And the telling of this story is done by photography that amazes you—causes you to marvel how it can be done—double, triple, and often quadruple exposures!

This is the bonus now available to every holder of a Realart Star Franchise—a big special for which an especially big price would naturally be asked.

"The Concert" is adapted from the original play by Hermann Bahr. Mr. Leo Ditrichstein's dramatic version (produced by Belasco) ran one year on Broadway.

Among the well known players in "The Concert" are Raymond Hatton, Myrtle Stedman, Lewis S. Stone, Mabel Julienne Scott and Gertrude Astor.

Martinot, the great pianist, thought he wanted a wife with fire, passion and temperament. What he really wanted was someone to keep his hair cut, his chops well done and his conceit unharmed. The story of how he learned his lesson will make your patrons ache with laughter.

Gentlemen:-

In taking over the Sherman franchise for the Texas,Oklahoma and Arkansas territory,am convinced that I have formed a connection unequalled for the soundness and fairness of its policies in relation to the distributor and exhibitor.

The franchise certainly offers great possibilities from a distributing standpoint and should of equal interest to every thinking exhibitor also,because it will afford him an opportunity to book real box-office attractions at very reasonable rentals.

CHANGING conditions create changing tastes. That the "fans" are clamoring for something different is known to every live exhibitor. And in the words of the Weekly Film Review,

ALICE JOYCE in "COUSIN KATE" is "literature, pure and simple, and the sort of thing for which the educated picture fans are coming to want more and more."

"Cousin Kate" is a fitting special production for Alice Joyce at the opening of 1921. It's a 1921 type of picture, and, as the film review goes on to state, "the best thing this star has yet done."

Directed by MRS. SIDNEY DREW

THE cat had a diamond bracelet around its neck. Sounds funny. It wasn't a bit funny to the owner of the bracelet. The cat departed suddenly, and took his neck with him. So—try and get the bracelet.

Now, Bob Bellamy thought he couldn't get some money nearly as quickly as by finding that cat. He started out after the cat, and found a great many other things. One was Adventure, one was Love.

EARLE WILLIAMS in "DIAMONDS ADRIFT" is amusing, thrilling, compelling.

Directed by CHESTER BENNETT

EASTERN nights of Romance! Shopping trips in the bazaars of the Orient. Dinners in quaint surroundings with suave, be-fezzed men, maddened with her beauty. Travel, elaborate gowns! And it wasn't enough for Marcia Ventnor. She would have exchanged it all for the life of a staid little stay-at-home wife who had the love of her husband.

Women will gasp when they see some of the gowns.

Yet the gowns are only a small part of the splendor of this production.

CORINNE GRIFFITH in "IT ISN'T BEING DONE THIS SEASON"

Directed by GEORGE L. SARGENT

JESTER extraordinary always, Larry Semon gains further momentum in his new comedy, "THE SPORTSMAN." He's a mighty hunter in this one—hunts rabbits and canary-birds and gold-fish, and isn't afraid of them. Stumbles into the Sultan's harem, meets the Sultan's 57 wives—isn't afraid of them, either. See

LARRY SEMON in "THE SPORTSMAN"

Then you'll want to see his next one,

LARRY SEMON in "THE HICK"

MAGAZINES of the highest class have featured the continued story for years. Now, William Duncan is making a screen parallel—the chapter-play.

You'll call his newest an original form of entertainment. It's just what the magazines have been doing—giving, high-class, continued action, broken off at just the right point to create suspense. Edith Johnson is co-starred with him.

WILLIAM DUNCAN and EDITH JOHNSON in "FIGHTING FATE"

"DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES"

TOM TERRISS PRODUCTION. Catherine Calvert the star. Holmes Herbert, Percy Marmont, George V. Seyffertitz and others form an unusual cast.

To quote from the Chicago Herald and Examiner review of this special, "The whole is excitement and tingle from start to stop without a wibble or wobble."

PULSING, crashing, action-front drama—a first-class feature production. Breathless suspense all the way and a finish that will surprise you.

ANTONIO MORENO in "THREE SEVENS"

A cast of stellar calibre—Jean Calhoun, Beatrice Burnham, Bull Montana, Thomas Jefferson, Hector Sarno—more than a dozen others.

Adapted from the widely read story by Perley Poore Sheehan.

Directed by CHESTER BENNETT

DAINTY, humorous, whimsical—it's that kind of a picture.

ALICE CALHOUN in "PRINCESS JONES"

Not one lag in it. A clean-cut gem of many facets. Situations which bring laughs, smiles anyhow. Scenes of love and pathos with a gulp in them. A perfect picture for the first stellar production of Vitagraph's newest star.

Directed by G. V. SEYFFERTITZ

IN Mexico—fighting the bull, and all that. Leading a merry life among the snapping-eyed senoritas. Getting into trouble, and out of it. This amusing comedian's best release in many months—no doubt of that.

JIMMY AUBREY in "THE MYSTERIOUS STRANGER"

And there are just as many warm situations, despite its name, in this new one:

JIMMY AUBREY in "THE BLIZZARD"

Both produced by JESS ROBBINS

NOW look for ACTION such as you've seldom, if ever, seen before. A real cow-puncher in a real, smashing Western serial. The real spirit of the prairie land is in it. Roping and riding, lots of it. Yet only as merest incidents of a serial thriller that is DIFFERENT.

The public has never tired of Western thrills. WELL DONE; and you will say that they are WELL DONE in this one.

Only One Reason

We extend due thanks to a contemporary which contributed last week a two page spread, advertising further the fact that Motion Picture News has by far the largest and best circulation and that an audit soon to be published will give final and indisputable proof of this fact.

Our thanks are tempered, however, by the fact that the advertising value of the contemporary is open to some question—according to the exhaustive tests of circulation value of the various trade media made by prominent film companies the past year.

Six of these tests have been made.

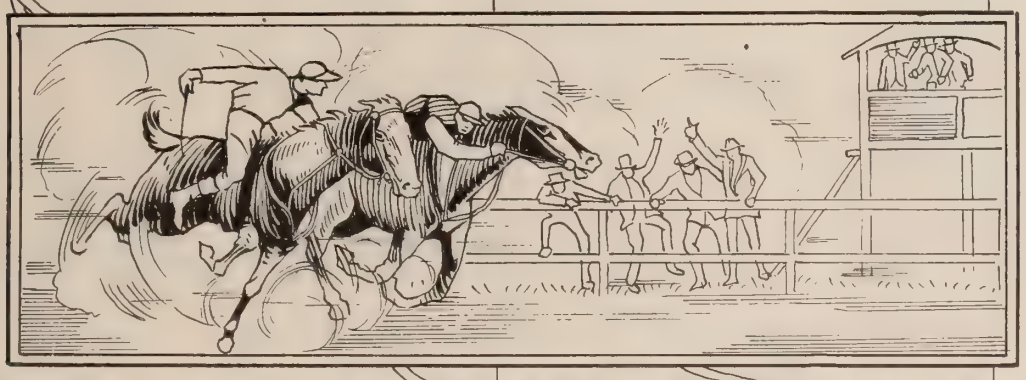
Every single test puts Motion Picture News so far ahead of all other trade papers that it stands alone—both in gross paid theatre circulation and reader value.

Some tests show a supremacy of as much as three to one over any other trade publication.

There's no room for argument here, no chance to kick up dust in an effort to cover the truth.

Any advertiser can find out who made these tests and get the facts first hand.

We don't like to rub it in. But certainly the two page spread above referred to calls for recognition.



We can't say all we'd like to here. But our audit soon to be published will tell the whole story.

Motion Picture News is the largest advertising medium in this field—with a lead of over 1600 pages in the past three years.

And the reason is the only one that ever prevails in such a case —namely: LARGEST AND BEST CIRCULATION.

VOL. XXIII JANUARY 29, 1921 No. VI

Face the Facts

THE entire agitation against the motion picture is based upon a misconception of the industry's earning power and its general structure and present economic condition.

Tell the average person today—anyone—that it is exceedingly difficult to get back the high cost of production and distribution—that large losses have been incurred and only met with renewed investment—and he will stare in genuine amazement.

He thought everyone in the picture business was rich and getting richer—that the business itself was a veritable Klondyke.

We can grant very little, if any, honesty of mind to the professional reformer but we do believe that he honestly believes the very same thing.

When, therefore, we ask insistently for Sunday pictures, our request is universally believed to be due to insatiable greed. We say universally. It is not merely the professional reformer, nor the legislator, nor the Club woman, nor the clergy who have this viewpoint: it is practically the viewpoint of the entire public.

We alone know that if all picture theatres are closed Sundays, all new production, all motion picture progress will automatically stop. And the public will have to content itself with reissues, else the whole industry will stop.

So wherever the Blue Sunday or censorship threatens, in any town, any state or in Congress these facts will have to be told to the misinformed by those who know what they are talking about.

This is the first bridge to cross; otherwise there will be no crossing.

We need a campaign of information.

We've got to tell the truth about ourselves.

So much for that side of the matter.

There's another—also of deep importance.

We have drifted—the year past—into a riot of sensational advertising.

It is not that pictures are bad: but we are making out to the public that they're bad. We are screaming about it. Everything is geared up to an exploitation angle. Scenes are dragged into pictures by the heels in order to furnish a sensational poster. And if the sensation doesn't exist in the picture, suggestive phrases are coined and worked into the newspaper advertising. It isn't altogether the exhibitors' fault—by any means; this suggestive advertising originates mostly with the distributing offices right here in New York.

It is vastly overdone; it is highly inadvisable; it is loaded with dynamite, and there'll be a loud explosion from the public this year.

Of course there's an economic reason for it all. The high cost of production plus the high cost of distribution—the sum total, in fact, of the big and glaring economic mistakes of the industry, results in high rentals. That's where the pressure comes. And the exhibitor in turn puts high pressure upon his advertising appeal in order to drag the people in. Suggestive titles, phrases and pictures will always accomplish this; but there's a flare back in every case and soon—if indeed it is not already here—there'll come a cumulative and united flare back that will break upon the body of the entire industry.

As we write, a report comes in of the censorship situation in Nebraska. It is significant.

The women's organizations are demanding censorship again. The exhibitors are preparing for another battle. They report that the State legislators are opposed to censorship; even so they will carry their fight on and into the State legislative halls.

But some exhibitors say—and here's the crux of the matter in Nebraska and every other State—let censorship come! They point an accusing finger at other exhibitors. The sensational advertising they have done has instigated the demand for censorship. They themselves are not guilty. They have run clean pictures and clean advertising. They have the support of their communities. Let the storm come and break upon the heads of those who deserve it. They, they believe, will not be affected. They even believe they will prosper.

What is the answer?

It is plain, it would seem. We won't make any permanent headway against censorship and the Blue Sunday until we remove that cause for which we alone are to blame—namely sensational advertising.

And this will be difficult unless we remove the cause of the cause—which is the economic waste that, in the end, makes sensational advertising seem necessary.

Just the same we've got to realize—now or never—our huge responsibility. We are not merely making and selling entertainment. We are dealing with the motion picture, the great present day medium of expression. We are moulding, through the most potent force ever devised, the minds and passions of the millions of the world—every day. We belong, not to ourselves, but to the great public; and we are in the hands of the public. If we make public opinion—as we have the power, and do—then public opinion will make us—or break us.

And this is the year!

Flays "Films-Too-Big-for-Picture-Houses" Policy

THE following letter has been received from Harry M. Crandall, the prominent exhibitor of Washington, D. C.:

"One of the biggest menaces that I see to the moving-picture exhibitor today is the so-called production too big for him to run (according to some of the producers' ideas) in the picture houses. Said production is placed in the so-called 'legitimate' houses, and after they have gotten through with it, the exhibitor, who has made this same producer possible, is allowed to have it.

"This idea to me is ridiculous. Let me cite an example:

"Several years ago Mr. D. W. Griffith made a picture called 'The Birth of a Nation.' This, as you well know, played in the legitimate houses. The moving-picture houses were not allowed to run it for some two years after it had been released. From that time on Mr. Griffith has made a number of pictures, none of which has been of any great box-office value to the exhibitor, and many of them have lost him money. Mr. Griffith, however, was perfectly willing that these should go into the plain moving-picture houses.

"Now he makes a picture, called 'Way Down East,' and again he finds his production is too good for the moving picture houses, despite the fact that said moving picture houses today are far ahead of the so-called 'legitimate' theatres.

"Now Mr. Griffith depends, like other producers, absolutely upon the exhibitor. How long are we going to support this kind of treatment?

"We should say to Mr. Griffith and others that pursue this policy: 'We either play all of your pictures or none,' and we should really refuse to use any pictures that any producer makes and puts in any theatre other than straight moving picture houses; and we should refuse to use any other product made or distributed by either the producer or distributing organization that does this sort of thing.

"I feel that every exhibitor in America should have a right to express through the columns of the different trade papers his views on this. It may be that I am all wrong on this, but I would like the opportunity of answering any arguments that may be made along this line. I am most anxious to get the consensus of opinion on this."

British Film Director Returns to England

Arthur Clozenberg, managing director of the Film Booking Offices (1919), Ltd., of London, who had been in this country for several weeks conferring with Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, returned to England last week aboard the Cunard Liner Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. Mrs. Clozenberg returned with him.

Mr. Clozenberg came to this country on a vacation, but took an opportunity while here to study the Universal home office and distributing systems. The F. B. O. is the sole distributor of Universal pictures in Great Britain.

J. R. Grainger to Represent Chaplin in New York

J. R. Grainger, representative for Marshall Neilan, will act as special representative for Charlie Chaplin with regard to contracts accepted for "The Kid," released through First National, it is announced.

This will in no way affect his relations as New York representative for Marshall Neilan, as Mr. Neilan has approved his appointment by Chaplin.

Chamber of Commerce for Six-Reel Maximum

At a meeting held in the Hotel Astor recently, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, representing over 500 theatres in New York and New Jersey, went on record as disapproving the production of features exceeding six reels in length.

The objections to long productions, as stated in the discussion that took place, were, in substance:

That they break up the schedules of houses that work on the basis of a specific number of shows a day; that they cost the exhibitor more to play; that they cost producers more to make—an additional expense not warranted by any additional value to the exhibitor; that in the case of houses which make a policy of showing vaudeville, particularly, many fine features which might otherwise be booked, are kept from being shown because of such excessive length and consequent interference with the rest of the program.

Among other matters which were taken up at the meeting were the report of the ball committee which showed that the affair held at the Astor on the night of the 15th was a huge success financially, netting the organization close to $4,000.

New York F.I.L.M. Club Aids Hoover Drive

President Chadwick has appointed the following Committee to cooperate with Mr. Samuel Rothafel's Committee, to make Hoover Day in the Motion Picture Industry, a success: Harry H. Buxbaum, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, chairman; Louis Rosenblueh, Fox Film Corporation; Arthur Abeles, Metro Pictures Corporation; R. H. Clark, First National of New York; Samuel Eckman, Goldwyn Distributing Corporation; Samuel Zierler, Commonwealth Film Corporation; and I. E. Chadwick, ex-officio.

An appeal from verdict of F. I. L. M. Club Grievance Committee was heard by entire membership. Theatre filed complaint vs. Exchange for late delivery of serial episode, but was dissatisfied with amount of award. Club members voted that Theatre was entitled to 33½% additional over Grievance Committee's amount.

Exhibitor representation on Club's Grievance Committee was again given consideration. President Chadwick announced a special meeting for the purpose of deciding this matter.

English Producer Coming to United States

George Clark, producer of the George Clark Productions, released through the Stoll Film Corporation, will arrive in New York in the near future, to make his own productions.

Leila Lewis is due here shortly to open up publicity. Temporary officers for this new unit will be with the Eve Unsell Photoplay Staff, Inc. Mr. Clark is best known for his direction of "Squandered Lives."

The Last Word in B U N K

FILM men seldom get more than a passing laugh out of the sensational attempts at muck-raking on the part of lay newspapers; they can't develop much more than a slight peeve at the continual petty nagging of the American industry by British newspapers. But when an official of a British exhibitor organization joins forces with a newspaper to weave flamboyant lies, it becomes necessary to award the prize for the last word in pure, undiluted BUNK.

No answer is needed to any statements so utterly ridiculous as those in the following clipping from a London paper. Only a sincere regret can be expressed that those who so strongly urge and plead reciprocity are so backward about encouraging it and—at times—so apparently eager to effectually prevent it.

50,000 FILM WORKERS TO GO.

£7,000,000 Worth of American Pictures Unsalable.

As a result of overproduction in films 50,000 cinema actors and supernumeraries are to be discharged from Los Angeles, America's greatest cinema centre, states the New York correspondent of the Daily Sketch. Films worth £7,000,000 (nominal) are stated to be unsalable.

"So great is competition now," said Mr. Gavazzi King, secretary of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, to the Daily Sketch, "that producers will send along 800 films for an exhibitor to choose from where they once sent 200.

"Large concerns find their films unsalable, and they have to be stored. The result is they become 'old,' the lighting and scenic effects are stale and lack 'grip,' and the film has to be scrapped.

"The fault lies in the American system of 'block-booking.' A film-producing company will make all arrangements for sale before the actual studio work is commenced. A producer says, for instance: 'I shall produce 50 films this year, and if you take the lot you can have them for so much.'

"The other producers continue work, but they find every exhibiting house has already bought its pictures for the year. Then, if they have forty or fifty films on their hands, costing several thousands each, the result is bankruptcy."

Films via 'Plane Ends in Fatal Accident

A disastrous ending marked the initial attempt of the Cincinnati Paramount office to deliver films via airplaine. Word was received in Cincinnati Sunday that the hydroplane used in the delivery of the films, piloted by George H. Simpson and Carl A. Fisher, burst into flames while over the Mississippi river Sunday, near Tiptonville, Tennessee, hurling the occupants of the machine into the river. Both aviators were killed.

The office was forced to discontinue its first delivery of films last Wednesday, when the plane carrying the two aviators, and Miss Mildred Kerr, assistant publicity manager of the local branch, was forced to turn back, due to unfavorable weather conditions, after one hour's flight. Miss Kerr carried a shipment of film intended for the Majestic theatre, Louisville, Kentucky.

The bodies of the aviators have not yet been recovered.

Screen Interest Active as Censor Bills Reach Legislatures

Measures Are Proposed in Three States; Michigan Expects Fight

WITH censorship bills being introduced into the legislatures of several states, the week's news from various sections of the country shows a continued activity on the part of screen reformers, and at the same time, a continued and in some sections, a more concentrated effort on the part of picture interests, in combating their influence.

In Michigan such a bill is before the legislature; a State censorship bill has been introduced to the California legislature at Sacramento, and in Minnesota a proposal for the censorship of film slides and stereopticion slide views has been presented. But the opposition is not inactive. Editorial comment against censorship has been aroused in the Duluth press; the "Allied Theatrical Industries" of California are fighting the bill in their legislature; and the Nebraska and Iowa Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have issued a pamphlet called "Issue of Freedom," which is a reprint of an editorial which appeared in the Omaha World-Herald and urges all to take an active interest in the fight against censorship. This organization is also about to flood the State legislature with petitions of over 400,000 names protesting against a censor bill, which they expect will be introduced into the Nebraska legislature. All exhibitors in that territory are urged to communicate with the headquarters of the organization at 214 South 14th street, Omaha, Neb.

Censor Bill in Michigan

Embodying unlimited restriction powers, a motion picture censorship bill has been introduced into the Michigan senate by Representative Edward B. Strom of Grand Rapids, Mich. The bill, if passed, would control the entrance of every motion picture into the state.

In the opening days of the session, announcement was made that Mrs. Eva Hamilton of Grand Rapids, Mich., the first woman senator in Michigan, would present a bill providing for the censorship of motion pictures. The action of Representative Strom came as a surprise and makes more certain than ever a bitter contest on the question in this session of the legislature. As a result of this step, it is believed that some sort of censorship legislation will be written into the Michigan laws during the current session.

The board would be made of up three members appointed by the governor, and provision is made for the inclusion of one woman on the board. The headquarters of the censorship board which would include an exhibition room would be located in Detroit under the supervision of the chairman of the board who would be paid two thousand dollars annually. The other two members of the board would receive fifteen hundred dollars per annum. Except in a few details, the bill is practically the same measure which was introduced into the senate at the last session and which suffered defeat by a wide margin. The board is authorized to bar any film of an immoral character and it would be established, it is claimed, to place the standard of motion pictures in the state upon a higher plane.

The board would receive a fee of two dollars for each one thousand feet or less of film reviewed although the board would carry the authority to lower this rate if it were deemed advisable. The motion picture corporations desirous of leasing films in this state would share the brunt of the commission's charges.

It is expected that the bill will arouse the motion picture men of the state and a keen fight is expected when the measure reaches the floor of the house. The initial attempt to pass a bill of like character was a distinct failure but the supporters of the Strom measure claim they have the support of members in the house, and are determined to make a fight for "whatever will make motion pictures of a higher standard throughout the state." The absolute right to dictate the future of a motion picture in this state, which right would be held by the board under the new measure, is considered to be too flagrant.

Fight on in California

"The principle of film censorship is un-American, there are ways to control unlawful exhibitions, but it is not by putting the motion picture industry at the mercy of any set of state officials, no matter how well disposed and fair they may be," Judge I. M. Golden, representing the "Allied Theatrical Industries of California," told Governor W. D. Stephens and the state legislature in session at Sacramento this week when a bill was introduced providing for a state censorship board.

Irving Ackerman, H. G. Rosebaum, Edward Barron, Louis R. Greenfield and Herman Webber, prominent theatrical and motion picture men, headed the delegation which went to the state capitol in protest.

Rigid Bill in Minnesota

The bill presented in the Minnesota legislature to provide arbitrary censorship for film slides and stereopticon views, is sponsored by 700 women of Lesueur County. The expense of the administration of this Board would be $74,500 a year it is estimated. The bill provides for three Board members at $3,000 per year each and twenty-one employees of the Board to be appointed by the Governor. It also provides for a fee of two dollars for each 1,000 feet or less of film viewed. It is practically a copy of the Pennsylvania bill with more rigid provisions. The United Theatrical Protective League, Inc., is expected to be active in opposing the measure.

Screen Blamed for Crime Wave

Twin City exhibitors headed by managers of Finkelstein and Ruben theatres have been kept on the jump for several weeks past in an effort to disprove the claims of various cranks and anti-movie agitators who have used the slow ending crime wave which has upset the country and St. Paul and Minneapolis in particular, to combat the screen.

Mayor J. E. Meyers, of Minneapolis, entertained opinions of several hundred people representing various reform and educational bodies in an effort to stop both the crime wave and wagging tongues of the more radical reformers, called a meeting of exhibitors and exchange men, gave them inside information as to the spread of crime in Minneapolis and asked their co-operation in combatting it in every way possible. Exhibitors and exchange men though defending the screen agreed to help in any way the mayor deemed advisable and complying with his request agreed to withdraw several bookings of pictures which the mayor, judging from the titles, believed detrimental to the cause at this particular time. The mayor stated that he had no objection to the pictures being shown but that he would appreciate the co-operation of the theatre men in postponing such showings. He also asked that the use of pictures showing gun-play and violence be kept from the theatres entirely until such time as the police were able to get the situation under easy control.

He also asked that cuts showing gun-play and crime be kept from theatrical advertising. The mayor also requested that theatre men carefully examine all serials which they were now showing or had booked and eliminate as many scenes showing gun-play and crime as was possible. As a result several exhibitors who had booked recently released serials cancelled them or set them back from thirty to ninety days. Several exhibitors went so far as to cancel serials entirely, several being brought to a sudden termination at the end of the sixth or seventh episodes, causing a slump in business which was easily apparent.

Moon Beams. We print elsewhere a story from the London Daily Sketch—from its New York Correspondent of course—telling us that fifty thousand of our photoplayers are out of work and that we have some $35,000,000 worth of unsalable film on our hands. Then quotes Gavazzi King, Secretary of the British Exhibitors' League, who blames us for the British system of block booking, etc., etc., Interesting! Reminds us of our experiences in London during a half-year's sojourn there some time ago. Homesick American looks to British press for some news about his rather large country. Finds story, front page, of terrible wreck in Mud Valley and Rock Mountain Railroad in which three hundred and fifty-seven people were killed. Afterwards corrected to say that a fireman was scalded by steam on the M. K. and T. Next day reads front page story of freak dinner given by prominent society woman. Next day elopement of social leader with colored coachman, etc., etc. And that's all he reads about the U. S. Pretty rotten journalism. But don't blame the London dailies so much as the British film man who subscribes to and still further abets such downright and highly ridiculous lies.

The Kid. Great! Charlie Chaplin's largest edition of himself to date. Five reels of Chaplin humor and pathos with full sustainance. Chaplin at his best because of a stronger and fuller background of that pathos which is the genius of his success. Chaplin taking care of a little waif! Could he have a better theme? And Jack Coogan! An affectionate little, regular little chap who can act! Some say: the picture of the year. Perhaps so because it will make millions of laughs when laughs are needed. Some say: biggest box-office picture. People are hungry for Chaplin and here's certainly a full meal after the fast. P. S. The writer discussed "The Kid" with Chaplin about a year ago in Hollywood. Chaplin then cutting the picture. Always hard to get Chaplin to talk and "The Kid" broke the ice. Talked two hours. Fearful about it. Considered it a radical step. We enthused. Prophesied great success. So can't forego this: "I told you so." Interesting personage this Charlie Chaplin. Some day some one will write the real story of him.

Boston Globe. After vigorous and sensible defense of motion pictures as "high brows" look down upon it offers this true critician: "The art of photography which the movies display is superb. The food which they offer the mind is considerably less so. The movies cannot—that is to say, they do not—'think up to the level of their own towering style' (as Chesterson says of the poet Tennyson). Their manner is better than their matter." And the Globe concludes: "Man is unable to think without thinking in pictures. Well—we have the pictures—moving ones at that. Now give us the thinking." Respectfully referred to directors and not a few stars.

Pola Negri. Hope the report is true that she will appear in American pictures. If so, she will set a new pace for the best of our film stars. The balance are beyond hope. Pola Negri's performance in "Passion" shows wide elasticity of technique. Success of picture largely due to her ability. Our own film stars evidence, by comparison, a very limited technique. Cramp their pictures and their choice of vehicles.

Sunday Reformer Classed as Political Mountebank

Danger of the professional political mountebank who would create a salary for himself on the pretense of managing a "no work" Sunday law was described by William P. Strandberg, speaker at the Motion Picture League of Oregon meeting held last Thursday noon at the Benson hotel.

"The Sunday closing issue has nothing to do with religion," declared Mr. Strandberg. "It is purely a political move on the part of cheap publicity seekers who would cripple the biggest industries if it would get them a salary or place them in a position where they might be bought off. To make Sunday closing successful it would first be necessary to change the law of human nature.

"It would be an economic calamity if Oregon should attempt a Sunday closing law. Such a calamity will never be brought about by the church people who already understand the situation and through the Ministerial association have refused to take such action. But the public may be fooled by cheap publicity seekers out of work and then will come the real danger."

Fred Levy and Leo Keiler Merge with M. Switow

Col. Fred Levy, holder of the Associated First National franchise for Kentucky, and Leo Keiler, of Paducah, who control a chain of nineteen theatres in Kentucky through the Strand Amusement Company have completed negotiations for an affiliation with M. Switow in the ownership of three theatres in Louisville. Included in the deal is the new $200,000 theatre erected by Mr. Switow on Fourth Street, between Chestnut and Broadway, directly across the street from the new million dollar Rialto. The Parkland and another neighborhood house are the others which will be affiliated with the Strand chain.

The other theatres owned by Mr. Switow—two in Jeffersonville, three in New Albany, one in Bedford, Ind., and one in Salem, Ind., were not included in the deal.

A Telegram—and a Reply

Wm. Johnston,
Motion Picture News:

You have doubtless read the article in Pictorial Review for February on too much sex stuff in the movies. The Pictorial Review people have launched a tremendous campaign behind the movement by circularizing all the schools, churches, women's clubs and other organizations. Wires are pouring in from all parts of the country indicating that a constructive movement has been started which will be one of the most notable occurrences in motion picture history. You know that churches, women's clubs and civic bodies have already lined up formally for this movement. The great moral force of the American public is incensed and aroused as regards unclean pictures and unless the industry takes it upon itself to voluntarily clean house public opinion will force the enactment of censorship laws which will paralyze the business. We must not let that happen. Let us profit by the lesson of prohibition and make the industry immune from attack. The exhibitors and the public will want to know where the Motion Picture News stands in this movement. I believe you have opportunity to launch a campaign in your paper which will again demonstrate your power of vision and leadership. Please wire collect your viewpoint.

BENJ. B. HAMPTON.

Mr. Ben B. Hampton,
Brunton Studios,
Los Angeles, Cal.

Your Pictorial Review article is right. Agree also and fully that public sentiment from now on will be great deciding factor as to the picture and its entire industrial fabric. Better pictures mean clean pictures and clean pictures will kill censorship. Believe, however, that the fault lies not with the picture, but with sensational advertising and introduction of scenes in production in order to permit sensational advertising, indicating a state of mind which is opportunistic only and will undermine industry. The same danger applies to your articles. Misleading advertising or publicity cleverly twisted to sell magazines at the expense of the screen might do more harm than your articles can counteract. Suggest you instruct Pictorial Review not to make their own advertising sensational, but rather to follow constructive tone of your articles, otherwise censorship will be encouraged and the unscrupulous reformer given the ammunition he wants. This is important.

Wm. A. Johnston.

In connection with the above telegrams the following statement issued by W. W. Hodkinson assumes an added importance:

I have searched in the columns of the press both within and without the industry for some constructive suggestions to meet the growing anti-picture propaganda. This propaganda has before this obtained plenty of publicity, but it has been mostly sporadic. The last two weeks, however, show an apparently concerted anti-picture propaganda. The daily press, the weeklies, and some of the magazines are taking up the cry in chorus. Of course, we all know that much of this propaganda is just propaganda, that is to say, it is the expression of a partisan and special pleader. There is also in this propaganda something of the lynching spirit, which in a country like ours, where public sentiment is so profoundly influenced by the press, may at any time develop into an absolute danger and eventual disaster for the motion picture.

Allowing for much ignorance, exaggeration and malice in the anti-picture articles it cannot be denied that there is a sound basis for complaint. I shall not at this time attempt to trace the causes, which I think are quite obvious to any thinking man within the industry..

What we want to do now is to deal with the concrete and lately quite obtrusive fact of its existence. Are we on the inside going to trust to luck hoping that this wave will subside as others have with no particular harm done? Are we going to meet this propaganda by louder denial and by more personal criticism of the man and woman whom we hold responsible? I believe that more than a mere palliative is required.

This propaganda, whatever its source, is becoming powerful. The best method of fighting it is to remove every just cause for complaint. Such a course on our part is the only correct and constructive one. The thinking executive of this industry must unite and devise ways and means of first remedying the conditions which call for remedy, and second, let the public know that we are capable of understanding and obeying public sentiment without being driven by agitators, moralists, or reformers.

Our organization has put itself on record in the public prints as recognizing the needs of united action against this propaganda. The anti-picture propaganda is still rising. I think it is time for the leaders of independent thought in our field (and I regard the editors of our industry as belonging to that class) to get busy on this subject and assist in working out an honest and effective campaign against this propaganda—a campaign which begins by recognizing and abolishing every just cause of complaint against certain types of pictures.

First Nat'l of Northwest Complete Organization

The election of an Exhibitors' Advisory Committee, the assurance of 100 per cent. membership by February 1, 1921, and a number of important resolutions on matters pertaining to the welfare of the industry as a whole, were the outstanding features of the meeting of Associated First National sub-franchise holders of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota in Minneapolis last week.

More than 100 sub-franchise holders met at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, last Wednesday for a two-day session at the call of J. F. Cubberley, manager of the Minneapolis First National Exchange. Virtually every county in the territory was represented.

The meetings were crammed with constructive action by the exhibitors. Among the measures advocated were: Hiring of an expert on motion pictures to give an impartial review of pictures other than those of First National to guide franchise holders in judging values; completion of one hundred per cent. First National franchise holders by February first; lending of the screens of northwest exhibitors free to every public enterprise to foster the good-will among business men and to promote community welfare; exploiting to the furthermost of every First National picture susceptible to novel advertising; observance of strict ethics in conducting their houses; offering co-operation to President William A. Steffes of the United Theatrical Protective League in obtaining full membership for that organization in the northwest; working in closer harmony with the exchange in helping to realize the greatest possible benefit from pictures run in their houses; guaranteeing their support to the Herbert Hoover movement for the relief of devastated Europe.

Mr. Cubberley presided over the meetings, which were conducted in the Colonial room of the West Hotel. One of the most stirring addresses of the sessions was delivered at the dinner meeting by Theodore L. Hays of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate.

Suggestions offered from Frank Kornpelberger of LaCrosse, Wis., and V. B. Valleau of Albert Lea, Minn., for methods of checking up on other pictures developed into a tentative program to be taken up later. Because of the habit of many state rights men in selling films for various prices to the same class of exhibitors and the experience of several of the exhibitors in paying excessive prices for pictures from outside exchanges, a system of checking up picture values was advocated.

The following were elected members of the advisory committee: F. A. Rickstein, Majestic theatre, Beloit, Wis.; J. P. Adler, Adler theatre, Marshfield, Wis.; Tom Foster, Star theatre, Stanley, Wis.; Louis Nahin, Rainbow theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Clyde Hitchcock, Princess theatre, Minneapolis; V. B. Valleau, Broadway theatre, Albert Lea, Minn.; S. G. Latta, Fergus Pictures Corporation, Fergus Falls, Minn.; A. J. Kavanagh, New Grand theatre, Grand Forks, N. D.; Archie Miller, Grand theatre, Devils Lake, N. D.; F. A. Dundas, Strand theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., and C. F. Hansen, Lyric theatre, Redfield, S. D.

Joseph Schenck Is Made Director of Bank

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK, producer of Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge productions for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., has been elected a member of the board of directors of the East River National Bank of New York, which is closely affiliated with the Bank of Italy, in Los Angeles, and is reputed to be one of the strongest independent financial institutions in America, with assets in excess of $150,000,000.00.

Executives of several large organizations describe it as a practical and prophetic move by a leading bank to equip its directorate with experienced advisory services in turning toward an industry that has risen to fifth place in American business

Dr. A. H. Giannini, president of the East River National Bank made the announcement of Mr. Schenck's election with the statement that it was, in the minds of himself and his fellow-officers in the institution, the most direct and certain means of obtaining the knowledge they sought of the motion-picture industry and is recognition which Mr. Schenck merited for the place he occupies in the industry as one of its prominent producers.

One of the chief comments made by officials of motion picture organizations in New York, when news of Mr. Schenck's election to the directorate of the East River National Bank became known, was the close relationship between that institution and the Bank of Italy in Los Angeles, in which is seen a double significance, inasmuch as New York is the financial and distributing center of the film world and Los Angeles is the producing center.

"I am very happy that Dr. Giannini and his fellow-officers in the East River National Bank have selected me to represent the motion picture industry on their board of directors, and I shall endeavor in every circumstance and in every way that I possibly can, to honestly and fairly fulfill the responsibilities of that representation, both to the bank and to the motion picture business," declared Mr. Schenck, following his appointment.

Among those attending the meeting were: Lynch & Higgens, New Richmond, Wis.; W. C. Clavier, Fargo, N. D.; Mat Kohler, Buffalo, Minn.; A. L. Devine, Parker, S. D.; Albert B. Muller, Maple Lake, Minn.; S. G. Latta, Fergus Falls, Minn.; F. J. McWilliams, Madison, Wis.; J. A. Dundas and Mrs. Dundas, Sioux Falls, S. D.; Frank L. Koppelberger, Eau Claire, Wis.; J. B. Duluth Bill Withdrawn

On the opinion of City Attorney John E. Samuelson, of Duluth, Minn., that the city council would be committing an illegal act in vesting in others authority to appoint a committee to censor moving picture films to be shown in Duluth, Fred Ward, acting as spokesman for the Better Films committee, withdrew the proposed ordinance regulating the display of moving pictures, after it had been presented to the council at its regular weekly meeting.

Billy James Sells Interests to Peter Sun

The annual meeting of the directors of The Sun and James Amusement Company, which controls the Rivoli and Toledo theatres of Toledo, O., was held Tuesday, January 11, 1921, in the executive offices of the Rivoli theatre. At this meeting the interest of William (Billy) James of Columbus was sold to Peter Sun, former owner of the Sun Bros'. Circus. It is believed that this change was brought about on account of Mr. James centering his interest in several theatres at Columbus.

The election of officers resulted as follows: Ed G. Sourbier, Indianapolis, president; C. Howard Crane, Detroit, vice-president; Gus Sun, Springfield, Secretary; Charles Olson, Indianapolis, treasurer.

Joseph E. Gavin, temporary manager of the Rivoli, following the departure of S. Barret McCormick to Los Angeles, will return to Indianapolis, where he will again take up his duties as manager of the Lyric theatre. Peter Sun was appointed local manager of the Rivoli, effective at once.

Additions to Paramount's Exploitation Staff

Claud Saunders, director of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has announced the following additional appointments to his staff: Arthur M. Vogel for the Seattle territory of Paramount Pictures; Leon Bamberger for the Minneapolis territory and Richard E. Riddick for the Salt Lake City territory. The three new exploitation representatives left New York for their respective exchanges last Saturday.

Wayland H. Taylor, exploitation representative, has been transferred from the Seattle to the San Francisco Exchange.

Arthur Ziehm Belittles Foreign Competition

No Need for Alarm Over Producer Competition From Abroad, Says Goldwyn

RETURNED from a five-months' tour of Europeon countries, including Germany, France, Italy, Scandinavia, Spain and Holland, Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation is convinced that there is no reason for American film manufacturers to be alarmed over the possibility of serious competition from foreign producers.

While abroad, Mr. Ziehm established Goldwyn exchanges in Holland, in Stockholm to cover Scandinavia and Finland; in Milan, Italy; and in Barcelona, Spain. Another Goldwyn office is planned for Rome, Italy.

"From Holland, I went to Scandinavia where the motion picture business seemed to be in pretty fair condition, about seventy-five per cent of the current supply of films coming from this country. There is one theatre in Stockholm.

"My visit to Germany, where I spent a number of weeks, was particularly illuminating. With all due respect for the excellence of the work being accomplished by Lubitsch and May and one or two other of the foremost directors, I was soon convinced that the average German picture is far inferior to the standard being maintained in this country. Technically, our product is much better, not only in the direction of the players, but also in the matters of photography and settings. Here, of course, it must be understood that I am referring to the average run of pictures and not to specials such as "Sumurun," "Anna Boleyn" and other productions of this class.

"One of the surprises of my visit was to find that some really good Wild West pictures are being turned out at the German studios. They recall the rapid-action type of melodrama popular when Broncho Billy was at the height of his fame.

"A return to normal conditions in the marketing of our own product in Germany is forecast by the partial lifting of the embargo, effective January 1st, whereby films from other countries may be imported up to 15 per cent of the German productions. In my opinion the embargo will be lifted entirely during the present year, and there is no question about the German public being ready to welcome American photoplays.

"From Germany I went to Italy where I was received with the greatest cordiality by the motion picture men of Rome, Milan and other cities. Now, as heretofore, with the exception of the Goldwyn product, few American made pictures are being shown in Italy. Without any prejudice, I may say that Italian producers have not kept pace with the progress made in American studios during the past few years, although they are turning out some impressive spectacles. Incidentally, it should be noted that reports of revolutions and unrest in Italy have been greatly exaggerated.

"Economic and social conditions in Spain and Portugal are very depressing indeed, and of course the motion picture business is suffering. I was in Barcelona when the general strike was at its height. All industry was tied up and shooting on the streets of the city was a common occurrence. Even at its best, the motion picture business in Spain leaves much room for improvement. There are few first-class theatres, and the exhibitors dominate the market to such a degree that film renters are unable to get a reasonable price for their pictures. Ufa of Germany and Italian producers sell at a low figure, but even with this competition about sixty per cent of the film shown comes from America."

Cheap Films Face Hard Fight in So. America

High-Grade Pictures Safe in Competing With Foreign Films, Says Paramount Agent

COMPETITION from foreign markets, especially from Italian and German film fields, seriously embarrass the distribution of the cheaper grade of American-made photoplays in South America, declares John L. Day, the South American representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who is now at the Paramount headquarters in New York, having just returned from a six months' tour of South American countries in the interests of the Famous Players-Lasky organization. Mr. Day covered Brazil, Argentine and Chile in the course of his trip of inspection, and spent a considerable portion of his time in Rio de Janeiro at the offices of Peliculas D'Luxe Da America Do Sul, which is a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

While the cheap American-made picture is in for some keen competition with foreign-made productions, according to Mr. Day, still the high-grade productions from the United States are in a good position to fight European competition because such pictures have become strongly entrenched in the high esteem of the South American picture audiences, asserts Mr. Day.

"The day when the American exporter could dump any kind of film into the South American market has passed," said Mr. Day in discussing changed trade conditions. "Falling exchange values have crippled the export and import business through South America to a large extent, with the result that the harbors are glutted with merchandise which importers are unable to accept because of falling prices and lack of markets.

"In addition new factors have entered into the situation through the competition of German and Italian film exporters, who are making strenuous efforts to recapture the South American film markets which they lost at the beginning of the war. German exporters, in particular, have become important competitors and are making all sorts of inducements to the Latin-American exhibitors and importers to take their films.

"The only manner in which the American film industry can successfully fight this competition is through the production of better pictures for South American distribution. The old rule of the survival of the fittest is certain to apply to trade conditions in the Southern republics from now on, with the result that the brunt of the foreign competition will be borne by the cheaper grades of films. American companies producing and exporting the highest grade films are in a far better position to fight European competition, because of the tremendous popularity gained by the high-grade American pictures. Price cutting and the offering of special inducements of the importers and exhibitors by German companies will not endanger the prestige of the best American films, but it will make competition a serious matter for the cheaper films from this country.

"The South American business of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has shown an important increase during the past year and Paramount Pictures have been big money makers for the higher class theatres. Two Paramount productions which scored great hits in Brazil in recent weeks have been John Barrymore in 'Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde,' and 'Everywoman.' Both established new box-office records for Brazil, and tremendous interest is being shown in other forthcoming Paramount specials.

"The Cinema Avenida, the first-run house for Paramount in Rio, is doubling its seating capacity. When it re-opens it will be one of the finest theatres in Brazil, and Paramount Pictures will be exhibited on a much larger scale than has been possible heretofore. Two other large theatre building propositions are under consideration in Rio, and there is every prospect that once exchange becomes more normal Brazilian exhibitors will enjoy greater prosperity than ever before."

Three Prominent Authors Engaged to Write for Paramount

Geo. Hobart's "Experience" to Be Filmed; to Make "Peter Pan" Abroad

IN a statement issued this week by Jesse L. Lasky, the announcement is made that Famous Players-Lasky has just concluded contracts with Edward B. Sheldon, Samuel Merwin and Harvey O' Higgins, under the terms of which these prominent authors have agreed to write for Paramount releases and assist in the production of their stories for the screen. In the same statement news is conveyed of the plan to film "Experience" in the near future, from the successful stage play by George V. Hobart. The picture-version will be made under the direction of George Fitzmaurice and will have an all-star cast. Announcement is also made in Mr. Lasky's statement of the forthcoming production for the screen of "Peter Pan." This subject will be made in England under the personal supervision of Sir J. M. Barrie, its author. In announcing the engagement of the three prominent authors as members of the Paramount literary staff, the following statement was issued from the Paramount headquarters in New York:

"The acquisition of Messrs. Sheldon, Merwin and O'Higgins to the ranks of Paramount literary celebrities is in each case a notable one. It was while he was still a student at Harvard that Edward Sheldon jumped into fame as the author of 'Salvation Nell,' in which Mrs. Fiske starred for two full seasons and which many of that noted actress's admirers consider her greatest play. Moreover, he soon gave proof that his initial success was not a mere flash in the pan, for he followed it the very next year with 'The Nigger,' which also proved a sensation in the theatre. His reputation thus firmly established, his later contributions to the drama have been frequent and notable, including 'The Boss,' in which Holbrook Blinn starred; 'Princess Zim-Zim,' 'Egypt,' 'The High Road,' 'The Garden of Paradise' and 'Romance,' in which Doris Keane appeared both on the stage and on the screen.

"Samuel Merwin is one of the most widely read authors of fiction before the public today. Following his graduation from Northwestern University, his first novels to attract attention were 'The Short Line War' and 'Calumet K,' both written in collaboration with Henry Kitchell Webster. Then followed, among others, 'The Citadel,' 'The Charmed Life of Miss Austin,' 'Anthony the Absolute' and 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' the last named of which was recently produced by Cosmopolitan for Paramount and is already established as one of the most successful pictures of the year. For many years Mr. Merwin was associated with Success Magazine in various capacities, including that of Editor, and made an extensive tour of the Orient for that magazine, in the course of which he amassed a large quantity of information for future use in his stories.

"Harvey J. O'Higgins, a native of London, Ont., has long been noted both as an author and playwright. Among his early successes was 'The Grand Army Man,' in which David Belasco starred David Warfield. At about the same time he collaborated with Judge Ben B. Lindsey on 'The Beast and the Jungle,' the series of sensational articles on Denver politics which ran serially in Everybody's Magazine. Shortly thereafter he collaborated with Senator Frank J. Cannon on the equally sensational 'Under the Prophet in Utah,' an expose of Mormonism. In collaboration with Harriet Ford he has also written a large number of successful plays, including 'Polygamy,' 'Mr. Lazarus,' 'The Argyle Case,' 'The Dummy' and 'On the Hiring Line,' the list running the gamut from melodrama and mystery to comedy."

In connection with his announcement of Paramount production plans in immediate contemplation, Mr. Lasky said:

"'Experience,' the Paramount picturization of George V. Hobart's great stage play, is soon to be started at our Long Island studio under the direction of George Fitzmaurice. The production will feature an all-star cast, a complete announcement of which will soon be forthcoming. Made in the East, it will parallel in magnitude and wealth of settings 'The Affairs of Anatol,' the super-star production which Cecil B. DeMille now has well on the way toward completion at our West Coast studio. I feel perfectly safe in promising that 'Experience' will eclipse 'On With the Dance,' 'The Right to Love' or any of the other productions Mr. Fitzmaurice has ever made. We purpose to go the limit in making it one of the most elaborate and interesting productions ever made.

"Plans for the production of Sir James M. Barrie's masterpiece, 'Peter Pan,' are now approaching maturity. Barrie himself will supervise the filming of the picture in England, and the cast, although I am not yet ready to say anything concerning its personnel, will be one of superlative excellence. Actual production will not be started until every preparation, down to the last detail, has been made, and on these preparations the staff at our London studio is now at work. Probably no other production ever made has possessed the advance box-office value of the world-beloved 'Peter Pan,' and the motion picture public may be assured that it will not be disappointed in the screen version.

"Other big productions soon to be produced, both of them probably at our Eastern studio, are 'The Wanderer,' Morris Gest's spectacular stage production of the story of the Prodigal Son, which ran for more than a year at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, and duplicated its metropolitan success in other large cities; also 'Montmartre,' the recent predominant sensation of the French stage. This play is a veritable epic of Paris—a modern 'La Vie de la Boheme.' Many of the scenes for the production will be taken in Paris.

"Cecil B. DeMille's next production following 'The Affairs of Anatol' will be 'Laurels and the Lady,' by Leonard Merrick, author of 'Conrad in Quest of His Youth.' Mr. DeMille's plan is to make this a worthy successor to his present production, with an all-star cast quite as notable as the one he is now directing in 'The Affairs of Anatol.'

"George Loane Tucker, recently recovered from a serious illness, has about completed the editing of his production, 'Ladies Must Live,' in which he has been at work for nearly two years, or ever since he completed 'The Miracle Man.' The completed print is expected in New York very shortly and I have reason to believe that in this picture Mr. Tucker has surpassed even 'The Miracle Man.'"

A. S. Aronson Elected Vice-President of Goldwyn

A. S. ARONSON has been elected a vice-president of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and appointed general sales manager, according to an official announcement this week. He has assumed his new duties, with headquarters at the home office in New York.

Mr. Aronson is well known to the trade in all parts of this country, particularly in the West, where he has a large acquaintance among exhibitors. He is equally familiar with the Canadian market, having organized the Regal Film Company of Canada, in association with N. L. Nathonson. Regal handled the Canadian distribution of the Goldwyn product.

Early in 1919, Mr. Aronson sold his Canadian interests and became a member of the Goldwyn distributing organization in the United States, directing distribution in the territory from Colorado west.

Claims One Lens Stereo Effect

Charles V. Henkel, Film Pioneer, Grants Exclusive Interview to News Outlining Revolutionary Stereo and Color Aims

ALMOST simultaneous with the announcement of the Spoor-Berggren process of stereoscopic photography, rumors became current of other discoveries and the existence of additional inventors in this field of endeavor. A notable fact, in this connection, is that the names mentioned—like that of George K. Spoor—are those of pioneer motion picture producers. Upon the theory that where there is smoke there may be a little fire, the "News" trailed one of the reports to its lair and the end of the quest disclosed Charles V. Henkel as the subject to be interviewed.

Past performances indicated this to be a task, for Mr. Henkel has been either unduly modest or too reticent concerning newspaper publicity of a personal nature. Notwithstanding his many years association with the film industry in a really important way, his name has seldom appeared in print.

These facts were used to introduce our purpose and served to influence Mr. Henkel to talk for publication. He laughingly explained the reasons for the apparent lack of personal publicity: "No, it is not due to modesty—I am no violet. You see, I never considered my personal doings would interest the general public or add value to anything I had to exploit. Therefore, I have never asked for a single line of press matter for myself; any space offered me I have traded for space for my proposition."

It was suggested that anything he might say regarding the subject of the interview, could not be construed as personal publicity but would be informative and, perhaps, of interest and benefit to the industry. This influenced Mr. Henkel to talk.

"Yes, it is true that I have developed and perfected a method of stereoscopic motion pictures," acknowledged Mr. Henkel, in an assured and confident manner which left no doubt of his sincerity. "I have not permitted the fact to become generally known, but now that it has reached the stage of 'picture-gossip,' there can be no harm in admitting it is so to the press. However, only members of my immediate family and a few intimate friends have witnessed a practical demonstration and, until my patent rights have been fully protected, I shall avoid giving a private or public demonstration. That is why I consider any mention of my discovery, at this time, is premature—I believe it always a mistake to make an announcement of anything new before it actually exists; ready for the market or for practical use. You know: 'There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip.'"

"No—I have passed the experimental stages. My invention is an accomplished result. But, there are so many 'Doubting Thomases' who hail from Missouri, that I hesitate about making any statement under the circumstances."

Charles V. Henkel

"Yes—I have read the account of the Spoor-Berggren process of stereoscopic photography—with great interest. My method, however, is entirely different—yes, radically so. Their process is the binocular or two-lense method—which is the generally accepted theory as essential to obtain stereoscopic results. This principle is not new, it is the application of the still picture stereoscope to motion pictures. To my knowledge, others have been and are working along these lines and actual public demonstrations were made in the past showing satisfactory results obtained by this method, therefore, there can be no doubt but that the Spoor-Berggren process is all that is claimed."

"My method is entirely new—I hope an original discovery. It needs but one lense to obtain stereoscopic results. And, an important advantage that my process has over the binocular method, is that it does not acquire special film or photography to produce the stereoscopic effect. I stereoscopically project any existing film."

This rather startling statement seemed to warrant some explanation. Mr. Henkel's attention was called to the fact, that it is a generally acceptted scientific truth that it requires two eyes to obtain stereoscopic vision. His notice was also called to the paragraph in the Spoor-Berggren article, which reads: "The ordinary camera, photographing only with a single lense or eye, can only fix upon the negative an image as viewed with a single human eye which is not stereoscopic because the stereoscopy which is obtained in human vision is based on the optical arrangement by which the eyes being set apart focus upon an object from different angles."

"Yes, I know," answered Mr. Henkel, "I read that statement with particular care because it was made conspicuous by its utter fallacy. Believing this supposition to be an absolute fact, is the cause of all investigators working along those lines in striving to obtain stereoscopic photography. The paragraph in question, reads to me like the argument advanced in conjunction with the specifications of a patent application; not a statement born of personal knowledge on the part of the writer of the article. However, substantially the same language will be found in text books on optics—in the chapters treating on stereoscopic vision. But it is really an exploded theory—not, by any means, a fact."

"Allow me to analyze this paragraph. Admit, as it states, that a single lense can only fix upon the negative an image as viewed by a single human eye, and you automatically agree that the rest of the statement is incorrect. To illustrate: Close one eye and look off with the other. The objects you see appear solid—not flat? Yes—of course they do! Now repeat the process, uring the other single eye. Not much difference, if any? No—certainly not! And, just what you saw with one eye is what a single lense would have registered upon the negative—the statement agrees to that. Consequently, there is solidity existing in every photograph, but not visible to the naked eye."

"If there was any perceptible difference in what and how you visioned with either single eye, it was mainly due to impaired eyesight; no two eyes in any one human head are one hundred per cent perfect. This explains why cameramen test lenses before they purchase—no two lenses of the same focal length and optical speed are absolutely alike; made after the same formula, from the same material and by the same manufacturer, they will vary—perhaps, only the minutest thousandth of a hair's width. While eye defects, such as I refer to, have no bearing upon stereoscopic vision, I wish to explain why, as between your two eyes, there may have

Greetings: To the Music Picture Convention

By Charles D. Isaacson

Full Program of conference in this issue— see continuation of this department in the back of book

WE cannot realize what it is we set in motion this week. What lies beyond our efforts and what impressive significance history will find in the things we do and say here in these sessions. The motion picture is coming to the baptismal fount of art, and fine music discovers its strongest disciple and champion in the temple of the screen. Civilization works in mysterious circles, and it must appear very strange to those who sneered at the motion picture to find here at the conference table today the representatives of the oldest art in the world. It must appear indeed incongruous to the blue-stockings who were ashamed to be seen entering the "Movie house" to hear the representatives of historic and epochal artists offering the services of these apostles of beauty. Hofmann upon the movie stage, Jascha Heifetz in the theatre, John McCormack, and yet if Caruso downs his hateful malady, may the voice of the artist fill the ears of the picture patrons.

Here's to the Association of Motion Picture and Musical Interests—may it live and prosper and serve the good of its two parent industries and arts as the best minds may deem the courses indicated by wisdom as well as necessity. The new Association can through its besought unity of purpose, sever the dividing hurdle which has placed musicians in one category and picture men in another—now there is no dividing line, and the two professions can mingle with a common purpose and understanding. Indeed out of the amalgamation of interests, a new kind of individual has grown up—it is the motion picture musician, and is also the musician-picture man.

When I first took up my pen to write to the theatres of America through these columns, I said "It seems as if all motion picture men must become musical impresarios" and I repeat it here. With the turn of the tide of newer values and broader showmanship, the house which stands high in its community, is the theatre which has learned the value of giving something fine and beautiful, and so grappling the patrons to an institution rather than a place where pictures are thrown on the screen. A film may be shown anywhere—the difference of a week or two priority makes mighty little difference to the vast majority of picture goers. But the music enables the proprietor and director to give the house a personality, an atmosphere—the music gives the institutional touch which makes lasting patrons.

But all that might be said here of what music can do and will do, how and where and when music ought to be introduced,

From Celebrities Everywhere

I am with you to the end—Samuel Rothafel (Capitol Theatre).

My life and all I have done belongs to you in this—John C. Freund (Musical America).

This is big in its import and far-reaching in its possibilities. It is right—Florence Reed, distinguished actress.

If you will permit me, I should like to tell you how much I believe in this—Artur Bodansky, Conductor, Metropolitan Opera House.

If there is anything in the world I can give you or do for you in this masterly plan and its aims, command me—Hugo Riesenfelt (Rivoli, Rialto, Criterion).

I wish you every success and offer you my best aid—Leonard Liebling (Musical Courier).

This is the biggest idea in years—Nat Finston, conductor.

It ought to accomplish wonders—Joseph Briel, composer.

The men of the union welcome the plan—Joseph Weber, President National Federation of Musicians.

The musical industries commend the action—C. M. Tremaine, Director of The National Bureau for the Advancement of Music.

We are ready to deal with the new Association—Society of Composers and Authors.

We will cooperate in every possible way—Association of Music Publishers (Mr. Mills).

Two million club women are watching—Mrs. A. F. Oberndorfer, General Chairman Women's Clubs.

The new comers to fine music who have attended 1250 Globe Free Concerts in the past five years, totalling over 2,500,000 people, commend the action of their director and founder, Charles D. Isaacson and send greetings, and best wishes. We are behind you to the very end—Beryl Sherman, Secretary Globe Music Club.

I am of the belief that there has been no move to compare with this in effectiveness—Edward L. Hyman, Brooklyn Strand.

I consider it a privilege to come—Harold Franklin (Shea's, Buffalo).

The industry knows how I have believed in music; believe me then when I say that this conference can aid the industry more than any of us can dream at this time—David W. Griffith, director.

To the music-lovers of the screen, I send you my love and best wishes—Frances Alda, soprano, Metropolitan Opera House (Mrs. Gatti-Casazza).

Tell me what I can do to help—it will be a joy to do it—Hipolito Lazaro, greatest Spanish tenor.

As a lover of music, I am in a great joy over your plans—Ethel Clayton, film star.

Marvelous — who started this? — George Beban, screen star.

If I could do a few stunts to help, I'd do it. I love the plan—Pearl White, serial leader.

I think it's bigger than you dream it to be—Charles Wakefield Cadman, composer.

The day of music art in the film theatre has come—Josef Lhevinne, international pianist.

The future of music is through the masses. At the theatre, the people have their eyes glued on the screen, and they hear the music. Unconsciously they get the taste for the best. Unconsciously is the best way to get it. I commend your plan—W. J. Guard, secretary, Metropolitan Opera House.

This is the thing which will be remembered as long as the picture theatre stands and music is played therein—Marguerite White, rising young coloratura soprano.

I am a fan—and I know that what you are doing is right—Florence Easton, Prima donna soprano.

Without question, with reservation, I add my name to the well-wishers—Reinald Werrenrath, famous baritone.

Music can do anything to me—I will do anything for it—Lillian Gish, film star.

Fine idea—George B. Seitz, film director and star.

I'm with you—J. Stuart Blackton.

I use music in my picture studios—have you planned to discuss that phase?—Robert G. Vignola, director.

I predict the entry of the biggest musicians and musical organizations who will compete for the rights to the theatre stage.

I predict that new instruments, new musical arrangements, new kinds of scores, cue-sheets, even compositions are coming.

I predict the use of grand opera and light opera in a more important way.

I predict the coming of the symphonic and opera score and feature picture.

I see the film fading into actual grand opera, and grand opera fading into the film development.

I see the coming of a vast new music public through the efforts of the great industry of the screen.

Everyone of us who participates in any way and contributes by his presence and his advice, is giving in a marked way to an art and an entertainment proposal which will show its strength in the profits of the theatre men, the producers, a greater field for the exercise of the talents and geniuses of music and composition—and a finer life for the vast public.

The Motion Picture News sends greetings to the participants in this great conference. It wishes to acknowledge with the most heartfelt appreciation the magnificent support given to the effort by the leading exhibitors, producers, musicians, composers. It here and now wishes to publicly thank the musical press of the country for the loyal support given the

Chicago and the Mid-West

L. H. MASON, REPRESENTATIVE, 220 SO. STATE ST.

An important development of the week in Chicago film circles was the announcement by Jones, Linick and Schaefer that that firm will have two more motion picture theatres in the loop by June 1st. The announcement means that they plan the purchase or lease of more houses, as of course it would be impossible to build within the limit set for their acquisition.

"That is all that may be said about it at this time," said Ralph T. Kettering, for the firm. "But we will have the theatres for the display of motion picture films by the date set, you may be sure of that."

This will give Jones, Linick and Schaefer a total of eight playhouses in the loop. Two of them, the Rialto and McVickers, now show vaudeville. But a year from May, the firm will acquire complete control over the McVicker property and that site will be used for the erection of a new playhouse.

Balaban and Katz have booked the new George Beban picture, "One Man in a Million" for the Tivoli and Riviera, through Robertson-Cole. It is declared to be a knockout.

"The first time on earth" is the "gag line" being used by Jones, Linick and Schaefer for the opening of the new Chaplin picture "The Kid" which had its first public showing any place on earth Sunday at the Randolph theatre.

"Kismet" will have its premier at the Ziegfeld on Jan. 22. Robertson-Cole announce that they have booked it thoroughly in outlying territory and expect it to go big.

At least two scenes in the new Chaplin picture, "The Kid," which were cut out by the producers for fear they would not stand the test of the Chicago censors, were put back and shown to Chief of Police Fitzmorris, who put his official O. K. on them. They do not relate to crime, but they do add to the piquantness of the picture and are reminiscent of Eugene Field's suppressed poem about the habits of Little Willie at night.

L. A. Rozelle has resigned as assistant manager of Robertson-Cole Chicago exchange, according to an announcement from the offices of the firm.

Lubliner and Trintz announce that they expect to open soon their new $1,100,000 playhouse, "The Senate," at Madison and Kedzie. They had expected this opening last September but have been delayed by lack of materials and other troubles. The huge theatre—it will have 3900 seats—however, is beginning to look completed and the owners hope to have it ready for business within a month or so. Ward Johnson has been engaged to direct the 50-piece orchestra that will be employed. An indication of the size of the building is the fact that the inner foyer is 62 x 60 feet, which is almost space enough for an entire theatre on Madison or State streets.

Thursday "Jazz nights" are making a great hit with the patrons of Balaban and Katz's S. Park theatre. A special program pictures, music and all, is given each Thursday night and the term "Jazz night" given the break in the week's bill. "It is catching on well, and the people certainly do seem to like it," is the verdict of W. Hollander, publicity man for the firm.

Robertson-Cole have received the prints of the new Max Linder picture, "Seven Years of Bad Luck," and expect to announce a release date soon.

Jerseyville, Ill., is to have a new theatre to seat 2,000 people.

Anton Krack has bought the Venus theatre in Gary, Ind., according to an announcement just made.

A. J. Hill, of the Glen theatre, who has been laid up in the hospital for some time, is out again.

Chicago's council committee on revenue, which has been trying to find some way to tackle the ticket scalper's business, also has before it a proposal to shut the all-night motion picture houses. Police complaint that bandits loaf in the theatres until time to "go to work" resulted in an investigation being made by Sam Atkinson, of the Allied Amusement Association and members of the committee. Chairman Cermak, of the committee, says he is not inclined to favor closing the houses, because he finds that telephone girls, women employed in buildings, and many newspaper and other night workers, patronize the house extensively, not only to see the shows but to have a safe place to wait until the car service is such as to make it safe for them to go home.

Maurice Choynski on Saturday had the big opening of his new "Biltmore" theatre at Division and Robery streets. It has a seating capacity of 2,100. Wallace Reid, in "The Charm School" was the big feature of the opening. Another feature of the opening was Levitt's Concert Orchestra which furnished tuneful popular and operatic music. Associated with Choynski are Salo Auerbach, Wolfe and Perlmutter, who operate the New Strand, Oakley, Vision and Newberry theatres. So popular have been their offerings they could not handle the trade.

Jones, Linick and Schaefer are planning to make a feature house out of the Orpheum, which has been a program theatre. Beginning Sunday, January 30th, there will be but one program change a week. The "Midsummer Madness" is to be transferred to the Orpheum on that date and from then on it will be purely a feature house.

"Bill" Cook, well known salesman for the First National, in Chicago, has resigned. He has made no announcement as to his future plans.

Harry Weiss, president of the Superior Screen Service, Inc., Chicago, has closed a deal with Colvin Brown, of New York, for 52 new single reel releases known as Pictorial Life. He also has closed for 52 Kineto reviews made by Charles Urban, through franchise to National Exchanges, New York. He also has closed with Arrow Film Co., for "Daughter of the Don" and "Bitter Fruit," both six reel features. He also has obtained 12 Perry comedies, featuring Mack (Ambrose) Swain.

E. E. Dorris has sold his Grove theatre, 2417 Cottage Grove avenue, to Max Rubin, of Chicago.

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, whose return from Europe was chronicled in Motion Picture News, does not believe the British custom of having intermissions between each number, and of serving tea to patrons in the promenades, will develop in this country. "Theatres are not built with the space for such attention to their patrons," he says. "It is a delightful custom, but would require the rebuilding of most of our existing theatres in this country."

"Forbidden Fruit," the new Cecil DeMille picture, will be shown at the Jones, Linick and Schaefer Randolph theatre for the first time on January 30th. Under the firm's contract with Paramount, no other releases are permitted until 4 weeks from the date Jones, Linick and Schaefer show it, and this clause in the contract is one of the things that induced the change in the operation of the Orpheum. "In other words, when we get a good picture, we can give it the run it is worth," is the opinion of Ralph Kettering.

Along the same line, Arthur Stern, of Lubliner and Trintz, wants to know why better class of pictures are so hard to get. "The directors apparently are not getting rich; the producers do not seem to be covered with wealth. Possibly the stars are getting it, but the fact remains that we do not seem to be able to get the pictures with the sort of punch we need. Some of the pictures of five years ago were better than many we are getting now. And in the old days, a good picture saw the light of day but one night in a theatre."

A petition has been filed with the Chicago City Council asking that a policewoman be stationed in each motion picture theatre in Chicago. It was filed "by request" by Ald. A. A. McCormick, of the 6th ward, having been forwarded to him by members of the Arche Club. The temper of the council is such, however, there is mighty little chance for adding enough policewomen to the force to put one in each motion picture theatre.

J. Brottman has purchased the Park theatre on North avenue. Brottman is a brother of Barney Brottman, the Moline, Ill., showman.

Motion pictures are to be used by the farmers of America to lay before the people the problems of raising and distributing the nation's food supply.

The Farmers' Film Corporation, with officers at 910 S. Michigan avenue, has been organized for the purpose of laying the whole problem before the people, from the time the seeds are planted until the foods get to the consumer's table. William E. Skinner, secretary of the National Dairy Association, is secretary of the company, and the Waukesha County Corporation, a Wisconsin farm organization, has agreed to bear the preliminary expenses. Harry E. Aitkin, organizer of the Triangle Film Corporation, which was responsible for "The Birth of a Nation," is to be associated with the new company which, according to Skinner, has the approbation of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, American Farm Bureau Federation, the Grange Movement and the National Dairy Association.

Harry Rice, business manager of the Independent Films Association, will leave for New York within the next week to consummate an arrangement that will give Independent Films Association an Eastern office. The United States will be handled in three sections. Eddy Eckels, president, taking complete charge of the West; Harry Rice, the Middle West, and the New York office, the Eastern territory and foreign sales. It is intended to put an exploitation department in the Eastern office under the supervision of the Chicago main office.

Manager Lesserman, of Universal, is preparing to leave for the West Coast about February 1st.

Hoover Film Drive Going Forward in All Sections of Country

Correspondents and M.P.T.O. of A. Report Enthusiasm at All Points

REPORTS received from News correspondents in various parts of the country indicate that theatre-owners and exchange-men are putting forth special efforts to advance the motion-picture campaign for the Hoover-European Relief Fund, which is to culminate in a nation-wide observance in picture-theatres throughout the country of "Hoover Day" on the 26th of January. Special arrangements are also being made for January 29th. Reports from individual sources of the progress being made in the great film drive are confirmed by a report just received from the headquarters of the Motion-Picture Theatre Owners of America in New York. President Sydney S. Cohen announces "most encouraging reports concerning the work of exhibitors in every part of the country for the benefit of the Hoover Fund."

M.P.T.O. of A. Active

The following letter has been addressed to all exhibitors from the headquarters of the M. P. T. O. of A.:

"Mr. Herbert Hoover has appealed to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to cooperate with him in his campaign for the raising of money to save the starving children of Central and Eastern Europe. We have pledged ourselves to respond to this appeal.

"We have thus an opportunity not alone of showing that our hearts are in the right place, but of demonstrating to the world the combined power of the screens of America.

"Do not fail the children on the 26th day of January and advertise the day well."

St. Paul, Minn., on the Job

A report from B. C. Ferriss of St. Paul, Minnesota, states that theatrical men in St. Paul are responding enthusiastically to the call to aid the Hoover Fund movement. One-sheets and three-sheets are being used in the lobbies of the thirty-five theatres co-operating in the campaign. Space has also been secured in the St. Paul newspapers, announcing the drive and explaining its object and the way in which the public could co-operate with the theatre-owners.

Local clubs have also been interested in the movement, and prominent men and women have been pledged to the soliciting of funds in the picture houses on January 26th. Speakers have also been secured for the 26th through the old Four-Minute-Men organization operating during the war. Special matinee showings will also be staged on Saturday, January 29th, for the drive.

"The Kid" Smashing All Records in Chicago

CHICAGO, Jan. 18.—The world premier of Charlie Chaplin's "The Kid," at the Randolph theatre in Chicago's "loop," proved that the Chicago public agree with the reviewers of all the City papers that it is a great picture. On the first day of the run, the Randolph's best previous attendance records were surpassed by fifty per cent, according to Messrs. Jones, Linich and Schaefer, although the temperature on Sunday was near zero. Monday's attendance smashed previous records for that day by sixty per cent, and the crowds continue at the time of this wire.

Talk of a six or eight weeks' run is general in Chicago film circles.

Benefit Matinees in West

A report from a News correspondent on the Coast informs that W. A. Graeper of the Union Avenue Theatre, Portland, Ore., who is the state-secretary of the Hoover-European Relief fund asked cooperation of the league which voted to put on in each of the theatres represented by its members, special benefit matinees with four minute speakers. Exchange men offered to donate the films used in these matinees.

J. J. Parker, chairman of motion picture ball scheduled for February, reported that J. G. Von Herberg now in the east is arranging to bring to Portland some of the biggest screen stars to be present in person when the affair takes place.

Philadelphia Organizing

Jules Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, has announced that he will donate to the Motion Picture Committee of the European Relief Council one full day's receipts from every one of the Stanley Company's one hundred and more theatres in and around Philadelphia.

Mr. Mastbaum declares the Philadelphia motion picture world will organize itself into a money-raising unit that would be second to none, throughout the length and breadth of the land.

New Orleans Enthusiastic

In New Orleans, every picture theatre in the city will devote the entire week of January 23d to January 30th to raising funds. E. V. Richards, of the Sanger Amusement Company, the regional chairman appointed by Mr. Hoover for Louisiana has his territory well organized for the drive. In a letter to the Hoover Headquarters, Leigh Carroll, State chairman of the European Relief Council in Louisiana writes:

"Organization of the Committee was perfected at a meeting held in the Sanger Amusement Co.'s building and was presided over by Mr. E. V. Richards, who serves the Motion Picture Industry, in this instance as State Chairman. Mr. Howard W. McCoy, manager of the Palace Theatre, a vaudeville house, was chosen Chairman of the Committee that will arrange the special matinee for January 29th and for collections each day and night in all of the picture houses and theatres during the period covered by January 23-30.

Special Shows in Indiana

From Indianapolis, Ind., comes word that E. H. Bingham, part owner of the Colonial, Indianapolis, and a member of the national executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, has been named head of the Indiana division of the national motion picture theatre drive to save 250,000 of Europe's starving children by raising $2,500,000. The appointment came from Herbert Hoover. Special shows will be given in photoplay houses throughout Indiana on Saturday morning, Jan. 29. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana are behind the movement in the state heart and soul. President G. G. Schmidt called a meeting last week, at which plans were discussed. Another is to be held this week for the purpose of furthering the movement.

The exchanges offered to give all films gratis for the shows on the 29th, which offer was enthusiastically accepted. Many exhibitors from out of town attended the meeting in response to Mr. Shea's invitation.

Buffalo Arranges to Aid

At a meeting of the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association held in the Hotel Iroquois, Buffalo, on January 14th, M. Shea, Buffalo chairman of the Hoover Fund spoke on the need of 100 per cent co-operation among local exhibitors and exchange men on Buffalo's part in the drive in aid of the starving children of Europe. As Buffalo's part in the Hoover drive the managers have decided to hold a drive in the theatres on Wednesday, January 26, when the audiences would be asked to help. It has also been decided to give special shows in the downtown theatres on Saturday morning, January 29th and in the neighborhood theatre, Saturday afternoon of the same date, when the entire proceeds would be turned over to the fund.

EXHIBITORS' REPORTS ON NEW RELEASES

What the Big Houses Say

EARLY RETURNS FROM WEEK RUN THEATERS

FAMOUS PLAYERS

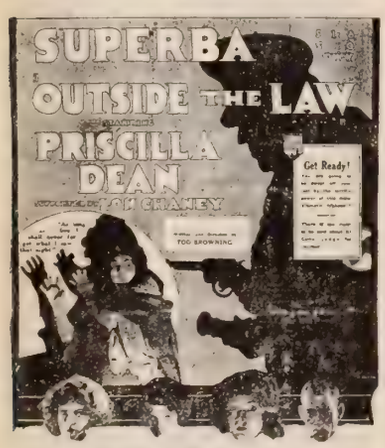
The Jucklins—
This feature was well liked by our patrons and went over big for four days. (Middle West.)

Very good story. The picture follows the original narative well and it drew the "better class" audiences. (East.)

Midsummer Madness—
Well constructed picture with interesting episodes and beautiful scenes. Went over so well we are holding it for a second week. (Middle West.)

Held over a second week to good business though not as great as the first week. (Middle West.)

Life of the Party—
Much better vehicle for Arbuckle than the "Round Up." Still not at his best for big pictures. Good business. (East.)



Bully comedy, but Fatty is not yet a drawing card—will not make any money. (West.)

Idols of Clay—
Going great. Showing at first-run neighborhood house in fashionable location and this is the kind of picture that gets over the best. (Middle West.)
Average picture with business about as usual. (West.)

Flying Pat—
Picture is good but brought no extra business. (West.)

Always Audacious—
Great picture. Sure did go over big. Audiences were pleased and talked about it to their friends, consequently extra business. (West.)

Something to Think About—
Consider this a splendid money maker. When I screened this one didn't consider same a box office play but after playing same found it to be very satisfactory. It pleased a particular audience. (West.)

Four column advertisement framed by Superba theatre, Los Angeles, to advertise "Outside the Law."

One of the display ads run by Miller's theatre, Los Angeles, for the premiere showing of "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court"

Civilian Clothes—
All liked this, but not a big box office attraction. When Meighan is under De Mille's whip he can put it across but not so well with Ford. (West.)

The Charm School—
Thoroughly pleasing picture. Reid always popular here. Good business. (East.)

To Please One Woman—
Held up pretty well in second week. (East.)

FIRST NATIONAL

Dinty—
An excellent picture which drew the crowds. Wesley Barry has made a hit with the patrons in this town. All of the critics praised this picture. (Middle West.)

Took the town by storm. The sidewalk was crowded for two weeks by admission seekers. (East.)

Habit—
Used as feature with "Love, Honor and Obey" as added attraction. Double program helped. (Middle West.)

What Women Love—
This picture consisted mostly of Annette Kellermann in a number of poses. The action of the story hardly begins until the last reel. It is only a fair picture, but Annette Kellermann draws well. (Middle West.)

Passion—
Broke record attendance. Wonderful production. Audience very enthusiastic. (East.)

45 Minutes From Broadway—
Satisfactory picture though some patrons missed the old Ray. Business good. (East.)

The Branded Woman—
Picture went over big and attracted the crowds to my theatre. (West.)

GOLDWYN

Godless Men—
Good picture with some strong situations which played to excellent business for one week. (Middle West.)

Honest Hutch—
Best yet of the Will Rogers pictures. He is growing in popularity. (Middle West.)

Officer 666—
Opened very big. Splendid comedy. (Middle West.)

METRO

Misleading Lady—
Fine picture—splendid comedy, and acting done by Bert Lytell. The picture is thorou[gh] healthy entertainment of the kind in greatest demand. (Middle West.)

The Saphead—
Buster Keaton made a hit in this picture. He is rapidly coming to the fore as a comedian. (Middle West.)

Silver Lining—
Just a little above the average production. (East.)

Cinderella's Twin—
Pleasing audience picture. Did big business. (East.)

PATHE

A Beggar in Purple—
Had 'em standing out all during opening. Everybody liked it. (Middle West.)

The Riddle: Woman—
Good picture although lacking in action and too high brow for average audience. It was also marred by too many close-ups of the star. Played to average business. (Middle West.)

UNITED ARTISTS

Mark of Zorro—
Excellent picture but especially enjoyed by the men. Held for second week. Went extra big first week but only average on second week. (East.)

One week run record broken here. Powerful combination of picture, players and plot.

Continued to pack them in at all hours. Excellent business. (East.)

REALART

Her Beloved Villain—
Fair picture to fair business. (East.)

EQUITY

Hush—
Put over with extra advertising campign. Drew well and Miss Young liked. (Middle West.)

ROBERTSON-COLE

Kismet—
Wonderful production as testified to by the leading citizens Artistic, from every angle. A picture all should see without fail according to general opinion. (Middle West.)

ASSOCIATED PRODUCERS

The Forbidden Thing—
The best picture of the week in this city. A good story well acted. (Middle West.)

VITAGRAPH

Dead Men Tell No Tales—
Regular record breaker. Smashing melodrama. Public liked it though women were prejudiced against it at first. (Middle West.)

STOLL FILM

Squandered Lives—
An average picture which played to fair business. (Middle West.)

SELZNICK

The Point of View—
Evident that Elaine Hammerstein, not the picture, brought the crowd. She goes big here and we have musical audience.

UNIVERSAL

Devil's Passkey—
Crowds stood in line every night. Concensus of opinion "Great." (East.)

STATE RIGHTS

Alice in Wonderland—
It worked through parents, teachers, schools, etc. Will do exceptional business. As an ordinary program feature, it is rotten. (West.)

A Practical Prologue 'Script

Details of Joseph Plunkett's Specialty Number for "The Great Adventure"

J. L. PLUNKETT, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, staged a rich-looking and attractive prologue for "The Great Adventure" last week, by using an artist's studio as his background.

This setting is strikingly appropriate to the picture in view of the fact that the play is built about a famous artist and his affairs with women. By visiting various antique shops, Mr. Plunkett was able to dress his stage with an assortment of chairs, draperies, pictures, sketches and vases that might ordinarily be found in an artist's studio in Russia.

The only part of the setting that had to be built was a sort of frame ten feet high, four and one-half feet wide and about two feet deep. To the audience this frame resembled nothing more than a large painting which the artist was apparently completing. Instead of an oil drawing however, the painting on the surface of the frame was done in netting in order to enable Mr. Plunkett to accomplish his effect later on in the prologue.

The curtain rose on the artist putting his last finishing touch on the painting. Strains from "A Dream," by Bartlett, were faintly heard as the curtain began to rise. The curtain up, the artist went into the song, singing directly at the painting of the girl, not the audience.

At the end of the song, the painting on the frame seemed to come to life. The girl moved her body and held out her arms as if appealing to the artist. This was accomplished by gradually bringing into play the dimmer lights, of white and amber color, which were placed on the four sides of the interior of the frame.

By a glance at the accompanying working script of the prologue, Mr. Plunkett's building plan and lighting scheme are clear.

X—Footlights. These were in blue and were in effect during the entire scene.

3—Calcium light. Right wing. Same as 1.

2—Calcium light. Overhead spot, attached to bottom of screen. This flooded artist's figure.

BB—Back horizon drop.

K—Building on horizon drop, and seen through the meeting on interior drop.

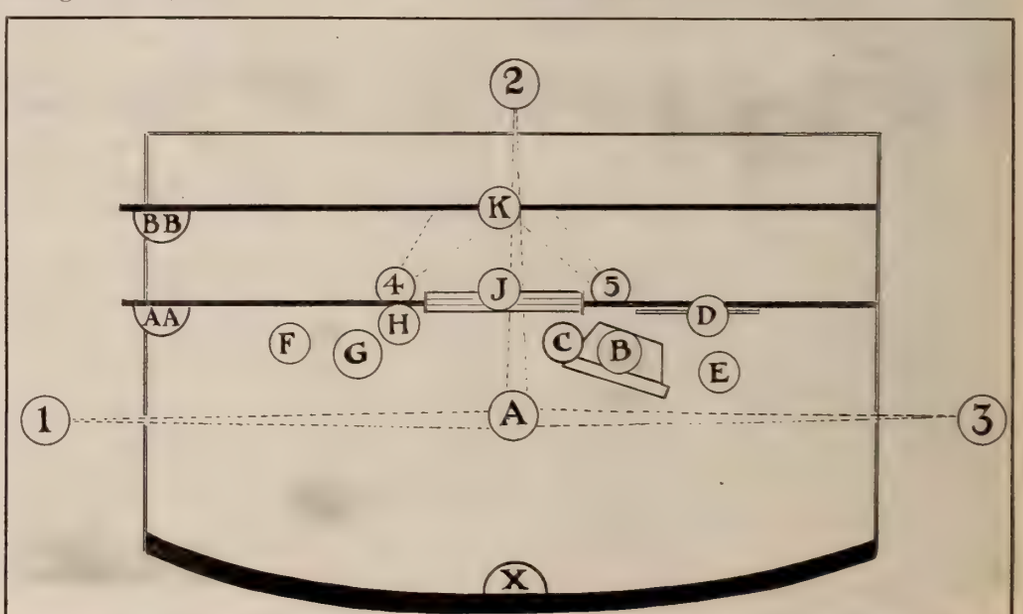
AA—Front drop, showing interior of artist's studio. This drop is two and one-half feet in the fore of the back drop.

4 & 5—Back stage spots, blued to light up horizon drop. Indigo blue, in effect during entire scene.

F—Chair.

G—Table.

H—Knight.



C—Frame, ten feet high; four and one-half feet wide; two feet deep. With gauze painting of girl stretched across front. Inside are rows of white and amber lights on dimmer arrangement. Girl frames herself against painting on net front and is revealed when white and amber lights are gradually turned up.

B—Girl who stands within frame.

D—Drapery on wall.

E—Chair.

Mr. Plunkett used no border lights, and the only combination coloring used was the blending of the white and amber lights within the frame, revealing the painting come to life.

Novelty Exploitation for "Heliotrope"

Novelty exploitation was relied upon to a large extent by the Royal theatre of Hutchinson, Kansas, for its showing of "Heliotrope."

Small cut-outs were prepared which resembled in shape and color a bouquet of heliotrope. A very tiny bottle of heliotrope perfume was attached to the cut-out by a rubber band. The printing on the front simply said: "Heliotrope—a Paramount picture," so that the same idea could be adapted to any part of the country. The reverse of the card was dedicated to local exploitation, the copy reading: "It was a whiff of 'Heliotrope' which created a picture that has without doubt the most unusual and gripping plot ever written. Royal theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas. Four days, commencing Monday, Jan. 3."

These were distributed to patrons of the Royal theatre at the box-office several days before "Heliotrope" commenced its run, and gave ample opportunity for the resulting mouth-to-mouth advertising to do its work effectively.

Lyric Gets Red Cross Assistance for "The Penalty"

When "The Penalty" was shown at the Lyric theatre, Richmond, the biggest exploitation feature was a tie-up with the local members of the American Red Cross Society.

There was a large attendance of Red Cross members on the designated night and most of them wore their Red Cross uniforms, adding much to the exploitation value of the stunt. The newspapers were liberal in the space they devoted to the Red Cross night.

Special invitations were sent out to more than 250 physicians of Richmond, calling their attention to Blizzard's mad dream of having sound legs grafted upon the stubs which had been left him by a physician who had needlessly amputated his legs. The query was propounded whether medical science would not in time be able to do that very thing. Medical curiosity was piqued and many of the city's physicians saw a screening of "The Penalty."

A new style of "red-lined" newspaper extra was pulled for the Lyric's showing of "The Penalty," which also attracted much attention. An 80-foot banner and net suspended across Broad street, advertising the picture, was a "flash" of unusual importance and attention-arresting value.

The billboard, program and newspaper advertising was increased and intensified. Attractive displays were obtained in many prominent shop windows.

Leader Theatre Exploitation

Washington House Puts Over Great Campaign for "Shipwrecked Among the Cannibals"

THE Leader Theatre of Washington, D. C., recently gave "Shipwrecked Among the Cannibals" an exploitation campaign that compares favorably with the best that the feature has received.

The manager of the theatre utilized the high and wide entrance to his theatre lobby for his display. Filling the upper half of the opening above the ticket booth, he caused to be constructed a small stage setting, the width of the theatre lobby and about six feet deep.

His back-drop consisted of a shipwreck and tropical beach scene. In front of this drop there were erected figures of the cameramen and of a group of savages cut from one of the twenty-four sheets with the picture. The effect was immensely realistic and could be seen from across the street as easily as from close-up.

On each side of this setting there was arranged an additional group of figures bearing upon the picture. At one side was a big kettle such as is associated with cannibal stories. On this kettle was painted the word "welcome." Sticking from the kettle (this was what brought a gasp from passers-by) were models of two human feet. The effect was startling.

On the other side was a skeleton and other bones which added to the wierdness of the lobby.

In the lower part of the lobby, and flanking the box office were hung pennants bearing punchful slogans having to do with the picture, such as: "Cannibals Turn Green After Death." "Cannibal Men and Women Never Wear Clothes," "Cannibals Fight Tigers With Their Teeth," etc.

There also were several panels and large oil paintings of true cannibal types hung near the lobby entrance. The box office and the entrance doors were covered with bamboo and thatch work, giving an exact impression of a cannibal dwelling.

The result was highly successful from a box office standpoint.

Plunkett's Prologue for "The Devil"

Manager Joseph L. Plunkett of the New York Strand is staging a prologue for the current week's feature attraction "The Devil" that further proves the intrinsic value of the special number in connection with the presentation of pictures.

For the basic idea Manager Plunkett goes to the film itself, reproducing in the main, one of the scenes, settings being especially built for the occasion.

Cuts showing three scenes from the prologue are shown below. The number is a combination of clever lighting effects and good music. A baritone, Fernando Guarneri, sings "Mephistofele Aria" from the opera by Boito, and at the conclusion the Sergastchinko Ballet emerge from a trap door. Red lighting effects predominate, with shading of blue and purple. By an arrangement of these lights, the scene appears to extend far into the distance, giving the effect of a long marble hall. This is another phase of creating a perspective, with the aid of proper and exact lighting. A flaming fire down-stage center seems to lick the bodies of the dancers. As the intensity of red increases they dance about the fire. One dancer falls headlong into the flames, thrown by the spell of the singer representing the Devil. A revolving color scheme of lights is then thrown on the others as they fall back on the steps at the Devil's mercy. Deep red and purple diffused floods the whole scene as it comes to a close.

For the overture the Symphony Orchestra played the overture from "Mephistofele"—(Boito). The lighting for that is a deep purple float and red on blue-curtained panels, rendering the arrangement conducive to the desired atmosphere.

Newark Theatre Stages Prologue for "Passion"

The new Branford theatre, Newark, N. J., is receiving considerable attention from Broadway's most original and artistic designers of prologue novelties as a result of the presentation of "Passion." The prologue consisted of a musical and pictorial act, harmonizing with the period during which the action of the silent drama passes.

It introduced Pola Negri (Ruth Kellogg White), soprano; Louis XVI (Wilfred Glenn), baritone; Armond (Leon Mario), tenor, and a sextet of dancers. The numbers were respectively the Jewel Song from "Faust," the "Vision Fugitive" air from Massenet's "Herodiate," and one of Chevalier des Grieux's airs in Massenet's "Manon."

The sextet danced the minuet as a climax to the prologue.

The singing and dancing was done in front of a massive curtain which was pulled aside by two little girls dressed as pages. Spots were used to good effect.

Rothafel Stages Prologue for "The Love Light"

S. L. ROTHAFEL is staging an elaborate musical prologue to "The Love Light," the feature attraction at the New York Capitol this week.

Headed by Erik Bye, the Capitol ensemble sings original Italian folk songs and the Capitol ballet, with Mlle. Gambarelli and Alexander Oumansky give native folk dances.

A stage setting conforming somewhat to the exterior of "Angela's" home, a scene laid in an Italian fishing village among the cliffs bordering on the Mediterranean, is provided. A lighthouse painted in silhouette on the back drop has a practical light that winks every few seconds. The company is attired in the costumes of the natives of the locale of the picture.

The number begins with chorus singing. Later Mr. Bye renders a solo to a harp accompaniment and the ballet performs. A considerable amount of pantomime has been worked out, making the prologue a continuous number. The lightings are for night. Artist Wenger's scenic canvas is especially effective. The scene is rural with the sea dimly visible over the top of the cliff on which the lighthouse is placed. Diffused spots of amber light are moved slowly about on the canvas, giving the effect of a moon shining on the fields through clouds.

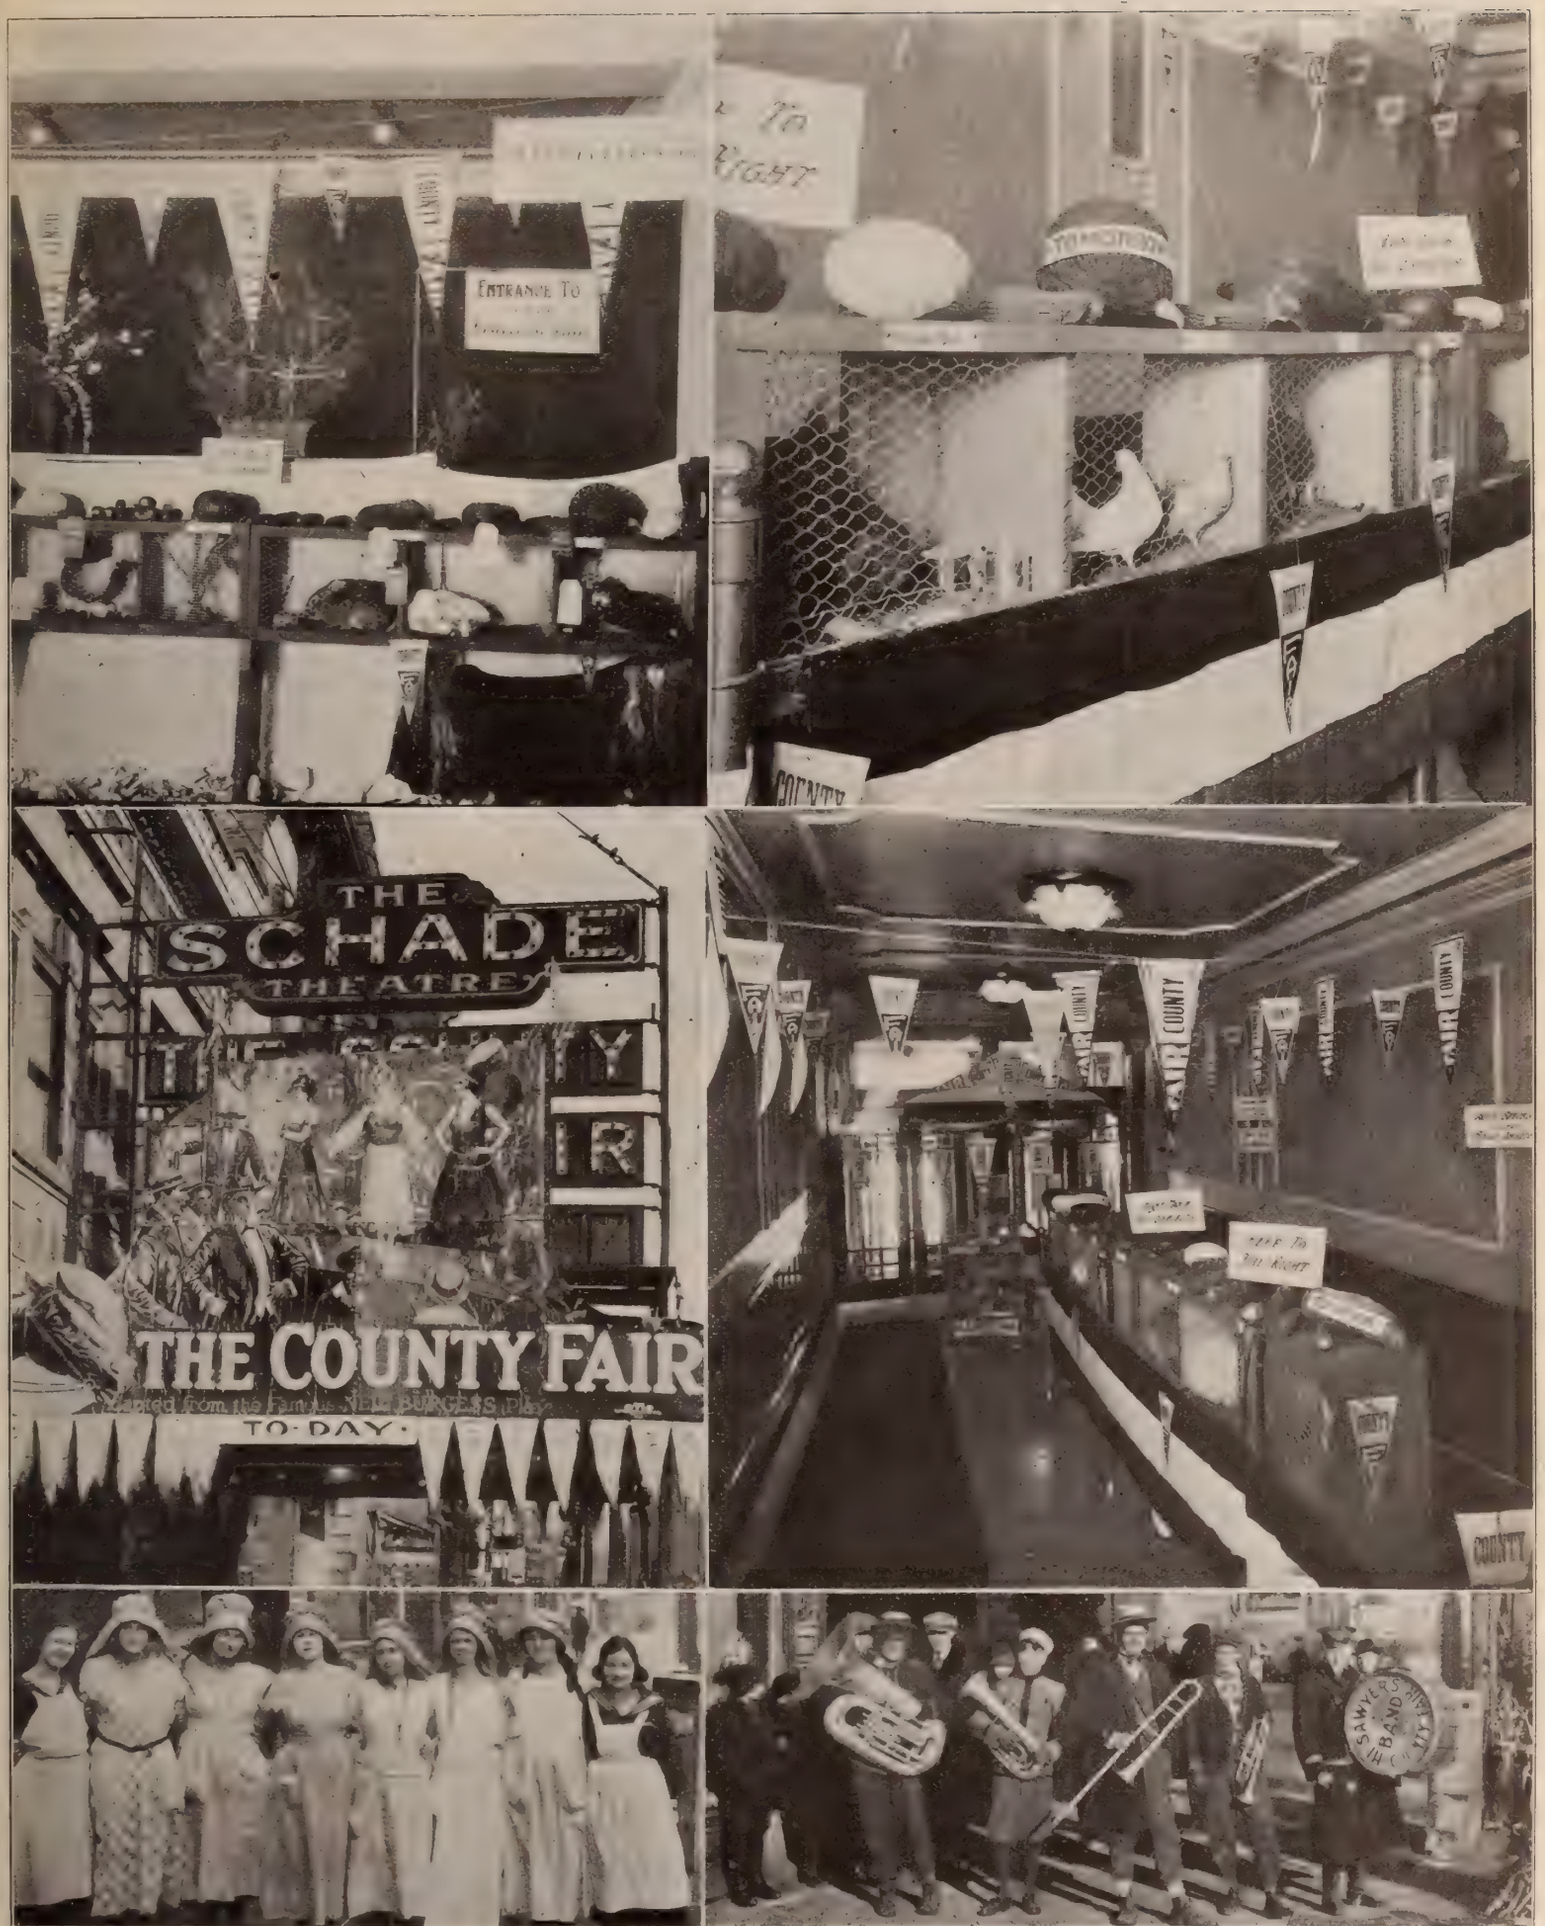
Hoffman Gets Results with Advance Prologue

George Hoffman, publicity director for the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises, Union Hill, N. J., has devised an exploitation stunt that he calls an advance prologue

"The Face at Your Window" was a coming bill at the Lincoln theatre, and Hoffman wanted to advertise it. So he staged a prologue for the attraction a week in advance.

"This is what the audience saw: Stage cards announced "Extra" which might lead them to believe that they were to see a try-out of a new act not on the program. The curtain rises to softly played music, disclosing a living room. On the stage is a woman in evening clothes, which fixes the time as evening. The woman is reading to a little boy, consulting her watch nervously.

"A bell rings off stage, and a maid ushers in what can be presumed to be neighbors, as they are hatless. Then follows a few seconds of pantomimic conversation, with much agitation and an effort on the part of the woman to keep what is being said out of the hearing of the little boy.



"Again the woman goes to the window. More excited talk by those on the stage. The boy returns to his picture book. Then enters the man they have been awaiting. He removes his hat and overcoat hastily, kisses the woman and the little boy—whom he holds tightly to him—and then, in an attempt at sociability, motions the woman to the piano. Song "Sweet Love," played by woman and sung by two of the visitors.

"At the finish of the song a green spotlight is focused on the window and very slowly there appears a hand, followed by the body of a man with a menacing look on his face. The women scream. The man of the house rushes to the drawer of the table and gets his revolver, but before he can use it, three shots are heard off stage and the lights go out.

"The stage is now in complete darkness. A sign is lowered electrically lighted transparency which lights up gradually, announcing "The Face at Your Window" all next week.

This cut shows three views of the original prologue which Manager Joseph L. Plunkett of the New York Strand theatre is presenting this week with the showing of "The Devil"

Toy Shop Prologue at Saxe's Strand

The animated Toy Shop which was used as a prologue during Christmas week at Saxe's Strand theatre, Milwaukee, is a prologue which may easily be adopted for use in motion picture theatres almost any time of the year. In the Toy Shop are seen a variety of dolls, including a Scotch doll, baby doll, sailor doll, Russian Cossack doll, Miss Liberty doll and two Teddy Bears. Each of the children playing these parts provided a novel dance. A Santa Claus was used to lift the dolls out of the boxes and set them dancing, but the character of Santa could easily be replaced by an old toy maker. Manager Weisfeldt received considerable praise for the staging of this number, which pleased the hundreds of children and grown-ups who attended the Strand theatre during Christmas week.

Police Inquire—"How Come?"

Rae Barnes, manager of the Hub theatre, Casper, Wyo., had a little explaining to do at Police Headquarters in that town recently as a result of a stunt he put over in his exploitation of "Wanted At Headquarters."

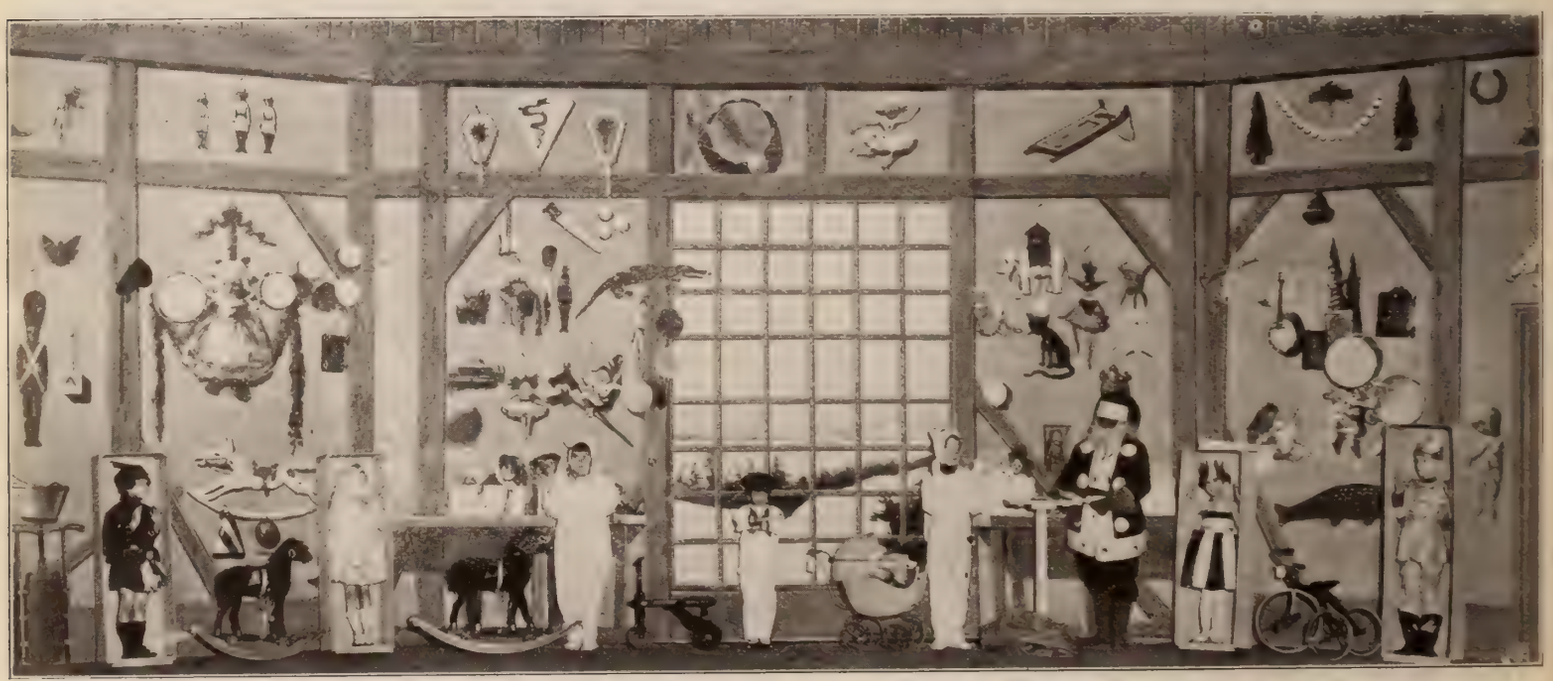
He had four hundred red cards printed bearing the inscription, "You Are 'Wanted at Headquarters.'" These he caused to be hung on automobiles throughout the vicinity.

Later that day a policeman appeared at the Hub Theatre and addressed Barnes:

"You are wanted at headquarters."

Barnes explained the stunt to the police chief and soon was released. The Casper papers carried a full account of the incident, thereby adding greatly to the pre-showing publicity of the picture.

Sanson Originates Window Display Idea



Manager Jack Sanson of the Bristol theatre, Bristol Conn., had a hunch that something unusually clever could be devoted to interest prospective patrons in his showing of "Don't Every Marry." The result of his playing the hunch was a window display in a store adjoining the Bristol that more than lived up to expectations.

Mr. Sanson divided the window in such a manner that it seemed to portray two different interiors. He cut down scenery representing a parlor and which he had back stage to fit the height of the show-window. He cut down other frames which represented the walls of a rather discolored kitchen to fit in the other half of the window.

Out of the parlor interior which took up half of the space of the window, Mr. Sanson furnished up a corner of a bachelor's apartment. There was the big, comfortable chair, the parlor lamp, nice table, rug, telephone and tobacco conveniences. And the whole scene looked very cozy. Mr. Sanson labelled this side of the window with one word, and that was simply, "BEFORE."

In the space bounded by the kitchen walls he so arranged such articles as a wash-tub, a broom, gas heater, washboard, baby's underclothes, clothes-line and a few dirty dishes as to give the passerby a pretty intimate glimpse into a corner of a somewhat unattractive kitchen of a young bride who might number a young baby among her wifely worries. This scene was labelled with another word, "AFTER."

Across the two displays was the announcement "Marshall Neilan's 'DON'T EVER MARRY' at the Bristol." A glance at the display told it all: the bachelor who gave up his comfortable life for the worries that come with marriage.

Novelty Stunt Advertises Doug on the East Side

It has remained for New York's East Side to originate the most unique exploitation stunt in connection with "The Mark of Zorro" yet to be recorded.

H. Dolinsky, manager of Loew's Avenue B Theatre, New York, is the exhibitor who put over the exploitation and reaped the profit therefrom.

A miniature stage about eight feet from the ground was constructed over the gates of the stage entrance on the Avenue B side of the theatre. The stage was equipped with a curtain and footlights, adding to the realism of the idea. Around the stage were painted dripping, bloody red "Z's" with the words, "Watch for 'Zorro'—Here every night."

William E. Slutsky, a young man in the employ of the United Artists Corporation, who greatly resembles "Doug," enacted the impersonation stunt. Dressed in the bandit attire that "Doug" uses in the production itself, he first appeared on the stage, did a stunt or two and before one could bat an eye he made a "mysterious" appearance at some other section of the theatre. This "watch for Zorro" kept the crowds on edge continually.

In some manner a rumor got about the district that Fairbanks was there in person, and then there was no holding back the crowds. A cut of Mr. Dolinsky's stage is shown on this page.

Small Town Exhibitor Guns for Rural Trade

In exploitation, mileage should not be taken into consideration. The exhibitor who voluntarily puts a limit on the territory from which his theatre can draw is perhaps barring himself out from patronage that is awaiting an invitation to join the people who pay good money into his box office.

Herbert H. Johnson, manager of the Luna theatre, Lafayette, Indiana, recently went gunning for a transient patronage and hit a mine which has been pouring steadily into his theatre from a source he had never thought of. "The Turning Point" appealed to him as affording stunt advertising that would appeal to touring automobilists who break their journeys through night stop-overs in Lafayette.

"Mark of Zorro" exploitation stunt put over by Loew's Avenue B theatre, New York, as told in the accompanying story

His stunt was to erect sign posts at all the cross roads within several miles of Lafayette, each sign reading:

"THE TURNING POINT
To the Luna Theatre
The First National Show House
Lafayette, Indiana."

The posts were placed in position several days before the Katherine MacDonald feature opened. They were successful in attracting many automobile parties to the playhouse, but in addition to that, they reached the farmers who live all around Lafayette, and who used the same road.

Washington Theatre Pulls Stunt for "Earthbound"

A seven-foot globe constructed of metal, revolved by a motor, and with the oceans and continents painted on it, was placed on top of the glass marquise of Loew's Columbia theatre, Washington, D. C., to exploit the showing of "Earthbound." Electric lights played upon the revolving globe.

The stunt was originated by Goldwyn's traveling exploitation man from headquarters, W. R. Ferguson. Various milling companies in Washington to whom he went to have the globe constructed told him it could not be done, so he had recourse to a German metal worker named Gischner who runs a sort of school for skilled mechanics. He pays an instructor $25 a night to run the classes but does not charge a penny from the pupils. He at last was persuaded to build a revolving globe. The first attempt was not successful and only the persuasive powers of Mr. Ferguson kept him at the task until it was complete. The day after the globe was placed above the marquise, Ferguson was summoned before the building inspectors and asked how he dared to put up a sign in that exclusive section. He told the inspectors that it was just a reproduction of the globe without a bit of advertising on it and that therefore it was no sign. The inspectors retired to consider that phase and told him they would inform him of their decision in the matter, but no decision was forthcoming and the huge, revolving, lighted globe continued to tell the public that "Earthbound" was playing at Loew's Columbia. The business was so big on the week that the engagement was extended for a second week.

Other stunts were worked in Washington by Mr. Ferguson. One was to persuade the daily Post to run theatrical readers at the bottom of the first page of that newspaper. Special heralds were distributed; a "1921 announcement to Washington theatre patrons."

How Churchill of the California Puts 'Em Over

Much that was novel was injected into the exploitation campaign for "Something to Think About," by J. F. Churchill, manager of the California theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal.

The opening day every street car in the city carried a banner six feet long by two feet wide. A small cart was secured to which a horse was hitched in the fashion illustrated by the accompanying cut.

In presenting the picture a prologue in which a Knabe Ampico reproducing piano was used in a mystery number. This was labeled "Something to Think About."

The prologue began with the stage in darkness. Then a single light sending up a veil of incense came on. It was a symbol of "Aladdin's lamp."

After a moment soft green lights from right and left stage, at first small and then growing in size and intensity, illumined the scene.

The piano solo was then begun. Later the lights were blended into amber revealing the instrument.

"Something to Think About" ballyhoo by the California theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal.

Fitzer Puts Over Good Stunt for "Madonnas and Men"

In connection with the two-week run of "Madonnas and Men," which is being shown at the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., Ben Fitzer, distributor of the subject in New York, north of Westchester county, put over a good stunt in exploiting the production. Mr. Fitzer left his Buffalo office in the Palace theatre building to aid Manager Emmet Cornell put the picture over. The stunt was the establishment of a series of Bureaus of Information in important buildings of the city. These bureaus consisted of attractive mahogany desks. Behind the desks sat the most beautiful girls in Syracuse. Behind the girls was a display of photos and gold frames with views of the play. On the desks were heralds and other information on the production. The girls answered all questions about the picture, where it was being shown, the time of the run, the members of the cast or anything pertaining to the film which interested ones might wish to know.

These bureaus were established in the Hotels Onondaga and Yates, the City Bank Trust Company and the Syracuse Trust Company buildings and other equally prominent spots. The stunt created a lot of comment.

Checking Babies at the Theatre Nursery

AN unusual feature attached to the service offered the public by the management of the Missouri theatre, St. Louis' largest motion picture theatre, recently erected at a cost of $1,500,000, is in the form of a nursery service for babies and small tots who accompany their parents to the show.

The nursery rooms, which are situated in the fore part of the theatre on the mezzanine promenade, are provided with every possible need of a small child. There are several cribs into which the sleeping waifs are deposited while the grown folks view the pictures. For those who are as wide-awake as the audience there are toys of every description—tables, chairs, teddy-bears, tea-sets, rocking horses, and slides. The cost of checking a child is nothing to the mother or father (and it is reported that many a paternal parent has left a baby there). Mrs. Mary Kennedt, a trained nurse who is in charge of a staff of two more attendants, told a NEWS representative that many mothers leave their children at the nursery early in the afternoon when the first matinee showing is on, leave the theatre and do their shopping down-town, and then return in the evening to claim their progeny. Thus for two admission prices, totalling $1, a mother can leave her child in expert care for the afternoon. This practice is becoming popular, as was demonstrated one day last week when 32 children remained in the nursery for a minimum of four hours.

This is the first such service offered St. Louisians either in motion picture or in the speaking-stage theatre.

The success of the scheme has been so great that other theatres are planning to install nursery rooms.

Denver Theatre Uses Plan for "Flying Pat"

That good exploitation is impervious to material obstacles was demonstrated recently when Fred V. Green, Jr., exploitation representative for the Denver territory of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, travelled to Sterling, Colo., to put over "An Old Fashioned Boy" for the America theatre. Business had been stagnant, mines were working at limited time or not at all, and the biggest bank in town had just failed. One of the first things that Green did was to interview the local police chief and persuade him to lend the authority of his office to a change in the traffic semaphores. They still read: "Turn Right," but underneath this sign, wherever it pointed to the America theatre, was added: "To the America theatre to see 'An Old Fashioned Boy.'"

Before the theatre was a sign which read:

"Parking allowed here if you are going to the America to see 'An Old Fashioned Boy'".

These little stunts created intense interest, materializing as they did, in a community which hardly knew the meaning of exploitation. The local weekly helped out with news space and the attractive white lobby of the America theatre, dressed up with gilt frames, sheets of lithographs and stills from the production drew a good attendance from the start.

There was another stunt put over that drew the crowds. The best drug store in Sterling gave its window for the following scene:

A large flat stone was placed in the window to serve as a grave stone. It was lettered:

Beneath this hunk of darned old stone
Lies a guy whose death was one long moan;
He croaked when he heard he'd missed the joy
Of seeing Charles Ray as "An Old Fashioned Boy."

The exploitation window included a sign:

This Outfit Donated to the "Dead One"
Who Doesn't Go to the America
Theater Wednesday or Thursday.

Sterlingites really jumped over each other's backs to see what the window showed. Business may have been at a despondent stage, but "An Old Fashioned Boy" drew enough interest from its exploitation to pay the manager of the American theater a handsome profit.

Small Town Man Who Runs a Big City Show

W. E. Shafer of West Point, Ga., has a theatre, the Vaudette, seating 250 in a town of 2500 people, but that does not deter him from exploiting his attractions like a big town manager.

Lobby displays, window tie-ups and all the modern methods of coaxing patrons to the theatre are used by Mr. Shafer. For his recent showing of "What Women Love" Mr. Shafer decided to ask his local merchants for window space.

His first tie-up was with a furniture store, where the manager was perfectly willing to permit Mr. Shaefer to decorate the window in any way he chose. Mr. Shaefer and his wife went down to the store on Saturday and selected a varied assortment of things to be put in the window. One was a beautiful white enamel kitchen cabinet; another was a handsome floor lamp, a mahogany writing desk; a baby carriage in which reposed a life-size baby doll, beautifully dressed, a talking machine, and many other little things that appeal to the feminine fancy. On each of these was a tiny card, handlettered, reading "What Women Love."

Mrs. Shaefer cut out a lot of little cards, cutting them from old stills and bits of thin cardboard. These were cut in the shape of hearts, or fruits, or flowers, or anything else that occurred to the lady's mind. These, colored, were pasted on the window, in all sorts of positions. Back of each card, and leading back to the back of the window, were narrow tissue paper streamers of vari-colored papers. These tissue-paper streamers all leading back to one big stock-one-sheet mounted, with the title, "What Women Love" and the name of the theatre, with the play-date.

Showing the way an enterprising exhibitor fixed up his lobby for the engagement of the Thomas H. Ince special, "Homespun Folks." The decorations are novel and attractive

"Blind Man" Stunt Goes Big

E. H. Helmt's Uses Novelty Ballyhoo for "Idols of Clay" Run at Des Moines

ANOTHER innovation in newspaper advertising for exhibitors in large cities has been introduced by J. Reeves Espy, director of publicity of the Famous Players Missouri Corporation, under the direction of Manager William Goldman.

Not only is the face of the advertisement unusual and exceedingly attractive, but an offer is made to the public which not only demands immediate reading of the description of the week's programs but compels the reader to retain the page of the newspaper upon which the ad appears.

First of all, Espy has eliminated all "fancy work" from his advertisements of the fourteen St. Louis show houses. No plate matter, elaborate borders, or freak type faces are used. Type faces larger than 24-point have been cast aside as undesirable. Thus by using only six columns of an eight-page paper, the Famous Players are enabled to efficiently display the weekly programs for their fourteen theatres.

As an additional feature Espy runs across the bottom of the entire page the following insertion: "In an effort to direct attention of the people of St. Louis to motion picture advertising and to offer encouragement to those who read the advertisements, any of the above theatres will allow five cents in part payment for an admission ticket from January 10 to 15, inclusive. If you clip this entire advertisement and use it as a directory all this week, you can reduce the price of your movies next week by five cents. This is not a money-making scheme, but a sincere effort to furnish the public with a complete list of attractions for the entire week and to get the public to read and preserve this advertisement."

Such displays are inserted in the four daily St. Louis papers at various times during each week. More than $400,000 will be spent this year by the Missouri Corporation for newspaper advertising.

House Employees Used in Specialty Number

The management of the Regent theatre of Toronto, Canada, has recently put into effect one of Sid Grauman's exploitation stunts by using his house staff in a specialty number.

Manager Clarence Robson and director of music and production, John Arthur, thought that the Regent boy ushers would make a hit in a song number, so an act was framed that took in most everybody connected with the theatre.
